I do not understand that that is retaliation. There is no element of punishment in it. There is no element of vengeance in it. There is no element of harm in it to Canada or to anybody else. It is a rule which must, from the nature of the case, exist everywhere where the exchanges of civilization and commerce prevail; and as there is no superior authority to these two anywhere, we are willing under the circumstances to say to Great Britain, "We will leave this matter of intercourse with you." It is that which Secretary Manning declared among the last acts of his eminent and honored public service:

We do not propose retaliation; we simply respond.

And it is Secretary Manning's pregnant and emphatic declaration of which the Senator from Alabama speaks as a dodge or as an attempt to cheat somebody.

Mr. President, there is another proposition which has been reiterated over and over again in this debate which I wish also to repudiate, and that is that it is the opinion of this side of the Chamber that the time has passed for negotiation. I do not suppose there is a Republican Senator who is not ready to negotiate or even to submit to arbitration our claims for damages for the breaches of the law of nations, of international law, which have taken place under the authority of Canadian officials as affecting our citizens.

The Secretary of State proposes, as I understand, to refuse to enter upon the immediate and pressing demand of these people, some of them poor, others men in very moderate circumstances, because of the very extraordinary reason that a bigger claim had been made against us for some seizures in Behring's Sea. That is a pretty easy way of getting rid of a national responsibility, if that is going to be a precedent in the future, to just trump up a bigger claim on the other side. This claim of Great Britain or Canada for what has taken place in Behring's Strait is either a well-founded claim for damages or it is not. If it be not, the sooner we enter upon it, deal with it, and dispose of it the better. If it be not, it ought not to be heard of in the mouth of an American diplomatist as a reason for not insisting upon the just rights and demands of his own country.

If it be well founded, then the honor of the United States is concerned that it be settled, paid, and ended. I am not one of those persons, if any there be, who desire to have my country rest under the just charge of having postponed or delayed justice to anybody. The answer which the honorable Secretary of State suggests for not having dealt with these rights to the validity of which he is committed by a hundred repetitions of the declaration of his opinion is a reason to my mind the very strongest for entering upon their consideration at once.

I am perfectly willing to enter upon negotiation. I am perfectly willing to submit to an honest arbitration whenever we can find the two countries in a temper which makes me believe that the arbitration will be entered upon, not as that which followed the treaty of 1871 was entered upon, when Great Britain forced Mr. Delfosse on us after she had herself declared he was not a suitable person even to be proposed by reason of the relation of Belgium to one of the arbitrating parties; I say I am perfectly willing to submit anything when I am satisfied that Great Britain will approach the matter in a temper of a sincere desire to do and to be done justice.

What we object to is to taking out and taking down from the walls, taking out of the pigeon-holes, from the dust-covered and ancient archives of these two governments the question of the meaning of the word "bays" in the treaty of 1818, which Great Britain and Canada have both confessed over and over again was perfectly settled, that that was not a matter for negotiation, to the undertaking to lay aside and pass by every living claim that his fellow-citizens had for outrage and wrong and suffering, to let all these pass by and go into an arbitration connected with some matter of ancient history old as the Pequod war, old as the deluge, old almost as the time which Sir Thomas Browne speaks of which I think of when I hear the speeches of the honorable Senator from Alabama—when Adam used to deliver long lectures to Methuselah and Methuselah used to deliver long lectures to Noah—that is, that time for negotiation and arbitration has gone by.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOAR. For what purpose?

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the Senator to say he was in favor of a resort to arbitration. I ask him now if he is content to have the proposition of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] adopted, providing for submitting the whole matter to arbitration?

Mr. HOAR. I have not examined that resolution sufficiently to wish to be diverted from what I was saying on another point to the discussion of that resolution at the present time. It would take me too long. I do not propose, however, to enter upon any question of international arbitration until I am satisfied that it will be entered into by the other side with the same spirit in which the United States of America enter upon it. I do not propose to put this country again to the risk of having the Halifax award and the judgment of Mr. Delfosse repeated.

Mr. PAYNE. If the Senator will allow me there——

Mr. HOAR. I think I would rather not. I am trying in ten or fifteen minutes to sum up some general points. I am not going into the general debate. While I am perfectly willing to explain anything I have said, I do not care about being cross-examined upon things in general which I am not talking about.

Mr. PAYNE. I only wanted to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, another thing has been said here. It was said, I think, by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]; it was certainly said by the President of the United States in his message; it was said two or three times at least by the Secretary of State—once in his letter to the people of Boston and once certainly in the interview, never by him disavowed, reported in the Baltimore Sun—and that is that the grievances under which our fishermen have suffered can not occur again if the proposed treaty shall come into force. I have studied that thing carefully, and I am not able to find a single one of the grievances which the Secretary of State and Mr. Phelps, our minister to England, have set forth the repetition of which is provided against in this treaty, with the exception of a very limited number, in regard to which, although they may not reappear in the same form, the treaty does not expose us to grievances of the same general character much more than we are exposed under the present condition of things.

Mr. President, I have had drawn off by a friend an analysis of these causes of complaint, seizures which were made by Canada in the years 1886 and 1887. But before going into that let me point out that there is no provision whatever for any removal of the causes of complaint growing out of the unjust provisions of the Canadian fishery laws. In the first place, here is the broad general question of the right of Canada to try our vessels at all. We have, if we are right, under the partition of 1783 and under the reaffirmation of our right in 1818 certain fisheries with rights annexed, which were awarded to us in the great partition of empire which took place upon this continent.

Now, I deny the right of any Canadian court or any Canadian ship of war or any Canadian official whatever to exercise an authority over an American ship when she is in the clear exercise of her right, or claims to be. There must be some international arrangement such as is contained in the other treaties which the Senator from Alabama read the other day, which it may have been a want of foresight in our diplomacy in the past not to have provided for here; but I say when an American ship leaves the port of Boston or of Gloucester or of Portland or of Provincetown and is within or without the distance of 3 miles from the Canadian shore, being in a place where her fishing rights are reserved, no Canadian cruiser has any more right to seize her and take her into port for trial under the claim or pretense that she is preparing or proposing to fish, or that she is actually going beyond her rights, or is, still less, proposing and intending to do something that she has not done, than she has to make a seizure of that kind in the port of Boston or in the middle of the Mediterranean Sea. That grievance is not only not removed, but it is expressly submitted to by the terms of the proposed treaty.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator from Massachusetts—and if he does I hope he will state it frankly—object to any interruption at all in the way of a question?

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to be led into an argument about this matter. If there is any mistake of fact which I make I shall be glad to be corrected; otherwise I prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. GRAY. I hesitate to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. HOAR. I will hear the question of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. It is this. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ever hope by any international arrangement to obtain for our fishermen what he complains has not been obtained for them by this treaty, to wit, the right when they are charged with trespassing on territorial waters of another country, that they should not be amenable to the municipal laws of that country, but should only be tried or brought to book by the authorities of their own country? Has he any precedent for such a hope?

Mr. HOAR. I not only believe and hope it, but if General Grant had been in the chair of the White House when this thing came up, or if the reverse had been the case and England had been the party said to be offended and we the party undertaking to enforce the law against her, the thing would have been yielded in a fortnight. I do not say they should be tried wholly by the courts of their own country, but I say that they should be tried by an authority in which both parties have an equal share. There was, if I recollect aright, a provision in our early diplomacy by which the authority was given jointly to the commanders of the vessels of war of the two nations on the same cruising ground, and, if I am not mistaken, England has conceded that same thing within three years to France and Holland and other European nations in regard to fisheries on the coasts of her own islands.

Mr. GRAY. As I remember, the case referred to was an amicable arrangement made between the officers of the American and British cruisers.

Mr. HOAR. No, made by authority of the nations.

Mr. GRAY. The officers of the British and American cruisers agreed to consult with each other over every case of alleged infraction. But if the Senator will pardon me, for I should like to hear him on that point, does he go so far as to claim that if a Canadian fisherman were found within the jaws of the Chesapeake Bay, within its waters, fishing for oysters or perch or shad, and the State of Maryland or the State of Virginia, claiming territorial jurisdiction over those waters, should, under their municipal law in that regard, seize such Canadian fishermen for an infraction——

Mr. HOAR. I am not talking about that.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator claim that the Canadian would have a right to complain that he was brought to book under the law of Virginia or of Maryland?

Mr. HOAR. I am not talking about that case. I am talking about our rights under the partition of empire of 1783. I am not talking of petty larcenies committed on our shore; I am not talking about violations of our clear and undisputed rights in Chesapeake Bay; but I am talking of this fishing right which this country owns in her own right as an original part of her empire just as much as she owns Cape Cod or Cape Ann.

Mr. GRAY. I will try not interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. HOAR. I say this: If we had granted to Great Britain by treaty or she had reserved to herself by the treaty of independence of 1783 the right to have all her people fish as equals of the people of the United States in the Chesapeake Bay or Massachusetts Bay or the Albemarle Sound, if that had been an original right, Great Britain never would have submitted in the world to have the question whether that right was or was not exceeded in any particular case or by any particular fishermen dealt with by the courts of one country alone.

Mr. GRAY. That right was given her by the treaty of 1871 on our coast down to the thirty-ninth parallel.

Mr. HOAR. Wherever she got it. I am speaking of the fisherman in his right, a right pertaining to our nationality and our sovereignty and our citizenship, and I say that it is a grievance not removed but submitted to and consented to by this treaty that a local Canadian justice of the peace is to seize her and bring her in. Why, Mr. President, that Canadian fishing law describes more than twenty different classes of officers who may do this. Any officer either in the Canadian service or the British service, any justice of the peace, any officer of the customs, any sheriff or his deputy, and certain other officers whom I do not now remember—they were printed in the extract I gave the other day—every one of those officers, under the Canadian law, if he finds an American vessel in a spot which, as the Senator from New York showed us the other day so clearly, so ably, is a part of the grand highway of the commerce of all the world, and concludes in his own mind that that vessel is preparing to fish, having committed no offense whatever, but only meaning according to his fancy to commit one, he can take her into the nearest Canadian court having jurisdiction of the matter and confiscate her, ship and cargo.

That is only the threshold of it. What do they do next? Suppose it is a clear case of trespass. The man is altogether mistaken and has not got any probable cause. That Canadian fishing law says that you can only recover damages against him if you bring your suit within three months. What civilized government ever before made a statute of limitation for great causes like that, where a man's ship, everything he has on earth, ship and cargo and apparatus are all to be condemned, all taken and sold at a forced sale. It is too expensive to keep it, his voyage is broken up, and he has only as his remedy a suit which must be brought within three months.

Does the Senator from Delaware think that is a grievance or not? I wonder what the Senator from Alabama or the Secretary of State thinks of it?

But go a little further.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator does not want an answer now, does he?

Mr. HOAR. Go a little further. You must bring your suit within three months or it is gone—within three months from the time the cause of action accrued, that is, the seizure; but you can not bring it for two months after a notice which is to be served on the party seizing, at his place of abode. So if he dwells in Great Britain, or in Ottawa, or in Vancouver Island, if he is the captain of one of those fishing vessels, you have got to send your order of notice to the place of his dwelling and to wait two months from that time. If you have served your order of notice the next morning, that leaves you but a month. The right of action is gone in three months, and it can not begin for two. That grievance is not, so far as I can find, alluded to or affected in this proposed treaty.

Well, then, you have got next another grievance; and that is, as I observed when I spoke before, the statute expressly says that one-quarter of the whole confiscated property may be distributed among the crew of the seizing vessel and oral evidence may be taken. So, if you have got one of our fishing vessels, although worth with her outfit and cargo from $30,000 to $50,000, and she is seized by a little Canadian revenue-cutter, one-fourth is distributed as prize. There is a sum of from ten to twenty thousand dollars, perhaps, to be distributed among that crew; they are all bribed to swear to the facts which make out a good cause of seizure, which make out that the man has crossed the 3-mile line, or make out the fact that he is preparing to fish while perhaps he is as quietly saying his prayers as the Senator from Delaware would be on a Sunday morning.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me——

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish this statement, and then I will give the Senator an opportunity.

That is the first thing. If the magistrate before whom the case was tried says that, in his judgment, there was probable cause for seizure—that is, for instance, that the American shipmaster had been misled as to the place in a fog, or he had been told some fact wrongfully by one of his subordinates or by a spy, or a thousand things which may make up probable cause, when a man is as innocent as the Senator from Delaware would be in the case I have supposed, he is remediless. That is to say, if that certificate is given, the man whose vessel has been seized can have but 1 cent damages and 20 cents costs.

We are talking about a thing which is the absolute ruin, the absolute destruction of the rights of one of these hardy and admirable and industrious and enterprising American citizens. Whatever the Senator from Alabama or some other Senators may have said, I have heard no word of disparagement or contempt of this class of men from the lips of my friend from Delaware, and I do not expect to, for he lives in a State which furnishes such men itself, and he knows what the character of the fisherman is.

I say that if the local official, the judge of the local court, on the evidence of men bribed with a quarter of the entire vessel and cargo seized, simply certifies that there is probable cause for the seizure, the claim for damages is to be measured at 1 cent and the costs to be 20 cents.

Now I will hear the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator because I can not say all I wish to say without trespassing upon his time; but I want to know whether he ever heard of a system of moieties in the United States in regard to seizures of vessels which were charged with violations of our customs laws.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think that is a fair argument or a fair question. I do not mean that the Senator is intentionally unfair, but I mean that his question is not fair in the sense of being apposite or appropriate to anything I am saying.

Mr. GRAY. I will not interrupt the Senator any further, but will reserve what I have to say until he concludes.

Mr. HOAR. Those cases at last have been abolished by the good sense of the American people largely. I remember when we wiped out the moiety system. I remember what an outrage it was. I do not think it is quite a good answer, if what I have said is true, and I challenge any Senator on that side of the Chamber to point out one particle or scintilla of exaggeration in it. There it is. I took the Canadian statute from the authorized edition of the Canadian laws, which I can show now to the Senator very easily; and I say again that, whether there is anything (which I utterly deny) which approaches in our customs laws anything of this kind, that undertakes to stop American fishermen in their own national right, lawfully pursuing their lawful avocation on the high seas, which are the common highway, the blessing of all mankind, is a grievance and an outrage; and I ask the Senator from Delaware, when he comes to reply to me, if he will be good enough to let the Senate know, not whether he can find grievances or errors or outrages in the legislation of Massachusetts or in the legislation of the United States, but whether that particular thing as applied to an American fisherman is an outrage or not.

Mr. Davies, of Prince Edward Island, one of the ablest lawyers and statesmen of the Canadian Dominion, formerly attorney-general of Nova Scotia and now one of the leading men in the Canadian Parliament, a man of such eminence that he was counsel for Canada, at the time of the Halifax award, before that commission, says that it is an outrage, and he says that it was put on the Canadian statute-book for the express purpose of worrying, vexing, and harassing the American fishermen. Now do you say it is an outrage or not? And if it be, will you be good enough when you reply to me to point out the clause in this treaty which provides against its recurrence?

Then there is this other matter which was spoken of the other day, the burden of proof. All these things which I have stated are not enough, this limited right of action, this necessity for giving notice at the man's dwelling, if it be at Natal or Madagascar or anywhere else—Madagascar is not a British possession, I believe, just now—but at Calcutta or anywhere else, this deprivation of either damages or costs, this bribing of witnesses with a share of the articles seized, but in addition to all these, in the seizure made the burden of proof is put upon the owner of the vessel to show that the seizure was illegal.

The Senator from Delaware undertook to palliate it by pointing to the fact that in our statutes there was a provision that the burden of proof should be on the party claiming the property to establish his ownership. That is a very different provision. That is only where probable cause is first shown, by the express language of our statutes; that was only intended to reach and extend to the case where the owner was to produce merely a license or prove his ownership.

What I want to know is this: not whether you can not torture some United States statute into some construction which might work a wrong to somebody, and which we who sit here every year for the redress of grievances ought to prevent, but I want to know whether that thing put for the first time on the statute-book of Canada within ten years for the express purpose of compelling us to alter our domestic fiscal arrangements is or is not in the opinion of Senators on the other side of the Chamber a grievance, and if it be I want to know whether they adhere to their proposition that this treaty provides against the recurrence of every grievance that has hitherto existed?

But, now, Mr. President, let us take up the grievances. I have here, as I commenced to say a little while ago, an analysis of the causes of the seizure and the conduct in regard to the seizure of the officials of Canada in the years 1886 and 1887 alone. Here are eleven cases of vessels seeking shelter in Canadian ports who were ordered to leave before the storm abated. I read a letter from Mr. Gifford, my personal friend (and my colleague as well as myself knows him to be one of the most excellent citizens of Provincetown), formerly collector of that port and a member of our Legislature, Hon. James Gifford, who gave me a description of the way some of his neighbors had been ordered out into the storm.

Mr. GRAY. What is the name of that vessel?

Mr. HOAR. You will find it printed in the text of what I said the other day.

Here are eleven cases of vessels seeking shelter in Canadian ports who were ordered to sea before the storm had abated. The rights of American fishermen under the proposed treaty in regard to shelter in Canadian ports are no greater than the rights now secured to them by the treaty of 1818. All of these cases referred to above might have happened under the proposed treaty.

HARBOR OUTRAGES.

Sarah B. Putnam.—Beverly, Mass.; Charles Randolph, master. Driven from harbor of Pubnico in storm March 22, 1886.

Mollie Adams.—Gloucester, Mass.; Solomon Jacobs, master. Warned off into storm from Straits of Canso, Nova Scotia, August 31, 1886.

Rattler.—Gloucester, Mass.; A. F. Cunningham, master. Warned off at Canso, Nova Scotia, June, 1886. Detained in port of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, where vessel entered seeking shelter August 3, 1886. Kept under guard all night and released on the 4th.

Walter L. Rich (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Obadiah Rich, master. Ordered out of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, in unsuitable weather for fishing, having been in harbor only twelve hours; forced to enter at custom-house at Port Hawkesbury, Cape Breton, on Sunday, collector fearing that vessel would leave before Monday and he would thereby lose his fee. (From statements of Obadiah Rich, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Newell B. Hawes (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Thomas C. Kennedy, master. Made harbor at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in face of storm at 5 p. m., and master immediately started for custom-house, 5 miles distant, meeting captain of cutter Terror on way, to whom he explained errand. On returning found two armed men from cutter on his vessel. At 7 o'clock next morning was ordered to sea, but refused to go in the heavy fog. At 9 o'clock the fog lifted slightly, and, though the barometer was very low and a storm imminent, vessel was forced to leave. Soon met the heavy gale, which split sails, causing considerable damage. Captain of Terror denied claim to right of remaining in harbor twenty-four hours. (From statements of T. C. Kennedy, part owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Helen F. Tredick (schooner).—Cape Porpoise, Maine; R. J. Noonan, master. July 20, 1885, entered Port Latour, Nova Scotia, for shelter and water. Was ordered immediately to sea. (From statements of R. J. Noonan, owner and master, Cape Porpoise, Maine.)

Alice P. Higgins (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Alvin W. Cobb, master. Driven from harbors twice in stress of weather. (From statements of Alvin W. Cobb, master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Asa H. Pervere (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; A. B. Gore, master. Entered harbor for shelter; ordered out after twenty-four hours. (From statements of S. W. Kemp, agent, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Pleiades (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; F. W. Snow, master. Driven from harbor within twenty-four hours after entering. Warned off. (From statements of S. W. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Eliza A. Thomas (schooner).—Portland, Me.; E. S. Bibbs, master. Wrecked on Nova Scotia shore, unable to obtain assistance. Crew not permitted to land or to save anything until permission was received from captain of cutter. Canadian officials placed guard over fish saved, and everything saved from wreck narrowly escaped confiscation. (From statements of C. D. Thomas, owner, Portland, Me.)

Stowell Sherman.--Driven out twice.

Under the treaty of 1818 we have the right of shelter in these harbors. Under the proposed treaty while vessels are in these harbors for the purpose of shelter no dues can be exacted, and entry and clearance are not required unless vessels remain in a harbor more than twenty-four hours. In the above cases rights under the new treaty as to time allowed to vessels to remain in a harbor for shelter are not in the least increased.

Mr. President, I think this is something of a grievance. These men know something of the signs of the weather. They are accustomed to the storm and the wind, the changes of the seasons, and all the celestial signs and the terrestrial signs in those regions, and they have no desire to stay in port. They want to be off to their fishing again unless the safety of their vessel require it. I wish when the Senator comes to answer me he will tell me where this grievance is prevented from occurring hereafter. They have made a little change in the matter of reporting.

VESSELS BOARDED.

There is another cause of complaint, and that is the constant and perpetual oversight and inspection and boarding and stopping of the vessel while the inspection is going on. There are two thousand and sixty-six cases reported in the years 1886 and 1887 where vessels were "boarded." This power "to board" is granted by a local statute, which is not in the least affected by the proposed treaty.

Here are the names of a few of them:

Shiloh.—Gloucester, Mass.; Charles Nevit, master. Boarded at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, August 9, and subjected to rude surveillance.

Julia Ellen.—Booth Bay, Me.; Burnes, master. Boarded at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, August 9, 1886, and subjected to rude surveillance.

Freddie W. Allton.—Provincetown, Mass.; Alton, master. Boarded at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, August 9, 1886, and subjected to rude surveillance.

Susie Cooper.—(Hooper?) Gloucester (?), Mass. Boarded and rudely treated by Canadian officials in Canso Bay, Nova Scotia, May 1886.

I do not deny that in a proper case, when we are in their ports or harbors, or within their jurisdictional waters, a vessel may be required to show her nationality. It may be done on the high seas by belligerents, if I do not mistake the law of nations. That is one thing. But the constant and perpetual and incessant and unnecessary use of such a national authority to be exercised by the officials of one nation over the vessels of another, is a grievance, a nuisance, and an outrage, and it is not at all the kind of treatment that these people meet or ever have met in any of our New England or other ports.

Here are 2,066 cases in two years of this haughty, arrogant, disgraceful exercise of this Canadian authority over our fishing vessels. It was not because they wanted to know their character; it was not because they wanted to keep them; it was because they wanted to make these laws as disagreeable and obnoxious to us as they knew how in order that they might have it to say to us and re-enforce the argument of the honorable Senator from Alabama. You give Canada your market and all these things will be added unto you.

Until they get the market this treaty provides no remedy; and how can the Secretary of State, how can the Senator from Delaware, how can the Senator from Alabama assert in the face of the American people that these grievances which the Department stated in its diplomatic discussion have been removed or remedied or mitigated by this proposition?

Mr. Phelps brought to the attention of the British Government the outrageous character of this constantly boarding of our vessels. I have here an extract from Mr. Phelps's dispatch to Lord Salisbury—I have not the date of it, but you will find it in Executive Document 113, page 37.

The right to board vessels within 3 miles of the shore, to search them, put the master on oath, etc., provided for by the laws of Canada, revised statutes, 1886, is not in any manner modified by the proposed treaty, and these outrages as above might therefore continue under the treaty.

This is what Mr. Phelps says about it:

By the provisions of this act any foreign ship, vessel, or boat (whether engaged in fishing or not) found within any harbor in Canada, or within 3 marine miles of "any of the coasts, bays, or creeks of Canada," may be brought into port by any of the officers or persons mentioned in the act, her cargo searched, and her master examined upon oath touching the cargo and voyage under a heavy penalty if the questions asked are not truly answered; and if such ship has entered such waters "for any purpose not permitted by treaty or convention or by law of the United Kingdom or of Canada, for the time being in force, such ship, vessel, or boat and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo thereof shall be forfeited."

Mr. Phelps very justly observes:

It is quite unnecessary to point out what grave embarrassments may arise in the relations between the United States and Great Britain under such administration as is reasonably to be expected of the extraordinary provisions of this act and its amendment, upon which it is not important at this time further to comment.

It will be for Her Majesty's Government to determine how far its sanction and support will be given to further proceedings, such as the United States Government have now repeatedly complained of and have just ground to apprehend may be continued by the Canadian authorities.

I wish these Senators or some of them—I am not now speaking of the Senator from Delaware—who seem to think an answer to all our complaint of these things is to get up and revile New England, revile the State of Massachusetts, revile the fishermen, revile the persons who are engaged in this business—I should like to have some Senator turn aside a little from that style of argument and tell me whether Mr. Phelps, the able, learned, patriotic, and moderate representative of this country at the court of St. James was right or wrong when he declared that Canadian statute and that Canadian practice to be an outrage which was likely to lead to serious embarrassment between the two governments; and if he was right, then I should like to hear as to the place in this proposed treaty where it is provided that that condition of things shall stop.

There is another. Here are fourteen cases in this list of vessels "warned off." Under the treaty of 1818 we renounced the right of fishing within certain limits. These vessels, I suppose, were all "warned off" on a mere suspicion that their masters were about to violate the treaty agreement. There is nothing in this treaty that would prevent similar warnings off hereafter in case of like suspicion. It only enlarges the territory from which the warning off is to be made. Indeed the opportunities for suspicion and consequently for warnings off are increased by the proposed treaty in that "preparing to fish" is by Article XIV for the first time made a breach of treaty obligation. In other words, you have not removed that serious grievance, but you have enlarged the territory to which it applies, and you have added to the ground of suspicion or complaint on which it can be based, which before rested on the act and not the intent, the offense of preparing to fish.

Here is a list of vessels warned off:

Seth Stockbridge.—Gloucester, Mass.; Antone Olson, master. Warned off from St. Andrews, New Brunswick, about April 30, 1886.

Annie M. Jordan.—Gloucester, Mass.; Alexander Haine, master. Warned off at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, about May 4, 1886.

Jennie and Julia.—Eastport, Me.; W. H. Travis, master. Warned off at Digby, Nova Scotia, by customs officers, May 18, 1886.

Lucy Ann.—Gloucester, Mass.; Joseph H. Smith, master. Warned off at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, May 29, 1886.

Pioneer.—Gloucester, Mass.; F. F. Cruched, master. Warned off at Canso, Nova Scotia, September 9, 1886.

Martha W. Bradley.—Gloucester, Mass.; J. F. Ventier, master. Warned off at Canso, Nova Scotia, between June 1 and 8, 1886.

Eliza Boynton.—Gloucester, Mass.; George E. Martin, master. Warned off at Canso, Nova Scotia, between June 1 and 9, 1886. Then afterwards detained in manner not reported, and released October 25, 1886.

Mascot.—Gloucester, Mass.; Alexander McEachern, master. Warned off at Port Amherst, Magdalen Islands, June 10, 1886.

Thomas F. Bayard.—Gloucester, Mass.; James McDonald, master. Warned off at Bonne Bay, Newfoundland, June 12, 1886.

Just think of it. Do you think any Canadian fisherman really supposed that Thomas F. Bayard was going to do any harm whatever to Canada that a vessel bearing his name should be warned off?

Golden Hind.—Gloucester, Mass.; Reuben Cameron, master. Warned off at Bay of Chaleurs, Nova Scotia, on or about July 23, 1886.

Boat (name unknown).—Stephen R. Balcom, master; Eastport, Me. Warned off at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, July 9, 1886, with others.

Druid (foreign built).—Gloucester, Mass. Seized, warned off, or molested otherwise at some time prior to September 6, 1886.

Caroline Vought.—Booth Bay, Me.; Charles S. Reed, master. Warned off at Raspebiac, New Brunswick, and refused water, August 4, 1886.

If these vessels were not fishermen, every one was a clear outrage. If they were fishermen and were not fishing, every one was a clear outrage.

Here is a list of complaints for refusal to sell supplies, refusal to sell wood and water. There are three cases, the Novelty, the Christina Ellsworth, and the Caroline Vought.

The right to buy wood and water was secured by the treaty of 1818. If this obligation is not observed by the Canadians what reason is there to suppose that it would be observed if imposed by a second treaty?

Here are forty-six cases of refusal to sell provisions and supplies.

By the proposed treaty our fishermen can "replenish outfits, provisions, and supplies damaged or lost by disaster." It does not appear from the facts given in regard to these outrages that the meager provision of the proposed treaty would have obviated a single case of complaint.

It is true that it is claimed by some Senators here that the provisions of Article XI secure the right to buy provisions and supplies in all cases, but it is enough to say that that also becomes a source of difference if the claims these Senators make should be set up afterwards by our Government, for it is very clear that the Canadian negotiators did not so understand it. Here is an extract from the speech in the Canadian senate of Mr. Howlan. They have not assented to anything except what is a mere act of humanity.

But we are told again with regard to this question of fishing vessels being allowed to go in and out of our harbors that we allow them to do what? To trade? If a vessel flying the American flag comes in with cargoes of cotton or sugar she can buy whatever she wants. Now, they are allowed to come in and purchase not what a fishing vessel can buy—not what a fishing vessel can buy, but necessary supplies to take her on her home voyage. Every vessel is allowed to come into the harbors of Canada without reporting to the customs officials if she does not stay longer than twenty-four hours. At one time such was not the case, when we had light dues, harbor dues, and other tolls to collect; but it is not so now. If an American fishing vessel comes in to buy supplies, she merely buys the necessaries she requires and goes away, and there is nothing more about it. Is it to be imagined that the masters of those vessels, who own them, and who have the earnings of a lifetime perhaps in one-fourth of the venture, will run the risk of losing his vessel for the purpose of doing what? Of trying to evade the law, knowing full well that behind them their own Government will not protect them in breaking the law—knowing full well that if they break the law their ship will be seized and confiscated.

Suppose they knew full well that their own Government would protect them if they did not break the law! Here is what Sir Charles Tupper says:

There was another concession. There is no doubt at all, sir, that there were rights which under the strict terms of the treaty of 1818 they could not demand, nor could they insist upon them being granted, but at the same time I think I am within the judgment of the House on both sides when I say that in the case of a vessel which is homeward bound and requires provisions or necessary supplies to take her home, if, for instance, she has some of her rigging carried away or some of her salt washed overboard, and is obliged to lose her voyage and going back to a distant port to refit, a provision that she may obtain casual and needful supplies of that kind was demanded in the interests of good neighborhood.

In thirty of the forty-six cases in this list the refusal to sell supplies resulted in broken voyages, and therefore the supplies could not have been desired for the homeward voyage.

REFUSAL TO SELL PROVISIONS AND FUEL.

And here is a long list of some forty cases of refusal to sell provisions and fuel. In all these cases the treaty would have relieved only those who wished to purchase provisions for the return trip.

Novelty.—Portland, Me.; H. A. Joyce, master. Warned off at Pictou, Nova Scotia, June 29, 1886, where vessel had entered for coal and water; also refused entrance at Amherst, Nova Scotia, July 24.

James G. Craig.—Portland, Me.; Webber, master. Crew refused privilege of landing for necessaries at Brooklyn, Nova Scotia, June 15 or 16, 1886.

Laura Sayward.—Gloucester, Mass.; Medeo Rose, master. Refused privilege of landing to buy provisions at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, October 5, 1886.

Jennie Seaverns.—Gloucester, Mass.; Joseph Tupper, master. Refused privilege of landing, and vessel placed under guard at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, October 20, 1886.

Caroline Vought.—Refused water August 4, 1886.

Gertrude Summers (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; N. S. Snow, master. Refused privilege of purchasing provisions, which resulted in injury to voyage. Found harbor regulations uncertain; sometimes could remain in port twenty-four hours; again, was ordered out in three hours. (From statement of N. S. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Charles R. Washington (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Jesse S. Snow, master. Master informed by collector at Ship Harbor, Cape Breton, that if he bought provisions, even if actually necessary, he would be subject to a fine of $400 for each offense. Refused permission by the collector at Souris, Prince Edward Island, to buy provisions, and was compelled to return home 10th September, before close of fishing season. Was obliged to report at custom-house every time he entered the harbor, even if only for shelter. Found no regularity in the amount of fees demanded, this being apparently at the option of the collector. (From statements of Jesse S. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Charles Haskell (schooner).—North Haven, Me.; Daniel Thurston, master. Obliged to leave Gulf of St. Lawrence at considerable loss, not being allowed to buy provisions. (From statements of C. S. Staples, owner, North Haven, Me.)

Cynosure (schooner).—Booth Bay, Me.; L. Rush, master. Was obliged to return home before securing a full cargo, not being permitted to purchase provisions in Nova Scotia. (From statements of S. Nickerson & Sons, owners, Booth Bath, Me.)

Nellie M. Snow (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; A. E. Snow, master. Was not allowed to purchase provisions in any Canadian ports or to refit or land and ship fish, consequently obliged to leave for home with broken trip; not permitted to remain in ports longer than local Canadian officials saw fit. (From statements of J. C. Young, owner, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Willie Parkman (schooner).—North Haven, Me.; William H. Banks, master. Unable to get supplies while in Gulf of St. Lawrence, which necessitated returning home at great loss, with a broken voyage. (From statements of William H. Banks, owner and master, North Haven, Me).

John W. Bray (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; George McLean, master. On account of extreme prohibitory measures of the Canadian government in refusing shelter and supplies, and other conveniences, was obliged to abandon her voyage and come home without fish. (From statements of John F. Wonson & Co., owners, Gloucester, Mass.)

Eddie Davidson (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; John D. Snow, master. On the 12th of June, 1886, touched at Cape Island, Nova Scotia, but was not permitted to take on part of crew. Boarded by customs officer, and ordered to sail within twenty-four hours. Not allowed to buy food in ports of Gulf St. Lawrence. (From statements of John D. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Lottie E. Hopkins (schooner).—Vinal Haven, Me.; Emery J. Hopkins, master. Refused permission to buy any article of food in Canadian ports. (From statement of Emery J. Hopkins, owner and master, North Haven, Me.)

Henry W. Longfellow (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; W. W. King, master. Obliged to leave Gulf of St. Lawrence with only 62 barrels of mackerel on account of restrictions imposed by Canadian Government in preventing captain from procuring necessary supplies to continue fishing. (From statements of John F. Wonson & Co., owners, Gloucester, Mass.)

Rushlight (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; James L. Kenney, master. Compelled to leave Gulf of St. Lawrence with only 90 barrels of mackerel, because of restrictions imposed by Canadian Government in prohibiting captain from purchasing supplies needed to continue fishing. (From statements of John F. Wonson & Co., owners, Gloucester, Mass.)

Belle Franklin (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; Henry D. Kendrick, master. Obliged to leave Gulf of St. Lawrence with 156 barrels of mackerel, on account of restrictions imposed by Canadian Government in denying the captain the right to procure necessary supplies to continue fishing. (From statements of John F. Wonson & Co., owners, Gloucester, Mass.)

Neponset (schooner).—Boston, Mass.; E. S. Frye, master. On 27th August, 1886, anchored in Port Hawkesbury, Cape Breton, and immediately reported at custom-house; being short of provisions, master asked collector for permits to buy, but was twice refused. The master expressing his intention of seeing the United States consul at Port Hastings, Cape Breton, 3 miles distant, the customs officer forbade him landing at that port to see the consul; he did so, however, saw the consul, but could get no aid, the consul stating that if provisions were furnished, the vessel would be seized. Master being sick, and wishing to return home by rail, at the suggestion of the consul he landed secretly and traveled through the woods to the station, 3 miles distant. (From statements of E. S. Frye, owner and master, Boston, Mass.)

We have some rights as to wood, as we should have under treaty.

Christina Ellsworth (schooner).—Eastport, Me.; James Ellsworth, master. Entered Port Hastings, Cape Breton, for wood; anchored 10 o'clock and reported at custom-house. At 2 o'clock was boarded by captain of cutter Hector and ordered to sea, being forced to leave without wood. In every harbor entered was refused privilege of buying anything. Anchored under the lee of the land in no harbor, but was compelled to enter at custom-house. In no two harbors were the fees alike. (From statements of James Ellsworth, owner and master, Eastport, Me.)

John M. Ball (schooner).—Provincetown, Mass.; N. W. Freeman, master. Driven out of Gulf of St. Lawrence to avoid fine of $400 for landing two men in the port of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island. Was denied all supplies except wood and water in same port. (From statements of N. W. Freeman, owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

Stowell Sherman (schooner).—Provincetown, Mass.; S. F. Hatch, master. Not allowed to purchase necessary supplies and obliged to report at custom-houses situated at distant and inconvenient places. Returned home with broken trip. (From statements of Samuel T. Hatch, owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

John Nye (schooner), Swan's Island, Me.; W. L. Joyce, master. After paying entry fees and harbor dues was not allowed to buy provisions at Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, and had to return home for same, making a broken trip. (From statements of W. L. Joyce, owner and master, Atlantic, Me.)

Electric Flash (schooner).—North Haven, Me.; Aaron Smith, master. Unable to obtain supplies in Canadian ports, and obliged to return home before obtaining full cargo. (From statements of Aaron Smith, master and agent, North Haven, Me.)

Daniel Simmons (schooner).—Swan's Island, Me.; John A. Gott, master. Compelled to go without necessary outfit while fishing in Gulf of St. Lawrence. (From statements of Mr. Stimpson, owner, Swan's Island, Me.)

Grover Cleveland (schooner).—Boston, Mass.; George Lakeman, master. Compelled to return home with only partial fare of mackerel, being refused supplies in Canadian ports. (From statements of B. F. DeButts, owner, Boston, Mass.)

Andrew Burnham (schooner).—Boston, Mass.; Nathan F. Blake, master. Not allowed to buy provisions or to land and ship fish to Boston, thereby losing valuable time for fishing. (From statements of B. F. DeButts, owner, Boston, Mass.)

Harry G. French (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; John Chisholm, master. Refused permission to purchase provisions or to land cargo for shipment to the United States. (From statements of John Chisholm, master and owner, Gloucester, Mass.)

Colonel J. H. French (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; William Harris, master. Was refused permission to purchase any supplies or to forward fish to the home port by steamer, causing much loss of time and money. (From statements of John Chisholm, owner, Gloucester, Mass.)

W. H. Wellington (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; D. S. Nicherson, master. Was refused permission to purchase any supplies or to forward fish to the home port by steamer, causing much loss of time and money. (From statements of John Chisholm, owner, Gloucester, Mass.)

Ralph Hodgdon (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; Thomas F. Hodgdon, master. Was refused permission to purchase any supplies or to forward fish to the home port by steamer, causing much loss of time and money. (From statements of John Chisholm, owner, Gloucester, Mass.)

Hattie Evelyn (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; James A. Cromwell, master. Not allowed to buy any provisions in any provincial ports, and thereby compelled to return home during the fishing season, causing broken voyage and great loss. (From statements of James A. Cromwell, owner and master, Gloucester, Mass.)

Emma W. Brown (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; John McFarland, master. Was forbidden buying provisions at any provincial ports, and thereby lost three weeks' time and was compelled to return home with only part of cargo. (From statements of John McFarland, master, Gloucester, Mass.)

Mary H. Thomas (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; Henry B. Thomas, master. Prohibited from buying provisions, and, in consequence, had to return home before close of fishing season. (From statements of Henry B. Thomas, owner and master, Gloucester, Mass.)

Hattie B. West (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; C. H. Jackman, master. Prevented from buying provisions to enable vessel to continue fishing; two of crew deserted in a Canadian port, and captain went ashore to report at custom-house and to secure return of men; was delayed by custom-officer not being at his post and ordered to sea by first officer of cutter Howlett before having an opportunity of reporting at custom-house or of finishing business; had to return and report on same day or be subject to a fine. Prevented from shipping men at same place. At Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, while on homeward passage, not allowed to take on board crew of seized American fishing schooner Morro Castle, who desired to return home. (From statements of C. H. Jackson, master, Gloucester, Mass.)

Margaret S. Smith (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Lincoln W. Jewett, master. Twice compelled to return home from Bay St. Lawrence with broken trip, not being able to secure provisions to continue fishing. Incurred many petty inconveniences in regard to customs regulations. (From statements of A. M. Smith, owner, Portland, Me.)

Elsie M. Smith (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Enoch Bulger, master. Came home with a half fare, not being able to get provisions to continue fishing. Lost seine in a heavy gale rather than be annoyed by customs regulations when seeking shelter. (From statements of A. M. Smith, Portland, Me.

Fannie A. Spurling (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Caleb Paris, master. Subject to many annoyances and obliged to return home with a half fare, not being able to procure provisions. (From statements of A. M. Smith, owner, Portland, Me.)

Abbie M. Deering (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Emery Gott, master. Not being able to procure provisions, obliged to return home with a third of a fare of mackerel. (From statements of A. M. Smith, owner, Portland, Me.)

Cora Louisa (schooner).—Booth Bay, Me.; Obed Harris, master. Could get no provisions in Canadian ports and had to return home before getting a full fare of fish. (From statements of S. Nickerson & Sons, Booth Bay, Me.)

Eben Dale (schooner).—North Haven, Me.; R. G. Babbidge, master. Not permitted to buy bait, ice, or to trade in any way. Driven out of harbors, and unreasonable restrictions whenever near the land. (From statements of R. G. Babbidge, owner and master, Pulpit Harbor, Me.

Charles F. Atwood (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Michael Burrows, master. Captain was not permitted to refit vessel or to buy supplies, and when out of food had to return home. Found Canadians disposed to harass him and put him to many inconveniences; not allowed to land seine on Canadian shore for purpose of repairing same. (From statements of Michael Burrows, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Nathan Cleaves (schooner).—Wellfleet. Mass.; P. E. Hickman, master. Ran short of provisions, and not being permitted to buy left for home with a broken voyage. Customs officers at Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, would allow purchase of provisions for homeward passage, but not to continue fishing. (From statements of Parker E. Hickman, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Frank G. Rich (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Charles A. Gorham, master. Not permitted to buy provisions or to lie in Canadian ports over twenty-four hours. (From statements of Charles A. Gorham, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Emma O. Curtis (schooner).—Provincetown, Mass.; Elisha Rich, master. Not allowed to purchase provisions, and therefore obliged to return home. (From statements of Elisha Rich, owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

Walter S. Rich.—Denied right to purchase provisions.

Newell B. Hawes.—Denied right to purchase provisions.

Asa H. Pervere.—Denied right to purchase provisions.

In all the above cases, the treaty would have relieved only those who wished to purchase provisions for the return trip.

As to the right to purchase wood and water, American fishermen gain by the treaty only in that they do not have to make entry when buying in out-of-the-way places.

John H. Kennedy (schooner).—Portland, Me.; David Dougherty. Called at a Nova Scotia port for bait but left without obtaining same, fearing seizure and fine, returning home with a broken voyage. At a Newfoundland port was charged $16 light-house dues, giving draft on owners for same, which, being excessive, they refused to pay. (From statement of E. G. Willard, owner, Portland, Me.)

James A. Garfield.—Gloucester, Mass. Threatened, about June 1, 1886, with seizure for having purchased bait in a Canadian harbor.

I have here, Mr. President, a long list of cases where other outrages and grievances not affected by this treaty at all are extracted. A very large number of them I have taken from the printed dispatches of Mr. Phelps complaining of grievances, and I shall submit them with my remarks.

SHIPMENT OF CREWS.

There are seventeen cases of complaint for denial of the privilege to ship crews.

By the proposed treaty shipment of crews is allowed only in case of death or sickness, unless the unrestricted right be purchased under Article XV by free fish. It does not appear that the provision of the treaty would have obviated a single case of complaint for this cause. Here are the cases:

Lady Elgin (schooner).—Southport, Me.; George W. Pierce, master. Compelled to pay transportation for crew from Nova Scotia to Maine, the vessel not being allowed to call at Nova Scotia ports for them on her way to the fishing grounds. (From statements of William T. Maddocks, owner, Southport, Me.)

Abdon Keene (schooner).—Bremen, Me.; William C. Keene, master. Was not allowed to ship or land crew at Nova Scotia ports, and owner had to pay for their transportation to Maine. (From statements of William C. Keene, owner and master, Bremen, Me.)

William Keene (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Daniel Kimball, master. Not allowed to ship a man, or to send a man ashore except for water at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, and ordered to sea as soon as water was obtained. (From statements of Henry Trefethen, owner, Peak's Island, Me.)

Carleton Bell (schooner).—Booth Bay, Me.; Seth W. Eldridge, master. Occasioned considerable expense by being denied right to procure crew in Canadian harbors, and detained in spring while waiting for men to come from Nova Scotia. (From statements of S. Nickerson & Sons, owners, Booth Bay, Me.)

Sir Knight (schooner).—Southport, Me.; Mark Rand, master. Compelled to pay transportation for crew from Nova Scotia to Maine, the vessel not being allowed to call at Nova Scotia ports for them on her way to the fishing grounds. (From statements of William T. Maddocks, owner, Southport, Me.)

Ripley Ropes (schooner).—Southport, Me.; C. E. Hare, master. Vessel ready to sail when telegram from authorities at Ottawa refused permission to touch at Canadian ports to ship men; consequently obliged to pay for their transportation to Maine, and vessel detained while awaiting their arrival. (From statements of Freeman Orne & Son, owners, Southport, Me.)

Jennie Armstrong (schooner).—Southport, Me.; A. O. Webber, master. Vessel ready to sail when telegram from authorities at Ottawa refused permission to touch at Canadian ports to ship men; consequently obliged to pay for their transportation to Maine, and vessel detained while awaiting their arrival. (From statements of Freeman Orne & Son, owners, Southport, Me.)

Vanguard (schooner).—Southport, Me.; C. C. Dyer, master. Vessel ready to sail when telegram from authorities refused permission to touch at Canadian ports to ship men; consequently obliged to pay for their transportation to Maine, and vessel detained while awaiting their arrival. (From statements of Freeman Orne & Son, owners, Southport, Me.)

Uncle Joe (schooner).—Southport, Me.; J. W. Pierce, master. Compelled to pay transportation for crew from Nova Scotia to Maine, the vessel not being allowed to call at Nova Scotia ports for them on her way to the fishing grounds. (From statements of William T. Maddocks, owner, Southport, Me.)

Willie G. (schooner).—Southport, Me.; Albert F. Orne, master. Compelled to pay transportation for crew from Nova Scotia to Maine, the vessel not being allowed to call at Nova Scotia ports for them on her way to the fishing grounds. (From statements of William T. Maddocks, owner, Southport, Me.)

D. D. Geyer (schooner).—Portland, Me.: John K. Craig, master. Being refused privilege of touching at a Nova Scotia port to take on resident crew already engaged, owner was obliged to provide passage for men to Portland at considerable cost, causing great loss of time. (From statements of J. H. Jordan, owner, Portland, Me.)

Good Templar (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Elias Tarlton, master. Touched at La Have, Nova Scotia, to take on crew already engaged, but was refused privilege and ordered to proceed. The men being indispensable to voyage, had them delivered on board outside of 3-mile limit by a Nova Scotia boat. (From statements of Henry Trefethen, owner, Peak's Island, Me.)

Florine F. Nickerson (schooner).—Chatham, Mass.; Nathaniel E. Eldridge, master. Engaged fishermen for vessel at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, but action of Canadian Government necessitated their transportation to the United States, and loss of time to vessel while awaiting their arrival; otherwise would have called for them on way to fishing gounds. Returning touched at Liverpool, but immediately on anchoring Canadian officials came aboard and refused permission for men to go ashore. Captain at once signified his intention of immediately proceeding on passage, but officer prevented his departure until he had reported at custom-house, vessel being thereby detained two days. (From statements of Kendrick & Bearse, owners, South Harwick, Mass.)

Bertha D. Nickerson (schooner).—Booth Bay, Me.; N. E. Nickerson, master. Occasioned considerable expense by being denied Canadian harbors to procure crew, and detained in spring while waiting for men to come from Nova Scotia. (From statements of Nickerson & Sons, owners, Booth Bay, Me.)

Hereward.—Gloucester, Mass.; McDonald, master. Detained two days at Canso, Nova Scotia, about July 3, 1886, for shipping seamen contrary to port laws.

Pleiades.—Not allowed to ship men.

Louisa A. Grant.

By the treaty right to transship and to ship crews is obtained only on condition of free fish, or as incident to needed repairs.

ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF CUSTOMS AND PORT LAWS.

Seventeen of these cases are for alleged violation of customs and port laws. The precise nature of these violations is not evident from the statement of facts.

The treaty provides that fishing vessels putting into harbor for shelter or for repairs need not report, enter, or clear. The Pearl Nelson was seized because her master allowed men to land before reporting. The treaty would not have helped that case. Possibly the majority of these cases would not happen under the proposed treaty.

Joseph Story.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained by customs officers at Baddeck, Nova Scotia, in April, 1886, for alleged violation of the customs laws. Released after twenty-four hours' detention.

Two small boats (unnamed).—Charles Smith, Pembroke, Me., master. Seized at East Quaddy, New Brunswick, September 1, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws.

City Point.—Portland, Me.; Keene, master. Detained at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, July 2, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws. Penalty of $400 demanded. Money deposited, under protest, July 12, and in addition $120 costs deposited July 14. Fine and costs refunded July 21, and vessel released August 26. Harbor dues exacted August 26, notwithstanding vessel had been refused all the privileges of entry.

Ella M. Doughty.—Portland, Me.; Warren A. Doughty, master. Seized at St. Ann's, Cape Breton, May 17, 1886, for alleged violation of the customs laws. Suit was instituted in vice-admiralty court at Halifax, Nova Scotia, but was subsequently abandoned, and vessel was released June 29, 1886.

C. P. Harrington.—Portland, Me.; Frellick, master. Detained at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, July 3, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws; fined $400 July 5; fine deposited under protest, July 12; $120 cost deposited July 14; refunded July 21, and vessel released.

Howard Holbrook.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained at Hawkesbury, Cape Breton, August 17, 1886, for alleged violations of the customs laws. Released August 20 on deposit of $400. Question of remission of fine still pending.

A. R. Crittenden.—Gloucester, Mass.; Bain, master. Detained at Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, August 27, 1886, for alleged violations of customs laws. Four hundred dollars penalty deposited August 28 without protest, and vessel released. Three hundred and seventy-five dollars remitted, and a nominal fine of $25 imposed.

G. W. Cushing.—Portland, Me.; Jewett, master. Detained July (by another report June) 3, 1886, at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, for alleged violation of the customs laws; fined $400; money deposited with collector at Halifax about July 12 or 14, and $120 for costs deposited 14th; costs refunded July 21, and vessel released.

Moro Castle.—Gloucester, Mass.; Edwin M. Joyce, master. Detained at Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, September 11, 1886, on charge of having smuggled goods into Chester, Nova Scotia, in 1884, and also of violating customs laws. A deposit of $1,000 demanded. Vessel discharged November 29, 1886, on payment, by agreement, of $1,000 to Canadian Government.

William D. Daisley.—Gloucester, Mass.; J. E. Gorman, master. Detained at Souris, Prince Edward Island, October 4, 1886, for alleged violation of customs law. Fined $400, and released on payment; $375 of the fine remitted.

Pearl Nelson.—Provincetown, Mass.: Kemp, master. Detained at Arichat, Cape Breton, September 8, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws. Released September 9, on deposit of $200. Deposit refunded October 26, 1886.

Everett Steel.—Gloucester, Mass.; Charles H. Forbes, master. Detained at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, September 10, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws. Released by order from Ottawa, September 11, 1886.

N. J. Miller.—Booth Bay, Me.; Dickson, master. Detained at Hopewell Cape, New Brunswick, for alleged violation of customs laws, on July 24, 1886. Fined $400.

Flying Scud.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained for alleged violation of customs laws at Halifax, November 1, or about that time. Released November 16, 1886.

Matthew Keany.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained at Souris, Prince Edward Island, one day for alleged violation of customs laws, about May 31, 1886.

Marion Grimes.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, October 9, for violation of port laws in failing to report at custom-house on entering. Fined $400. Money paid under protest and vessel released. Fine remitted December 4, 1886.

Wide-Awake.—Eastport, Me.; William Foley, master. Fined at L'Etang, New Brunswick, $75 for taking away fish without getting a clearance; again November 13, 1886, at St. George, New Brunswick, fined $20 for similar offense. In both cases he was proceeding to obtain clearances.

Report of a committee of the honorable the privy council for Canada, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council, on the 18th November, 1886.

The committee of the privy council are in receipt of a telegram from the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies, in the words:

"United States Government protest against proceedings of Canadian authorities in case of Pearl Nelson and Everett Steele, said to have put into Arichat and Shelburne, respectively, for purposes sanctioned by convention. Particulars by post. Send report soon as possible."

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the telegram was referred, submits a copy of a letter addressed by the commissioner of customs for Canada to the consul-general of the United States at Halifax, and also a copy of Mr. Phelan's reply thereto.

The minister submits that it is clear, from Captain Kempt's affidavit, that he was guilty of an infraction of the customs regulations in allowing men to land from his vessel before she had been reported, and the minister of customs having favorably considered Captain Kempt's representations as to his ignorance of the customs regulations requiring that vessels should be reported before landing either men or cargo therefrom, has remitted the fine of $200 which had been imposed in the case of the American schooner Pearl Nelson.

The minister further submits that it would appear from the collector of customs' report that his remark that "he would seize the vessel" had reference solely to her violation of the customs law, and that no evidence is given of any desire or intention of denying to the captain of the Pearl Nelson any treaty privileges he was entitled to enjoy.

The committee, concurring in the above, respectfully recommend that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute, if approved, to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies.

All of which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. McGEE,
Clerk Privy Council, Canada.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the telegram was referred, submits that the schooner Everett Steele appears from the report of the collector of customs at Shelburne to have been at that port on the 25th of March last, and sailed without reporting. On her return to Shelburne in September she was detained by the collector of customs for an infraction of the customs law.

The captain having assured the collector that he had been misled by the deputy harbor-master, who informed him his vessel could remain in port for twenty-four hours without entering, and that he had no intention of violating the customs regulations, this statement was reported to the minister of customs at Ottawa, when the vessel was at once allowed to proceed to sea, and that no evidence is given of any desire or intention of denying to the captain of the Everett Steele any treaty privileges he was entitled to enjoy.

The committee, concurring in the above, respectfully recommend that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute, if approved, to the right honorable secretary of state for the colonies.

All of which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. McGEE,
Clerk Privy Council.

By Article XV fishing vessels putting into harbors for shelter or to repair damages need not report, enter, or clear. The Nelson did not put into the harbor for either of above purposes. See Document 113, page 68. It does not appear that the Everett Steele was in the harbor for either of these purposes.

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council, on the 16th November, 1886.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a dispatch, dated 12th October, 1886, from the secretary of state for the colonies, transmitting a copy of a letter from Mr. Bayard, United States Secretary of State, to the British minister at Washington, calling attention to an alleged denial of the rights guarantied by the convention of 1818 in the case of the American fishing schooner Crittenden by the customs officer at Steep Creek, in the Straits of Canso, Nova Scotia.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the dispatch and inclosure were referred, submits a statement of the customs officer at Steep Creek, and observes that the captain of the Crittenden violated the customs laws by neglecting to enter his vessel, as requested by the customs officer, and landing and shipping a man clearly exceeded any treaty provision he was entitled to avail himself of.

Entry of vessel is required under proposed treaty save where it enters into a port in stress of weather, or for repairs, or wood or fuel, in case the entry is outside an established port. See Article X. Shipment of crew is allowed by treaty only in case fish is put on the free-list. See Article XV.

REFUSAL TO TRADE WHEN VESSELS WERE PROVIDED WITH PERMIT.

There are four cases of vessels the masters of which were denied the right to buy fish though provided with permit to touch and trade. The treaty would not help these cases, save by means of free fish.

Louisa A. Grant (schooner).—Provincetown, Mass.; Joseph Hatch, jr., master. Took permit to touch and trade. Arrived at St. Peters, Cape Breton, in afternoon of the 19th May, 1886. Entered and cleared according to law. Was obliged to take inexperienced men, at their own prices, to complete fishing crew to get to sea before the arrival of a seizing officer, who had started from Straits of Canso at 5 o'clock same afternoon in search of vessel, having been advised by telegraph of shipping of men. (From statements of Joseph Hatch, jr., owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

Ethel Maud (schooner).—Gloucester, Mass.; George H. Martin, master. Provided with a United States permit to touch and trade. Entered Tignish, Prince Edward Island, to purchase salt in barrels; was prohibited from buying anything. Collector was offered permit, but declared it to be worthless, and would not examine it; vessel obliged to return home for articles mentioned. On second trip was not permitted to get any food. (From statements of George H. Martin, owner and master, East Gloucester, Mass.)

Gertie May (schooner).—Portland, Me.; J. Doughty, master. Not allowed, though provided with permit, to touch and trade, to purchase fish-bait in Nova Scotia, and driven from harbor. (From statements of Charles F. Guptill, owner, Portland, Me.)

Zephyr (schooner).—Eastport, Me.; Warren Pilk, master. Cleared from Eastport 31st May, 1886, under register for West Isles, New Brunswick, to buy herring. Collector refused to enter vessel, telling the captain that if he bought fish, which were plenty at the time, the vessel would be seized. Returned to Eastport, losing about a week, which resulted in considerable loss to owner and crew. (From statements of Guildford Mitchell, owner, Eastport, Me.)

Naiad (schooner)—Lubec, Me.; Walter Kennedy, master. Presented frontier license (heretofore acceptable) on arriving at St. George, New Brunswick, but collector would not recognize same. Was compelled to return to Eastport and clear under register before being allowed to purchase herring, thus losing our trip. (From statements of Walter Kennedy, master, Lubec Me.)

B. B. B. (sloop)—Eastport, Me.; George W. Copp, master. Obliged to discontinue business of buying sardine herring in New Brunswick port, for Eastport canneries, as local customs regulations were during the season of 1886 made so exacting that it was impossible to comply with them without risk of the fish becoming stale and spoiled by detention. (From statements made by George W. Copp, Eastport, Me.)

Aside from the question as to the right of American vessels to purchase bait in Canadian ports, such a construction has been given to the treaty between the United States and Great Britain as amounts virtually to a declaration of almost complete non-intercourse with American vessels. The usual comity between friendly nations has been refused in their case, and in one instance, at least, the ordinary offices of humanity. The treaty of friendship and amity which, in return for very important concessions by the United States to Great Britain, reserved to the American vessels certain specified privileges has been construed to exclude them from all other intercourse common to civilized life and to universal maritime usage among nations not at war, as well as from the right to touch and trade accorded to all other vessels.

And quite aside from any question arising upon construction of the treaty, the provisions of the custom-house acts and regulations have been systematically enforced against American ships for alleged petty and technical violations of legal requirements in a manner so unreasonable, unfriendly, and unjust as to render the privileges accorded by the treaty practically nugatory.

It is not for a moment contended by the United States Government that American vessels should be exempt from those reasonable port and custom-house regulations which are in force in countries which such vessels have occasion to visit. If they choose to violate such requirements, their Government will not attempt to screen them from the just legal consequences.

But what the United States Government complains of in these cases is that existing regulations have been construed with a technical strictness and enforced with a severity in cases of inadvertent and accidental violation where no harm was done, which is both unusual and unnecessary, whereby the voyages of vessels have been broken up and heavy penalties incurred. That the liberal and reasonable construction of these laws that had prevailed for many years, and to which the fishermen had become accustomed, was changed without any notice given. And that every opportunity of unnecessary interference with the American fishing vessels, to the prejudice and destruction of their business, has been availed of. Whether in any of these cases a technical violation of some requirement of law had upon close and severe construction taken place, it is not easy to determine. But if such rules were generally enforced in such a manner in the ports of the world no vessel could sail in safety without carrying a solicitor versed in the intricacies of revenue and port regulations.—Phelps to Salisbury, No. 113, pages 36, 37.

Equally true under proposed treaty, unless by placing fish on the free-list the United States purchased the privileges enumerated in Article XV.

The gist of the American grievance in cases where the vessel is charged with fishing within prohibited waters is that the burden of proving the seizure illegal rests upon the vessel seized, etc.

The treaty does not remedy this injustice. Therefore the complaints made in the case of the David J. Adams would still be possible under the treaty.

SEIZURES FOR VIOLATIONS OF TREATY.

Highland Light.—Wellfleet, Mass.; J. H. Ryder, master. Seized off East Point, Prince Edward Island, September 1, 1886, while fishing within prohibited line. Suit for forfeiture begun in vice-admiralty court at Charlottetown. Hearing set for September 20, but postponed to September 30. Master admitted the charge and confessed judgment. Vessel condemned and sold December 14. Purchased by Canadian Government.

David J. Adams.—Gloucester, Mass.; Alden Kinney, master. Siezed at Digby, Nova Scotia, May 7, 1886, for alleged violation of treaty of 1818, act of 59 George III and act of 1883. Two suits brought in vice-admiralty court at Halifax for penalties. Protest filed May 12. Suits pending still, and vessel not yet released apparently.

The David J. Adams was, on the morning of the 5th day of May, 1886, as has already been stated, several miles within the Gut. She was not there for the purpose of "shelter," or "repairs," nor to "purchase wood," nor to obtain water. She remainded there during the 5th and the 6th of May, 1886; she was lying at anchor about half a mile from the shore, at a locality called "Clements West."

On the morning of the 6th of May, 1886, the captain made application to the owners of a fishing weir near where he was lying for bait, and purchased 4½ barrels of that article. He also purchased and took on board about 2 tons of ice. While waiting at anchor for these purposes the name of the vessel's "hailing place" was kept covered by canvas, and this concealment continued while she afterwards sailed down past Digby.

THE OFFENSE AS TO CUSTOMS LAWS.

The David J. Adams, as already stated, was in harbor upwards of forty-eight hours, and when seized was proceeding to sea without having been reported at any customs-house. Her business was not such as to make it her interest to attract the attention of the Canadian authorities, and it is not difficult, therefore, to conjecture the reason why she was not so reported, or to see that the reason put forward, that Digby is but "a small fishing settlement and its harbor not defined," is a disingenuous one. In going to the weir to purchase bait, the vessel passed the custom-house at Digby almost within hailing distance. When at the weir she was within 1 or 2 miles of another custom-house (at Clementsport), and within about 15 miles of another (at Annapolis). The master has not asserted that he did not know the law on this subject, as it is established that he knew the law in relation to the restriction on foreign fishing vessels.

The treaty does not remove compliance with customs law as to entry.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 393.]

Mr. Phelps to Lord Iddesleigh.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, December 2, 1886.

MY LORD: Referring to the conversation I had the honor to hold with your lordship on the 30th November, relative to the request of my Government that the owners of the David J. Adams may be furnished with a copy of the original reports stating the charges on which that vessel was seized by the Canadian authorities, I desire now to place before you in writing the grounds upon which this request is preferred.

It will be in the recollection of your lordship, from the previous correspondence relative to the case of the Adams, that the vessel was first taken possession of for the alleged offense of having purchased a small quantity of bait within the port of Digby, in Nova Scotia, to be used in lawful fishing. That later on a further charge was made against the vessel of a violation of some custom-house regulation, which it is not claimed, so far as I can learn, was ever before insisted on in a similar case. I think I have made it clear in my note of the 2d of June last, addressed to Lord Rosebery, then foreign secretary, that no act of the English or of the Canadian Parliament existed at the time of this seizure which legally justified it on the ground of the purchase of bait, even if such an act would have been authorized by the treaty of 1818. And it is a natural and strong inference, as I have in that communication pointed out, that the charge of violation of custom-house regulations was an afterthought, brought forward in order to sustain proceedings commenced on a different charge and found untenable.

In the suit that is now going on in the admiralty court at Halifax, for the purpose of condemning the vessel, still further charges have been added. And the Government of Canada seek to avail themselves of a clause in the act of the Canadian Parliament of May 22, 1868, which is in these words: "In case a dispute arises as to whether any seizure has or has not been legally made, or as to whether the person seizing was or was not authorized to seize under this act * * * the burden of proving the illegality of the seizure shall be on the owner or claimant."

I can not quote this provision without saying that it is, in my judgment, in violation of the principles of natural justice, as well as those of the common law. That a man should be charged by police or executive officers with the commission of an offense and then be condemned upon trial unless he can prove himself to be innocent is a proposition that is incompatible with the fundamental ideas upon which the administration of justice proceeds. But it is sought in the present case to carry the proposition much further, and to hold that the party inculpated must not only prove himself innocent of the offense on which his vessel was seized, but also of all other charges upon which it might have been seized that may be afterward brought forward and set up at the trial.

Conceiving that if the clause I have quoted from the act of 1868 can have effect (if allowed any effect at all) only upon the charge on which the vessel was originally seized, and that seizure for one offense can not be regarded as prima facie evidence of guilt of another, the counsel for the owners of the vessel have applied to the prosecuting officers to be furnished with a copy of the reports made to the Government of Canada in connection with the seizure of the vessel, either by Captain Scott, the seizing officer, or by the collector of customs at Digby, in order that it might be known to the defendant and be shown on trial what the charges are on which the seizure was grounded, and which the defendant is required to disprove. This most reasonable request has been refused by the prosecuting officers.

Under these circumstances I am instructed by my Government to request of Her Majesty's Government that the solicitors for the owners of the David J. Adams in the suit pending in Halifax may be furnished, for the purposes of the trial thereof, with copies of the reports above mentioned. And I beg to remind your lordship that there is no time to be lost in giving the proper direction if it is to be in season for the trial, which, as I am informed, is being pressed.

I have, etc.,

E. J. PHELPS.

The Adams would have had this cause of grievance under proposed treaty.

It has been pointed out in my note to Lord Iddesleigh, above mentioned, that the 3-mile limit referred to in this act is claimed by the Canadian Government to include considerable portions of the high seas, such as the Bay of Fundy, the Bay of Chaleur, and similar waters, by drawing the line from headland to headland, and that American fishermen had been excluded from those waters accordingly.

It has been seen also that the term "any purpose not permitted by treaty" is held by that Government to comprehend every possible act of human intercourse, except only the four purposes named in the treaty—shelter, repairs, wood, and water.

Under the provisions of the recent act, therefore, and the Canadian interpretation of the treaty, any American fishing vessel that may venture into a Canadian harbor, or may have occasion to pass through the very extensive waters thus comprehended, may be seized at the discretion of any one of numerous subordinate officers, carried into port, subjected to search and the examination of her master upon oath, her voyage broken up, and the vessel and cargo confiscated, if it shall be determined by the local authorities that she has ever even posted or received a letter or landed a passenger in any part of Her Majesty's dominions in America.

And it is publicly announced in Canada that a larger fleet of cruisers is being prepared by the authorities, and that greater vigilance will be exerted on their part in the next fishing season than in the last.

The treaty does not benefit the Americans in the matters referred to in this extract.

It is in the act to which the one above referred to is an amendment that is found the provision to which I drew attention in a note to Lord Iddesleigh of December 2, 1886, by which it is enacted that in case a dispute arises as to whether any seizure has or has not been legally made, the burden of proving the illegality of the seizure shall be upon the owner or claimant.

In his reply to that note of January 11, 1887, his lordship intimates that this provision is intended only to impose upon a person claiming a license the burden of proving it. But a reference to the act shows that such is by no means the restriction of the enactment. It refers in the broadest and clearest terms to any seizure that is made under the provisions of the act, which covers the whole subject of protection against illegal fishing; and it applies not only to the proof of a license to fish, but to all questions of fact whatever, necessary to a determination as to the legality of a seizure or the authority of the person making it.

It is quite unnecessary to point out what grave embarrassments may arise in the relations between the United States and Great Britain under such administration as is reasonably to be expected of the extraordinary provisions of this act and its amendment, upon which it is not important at this time further to comment.

It will be for Her Majesty's Government to determine how far its sanction and support will be given to further proceedings, such as the United States Government have now repeatedly complained of and have just ground to apprehend may be continued by the Canadian authorities.

This unusual provision would still be in force under the proposed treaty.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sarah H. Prior.—Boston, Mass. Refused the restoration of a lost seine, which was found by a Canadian schooner, December, 1886.

Abbey A. Snow.—Injury to this vessel has not been reported to the Department of State.

Eliza A. Thomas.—Injury to this vessel has not been reported to the Department of State.

The whole thing is summed up in this: Until you have changed the spirit, the temper, and the purpose of Canada to compel, whatever may be the policy adopted by the American people, a change in our fiscal regulations, the admission of their fish free to our market, you will have these countless grievances still going on. I do not find that in any considerable number of cases it can be truly said that the probability of their recurrence is diminished, and wherever it can be so said you will find that an arrangement is made out of which more difficulty and dispute and disagreement, the purpose of Canada remaining the same, are likely to occur.

When I rose I supposed I should say what I had to say in ten or fifteen minutes; but I have been led to enlarge upon it somewhat, and I will not detain the Senate by going carefully or thoroughly through the whole range.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, it can not be important for me to restate or reargue the positions which I took when I had occasion to address the Senate on the general attitude of the two great nations towards the subject of this fisheries treaty. I had then approached a stage in my observations when I should take up the detailed articles pointed out, not perhaps with so much precision as to what seemed to me a general and peremptory condemnation of them, nor shall I now undertake to occupy very much time with them.

But before I take them up, I must dispose of two topics that have been introduced here, narrow in their scope and yet of some importance. A justification has been attempted for this supervision, restraint, disturbance, and molestation of us in the exercise of our fishery rights in waters where we have a right, and where we are going and undertaking to go. These objections and complaints of ours are met by referring to ordinary cases of custom-house regulations and their enforcement. All nations in commercial relations understand the commercial necessities and the protection of the revenue by customs regulations. All inspect the provision in the laws of those with whom they have commercial intercourse; and wherever they find any element or any clause that interferes with justice and partakes of oppression, they bring it always to the notice of the Government with complaint, and have it conform to the necessity and just requisition of collecting the revenue, and not to go beyond it.

Now how does that operation take place—upon the vessel or the cargo or the master or the crew? When they have come into our ports they are to be submitted to our laws, and our laws are only to oblige them to conform to the commercial regulations which they have accepted and under which they have undertaken to carry on commerce. Summary and peremptory are the regulations, but they are neither unjust nor oppressive; and in our establishment of the customs by our statutes, whenever there comes to be an execution of a complaint that would end in a forfeiture or a fine, our statute opens it to the Secretary of the Treasury to remit it himself upon any evidence, not that the fault has not been committed, not that the forfeiture has not taken place, but that the act complained of has not been done with intent to do wrong.

That makes it suitable between nations to execute these peremptory and universal regulations, but tempered always with the proposition that by a process as easy as almost any petition for remission of a fine upon satisfaction, not, I say, upon whether the forfeiture has taken place or the violation has occurred, but whether it was done with intent or has only been through ignorance or from inadvertence.

There is another and more serious point of encroachment upon our commercial intercourse, and that is a fraud perpetrated upon us through false invoices, undervaluations, or manifests that are corrupt. We have receded now from the extreme pretensions on that point, and have provided a regular process for condemnation, and in those causes the burden of proof is thrown on the person who entered the goods after proof that they were undervalued. We have required that, and required it to be a part of our condemnation to prove that there was fraudulent intent.

There is another subject. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has alluded to our regulations in regard to commerce seeking our ports, the right within four leagues, I think it is, to board a vessel in reference to its manifest and its lading and all the inspection necessary to protect us against a surprise upon us in a meditated fraud. That does not rest upon any dominion over the seas that we have. That rests upon the control we have over vessels that are seeking our ports, and the moment we stop a ship that is not to come to our port we violate her rights.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if the Canadian government has the same right over fishing vessels seeking her ports?

Mr. EVARTS. I am only discussing this. You may discuss your subject, but I will dispose of this. If we arrest a vessel which is not seeking our ports, an apology is to be made for interrupting her. We had no right to fire a gun across her bow; we had no right to board her, and if we do board her and find that she is not seeking our port then it is an interruption of her voyage which requires an apology.

I agree that nations are polite and conciliatory towards each other when no vexatious policy is shown on our part towards them, or on their part towards us. It is not a question of the domination of the sea. It is a question of the regulation of commerce, and this is a question of very great importance.

I had occasion to discuss with the Spanish Government when we had conditions of disturbance in the Island of Cuba, and that government was planning to exercise power to stop our vessels and board them in the pursuit of their commerce seeking the Gulf of Mexico in the channels that brought them within the 3 leagues that they claimed the right over. I contested any such right except in war, and the fact that they had no state of war on that island did not permit them to interrupt our commerce, although the channels and the currents between the island required us to pass within the 6 miles. That is the difference between the two subjects, and it is of great importance.

Now, I have undertaken to show that we have reached a stage when all that we needed to do was to take up with Great Britain in a direct, and, of course, a conciliatory temper, but in a direct intercourse on the question of what those claims about headlands are. Draw them on the map; let us see them, with the British contention behind them. We have never done that yet. We hear about headlands and headlands, and about bays and the jaws of the land, and all that sort of thing. What we want to know is what you intend to insist upon in regard to this headland notion, mention of which is not found in the treaty of 1818, nor any foundation for it whatever. What is it that you call headlands, and what are your lines across the high seas between headlands and headlands? And when we have heard what those lines are, we then have to say our lines are so and so. And if we can get along by a concession between us which admits of an arrangement by which harbors and bays that are accorded to you in that light may be receded from by us, but in regard to our fishing in regions that are open as part of the high seas, outside of the 3 miles, we propose to fish there, and we do not propose to fish there or to be excluded from fishing there by any domination on your side as to what the law and the interpretation of that treaty is.

But if it is necessary, as in the case of the French and English possession of a fishery, that the fishing grounds shall be patrolled by the ships of both nations, and an authority, a tribunal, and an examination that shall be summary, without oppression, and shall be impartial between them, then we take as matter of complaint one side or the other of the actual dimensions of our encroachments and of your insistence upon them, and then they are like other grievances that are to be adjusted between two nations according to the magnitude of the great interests between them, obliterating of course all these subjects of contention, all these great topics of peace, of enlargement, of civilization.

Now we have reached that stage. What would have been the very narrow subject then, even if contrary to the judgment of Congress a treaty was to be proposed? Why, it would not be confined to that subject to find out what this treaty of 1818 meant, and then how we could go on and exercise our competition until we brought it to a head, of finding our grievance a practical grievance. We have made up our minds by the action of Congress that the Government here need not trouble themselves about commercial intercourse, civilization, humanity, and all those topics.

We would settle them legally, but under no treaty that hampered us in regard to them, no definition of a treaty that was to lead us to submit in the change of circumstances by which Congress was open and rights were protected, and on our part every degree of hospitality and protection was open to every fishing vessel, though there was no treaty or act between us giving them any rights whatever in our waters. That was out. But the other course was taken; and now, adhering to the proposition that no occasion for such a treaty as this existed in the situation, where are we? Understood by the arguments and passages of the Senator from Alabama as to the propriety, the duty, the wisdom, the benevolence of this treaty, he will not hesitate to believe me when I say that I agree with him as he thought in 1886 and not as he argues or thinks now. He said then:

> I do not wish to volunteer any opinions about this subject before a question gets before the Senate, and I am compelled to act upon it, but my convictions are very strong; they are fixed; indeed, I may say that we can get along with the people of Great Britain on this subject without any further treaty at all and without any further legislation. If any one were to ask me what provisions of a treaty I would frame to compose and settle any question of fundamental law between us and Great Britain in respect to the fisheries, I could not suggest it, or if I were asked to propose an amendment to the Statutes of the United States so as to put the control of this intricate subject more completely in the hands of our Government, I would not know how to do it. I believe that both the treaty stipulations and the situations under the statutes are about as complete as we are able to make them. There may be other interests, and there are other interests lying between the people of the British possessions and the United States that I would like very much to see promoted by further negotiation, but I can not call to mind, there is no suggestion to my mind of any improvement that we could make under existing conditions of our rights in the fisheries of that northeastern coast.

Those are my opinions, and the whole course of my speech showed that I thought the relations between the two nations in regard to the intermediate provinces ought to be construed correctly, executed justly, in a friendly manner, without molestation, and that the arrangements we needed to make were not a new treaty, but to see that proper exercise of neighborly attitude to us was secured in respect to our rights, and that a proper term was put upon our fishermen and our fishing vessels by our Government if they were disposed to act in contravention of our right. As to humanity and civilization, we leave that to the attitude of these two nations, which must hold, let me say, an attitude towards each other that is much higher and much more comprehensive than our attitude about the Canadian fisheries.

Now, let us look at this treaty itself. In the first place, I believe it is not doubted that this is to be a permanent treaty. There is no limitation of time; there is no retraction. We are making now a third treaty with Great Britain. We have now in force that of 1783 to a certain extent, and that of 1818 so far as it takes the place of or encroaches upon the treaty of 1783; and now we are making a third treaty, not repealing either of the others. We are introducing, therefore, a wider area and a multiplication of regulations instead of simplicity, regularity, peace, respect, and orderly conduct of affairs between us.

This treaty has other important phrases which have nothing to do with the treaty of 1783, nothing to do with the treaty of 1818, and nothing to do with our shares and rights and their exercise in the northeastern fisheries. It deals with fisheries on our coasts, and from the farthest point on the seacoast of Maine down to the capes of Florida puts us under a permanent treaty submission of our coast fisheries to them. Has Great Britain conquered our fisheries? Are we making a partition in regard to rights that they have? Would you find Great Britain making a bargain with us to give us the fishery shores of Great Britain and their other dominions as a make-weight, as an idle circumstance to fill out our own concessions in giving them more than half of all our contention in what we had a common possession, and throwing in to boot, by a permanent treaty, our fishing interests on our coasts? Who started that? What people on the coast of Florida or Carolina or Virginia or the eastern coast started a notion that they wanted to give up to Great Britain by treaty never to be retracted this share in our fisheries? I do not know how that came about.

I shall now take up the articles of the treaty and show what they contain pretty briefly, for I believe the right to close the debate on the other side begins now very promptly.

Mr. GRAY. I am not going to interrupt the Senator a moment except to ask him if the remarks he last made relate to Article XII of the treaty?

Mr. EVARTS. Yes, I am going to comment upon that article, and upon Article XV, too. This article does not undertake to make a new treaty in regard to the fishing waters that are divided; it undertakes to make a treaty by which we shall agree that these delimitations are according to our renunciation. Did you ever hear of anything like that? Everybody knows that Mr. Gallatin, Mr. Rush, John Quincy Adams, Lord Castlereagh, and Lord Bute did not make these lines.

You can not find these lines within the four corners of the treaty of 1818. Are the American people to be made to believe that we are not now making a new treaty to give away by demarkation what we have sturdily refused to do in the clauses of the former treaties as framed, and sturdily in our contentions up to this time as to what those treaties meant? Let us read this famous Article I. It is as follows:

The high contracting parties agree to appoint a mixed commission to delimit—

I suppose that means to mark off—in the manner provided in this treaty, the British waters, bays, creeks, and harbors of the coasts of Canada and of Newfoundland, as to which the United States, by Article I of the convention of October 20, 1818, between the United States and Great Britain, renounced forever any liberty to take, dry, or cure fish.

That is the treaty proposed to us to sign our names to now, and that is a line drawn not according to a convention now agreed upon, but according to our renunciation in 1818. I do not know but that we can decide that, as it seems to me, if we understand what it means; but under it lurks a confession that all these new lines which we draw, which might be accommodated to our necessities, to our wishes, to our contention, must be in the delimitation of "the British waters, bays, creeks, and harbors of the coast of Canada and of Newfoundland." Do we agree that between headlands and the high seas, inclosing the high seas, that between great bays 21 miles wide all interior waters are British waters? Why make us confess that? All we have to do for the purpose of this convention is to say that we shall not fish there, and that is enough. Draw the line, we fish only on one side. But it is a matter of very great importance that under these generalities we should not be brought into a general confession that whatever we may agree to in regard to fishing on this line, or whether we are not to concede that of the other side, is British waters within the sense of closed seas.

Now, the third and fourth articles——

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator in regard to the first article, if that article should be adopted in the form in which it appears to be, substantially an agreement that the original treaty of 1818 was as there construed, is it not an abandonment of all our claims for damages, insult, and injury in the past, and an admission that in all those claims set up we were wrong?

Mr. EVARTS. Undoubtedly, if we with our open eyes sign the clauses of that treaty; and that may be a reason why the two thousand cases that are now in the evidence of this Government have not been made prominent up to this time.

Articles III and IV pursue these delimitations by lines. We have two lines here. The Senator from Alabama and others have done me the honor to refer to a phrase I used in regard to some obscurity and to a water demarkation. I expected to find in this treaty some improvement upon the line. There we had a water line drawn by man and nothing else, by whoever knows how to draw a line at sea without a shore to measure it by. Now, we have two arrangements here: first, of lines which mark themselves, the division between our fishing rights and theirs; and others that after the line is drawn give us 3 miles seaward out of a sea line.

Suppose these nations are unable to agree which side of 3 miles from the shore a vessel was found? Who under heaven could expect to find out whether a sloop was within or without a water line 3 miles from another water line, I should like to know? Why are we putting our heads into this mesh of inextricable quarrels? If they would only mark their lines and then put a light-house at each end of them and a foghorn there to warn us off, we might know where our lines were; but nobody could give us a line 3 miles seaward outside of a sea line. Is there any place there on that inner line where they can plant a cannon to reach out to seaward 3 miles in our exclusion? It is an idle and an absurd proposition, and shows with conclusive force the character of the pretensions of Great Britain. The treaty of 1818 never measured or undertook to measure anything but a water line from the shore, where we fished for twenty years without anybody's questioning it. I would not make a treaty of this kind unless I wished to give to Great Britain all that she wants and to cut off all that we now claim.

I come next to an extraordinary article, and that is Article V:

Nothing in this treaty shall be construed to include within the common waters—

That is, our waters. They do not wish to keep themselves out of common waters—any such interior portions of any bays, creeks, or harbors as can not be reached from the sea without passing within the 3 marine miles mentioned in Article I of the convention of October 20, 1818.

What does that mean? It means, if it means anything, that there are fishing waters to which we have a right, even by the demarkations or delimitations, but that the currents and the tides may oblige us to seek that open fishing ground by keeping nearer the shore than 3 miles. Here, for the first time in the history of international arrangements, navigation—not fishing, but navigation—is shut to us within the 3 miles. I pointed out to the Senate, I think, by irrefragable authorities and reasoning that there is no pretense on the part of any nation that in time of peace it has a right to interfere with navigation on the high seas.

Do Senators know what that means? Do those who signed this treaty on our part know what it means? Why put it there unless it means something? It means what I have propounded or it means nothing. Shall we sign a treaty that we will give up the right of navigation because tide and currents fall within a 3-mile belt—between neighboring and friendly nations, too? Being inside, we were pursuing that treaty fishery there; but it seems there are some places where we could not get through without sailing within 3 miles. The treaty of 1818 does not curtail our right of sailing anywhere; it is only the right of fishing. Thus pitfalls are laid for us all along through this treaty.

Now we come to Article X, which submits us to local administration. We have never had a treaty before which effected that. In the Fortune Bay incident the topic of contention was whether when by treaty rights we could fish we were subject to regulations as to whether we were within the rights. What shall we do with a neighboring nation whose shores mark the fishing grounds if we go there from abroad on a contravening and a competing claim with ours and their courts are to be in judgment over us?

It is in this light that I have pointed out the utter failure of the application of custom-house regulations and forfeitures. We do not go there confessing that we are under forfeiture. The point in dispute is whether we are within our right or not. As I said in my observations the other day, when a cruiser there takes our vessel out of the 3-mile limit, that vessel has as good a right to reply by force as the other vessel has to exercise it.

Lord Salisbury relinquished any pretension that they had a right to make laws, after a treaty had been made with us, that contravened it or undertook to construe it or to enforce it, unless it was with our assent to that regulation. This is now actually thrown away and we submit by treaty our competing fishery to the marauding and molesting regulations of the shore fisherman's interest. How valuable to us is it to have that relation, as if we were going there as a ship with its cargo comes into our ports under our laws? We go up there to fish by our own right and by permission, and we do not intend, so far as my voice will go here, by treaty acknowledgment to agree that shore laws and shore courts shall be the judges of our international and treaty rights. I can not dwell as long as I should like to do upon this point.

Now we come to a very extraordinary clause. It is only the second clause of Article XI that I think I need to comment on; but because I pass over other clauses it does not follow that they are not objectionable. But we come to this great liberality in the second clause of Article XI:

Licenses to purchase in established ports of entry of the aforesaid coasts of Canada or of Newfoundland—

for the homeward voyage, such provisions and supplies as are ordinarily sold to trading vessels, shall be granted to United States fishing vessels in such ports, promptly upon application and without charge.

Supposing we need the supplies in the ports of refuge that we have gone into that are not ports of entry, how are we ever going to get out of them under this treaty by the relaxation, as it is called, of trading and protective arrangements? We do not encounter storms in front of ports of entry; we encounter them wherever we are fishing and wherever the storms and the waves rage about us. Now comes an extraordinary proposition:

. And such vessels, having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid—

What can get those? None but vessels that are in these ports, desiring to provide for a homeward voyage. They can not then provide for going out to sea to continue their fishing. We did not go there for the sake of coming home; we went there for the purpose of fishing through the season on the high seas, having that fishery guarantied to us by the treaty of 1783, without molestation, and the resorts for shelter, for repairs, and, as I pointed out, for wood and water; for all that those coasts should furnish what we needed. Having got a right to go home, if we undertook to sail out fishing we should be forfeited clearly, because we would have violated their laws and had obtained a license under false pretenses. Having that right to load to go home, this clause was introduced:

And such vessels—

It seems to me to be plainly limited to "such," that is those having the predicament of a right to a license and getting it—

And such vessels, having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid, shall also be accorded upon all occasions such facilities for the purchase of casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to the trading vessels; but such provisions or supplies shall not be obtained by barter, nor purchased for resale or traffic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from New York will suspend. Under the consent of a few days since, the debate was to close at 6 o'clock to-day, and the last two hours of that time were to be occupied by the friends of the treaty, as the present occupant of the chair understands the agreement referred to. It is the duty of the Chair simply to call attention to that fact at this hour, it being now 4 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the hour of 6 o'clock at which the debate was to stop be extended so much time further as the Senator from New York shall occupy in his argument.

Mr. MORGAN. This evening?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, this evening.

Mr. HOAR. And that the Senator from New York be permitted to proceed?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. My colleague does not want to interfere with the arrangement for taking the vote to-morrow.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no.

Mr. EVARTS. I shall have occasion to detain the Senate for a very brief period longer.

Mr. PAYNE. There should be as much time given to one side as the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine, which is that the time for closing the debate shall be extended beyond 6 o'clock to the extent of the time occupied by the Senator from New York after 4 o'clock?

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that that be qualified by giving the same additional time to those who favor the treaty.

Mr. FRYE. It still leaves two hours to those who favor the treaty.

Mr. PAYNE. The two hours before the vote should not be required to be taken up in answering the argument of the Senator from New York.

Mr. EVARTS. There was no arrangement that we were to have no right to speak on our side.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know anything about the arrangement; I was not a party to it; but I say if the time of the Senator from New York is extended half an hour the same extent of time should be given to the other side.

Mr. FRYE. It can not be possible that Senators on the other side will make any objection to the proposition. On Friday an agreement was made that the debate should continue until Monday evening at 6 o'clock, and stop. The friends of the treaty occupied every single moment of that time up to half past 2 o'clock to-day.

Mr. PAYNE. It was your own offer, I understand.

Mr. FRYE. My own offer was not that the friends of the treaty should occupy the whole time. I never dreamed of it. I supposed this side would have half of it at least, but instead of that, the friends of the treaty have taken the whole time except an hour and a half. I simply ask that the Senator from New York shall proceed half an hour longer, if he desires to occupy that length of time——

Mr. PAYNE. I do not object.

Mr. FRYE. And, to give the two hours to the other side, that the time shall be extended until half past 6.

Mr. GRAY. I have not the most remote idea of objecting to the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Maine, for I want the Senator from New York to have all the time necessary to complete his argument, or any gentleman on that side; but consulting the convenience and comfort of Senators, why can we not in our discretion, having it entirely at our own disposal, agree that any extension of the time that is made by the Senator from New York in his speech may be added to the time to-morrow morning before the vote is taken.

Mr. FRYE. The only difficulty about that is that I had a sharp conflict with my colleague [Mr. HALE], who insisted on Friday that the conference report on the naval appropriation bill must be taken up and considered; and I finally succeeded in quieting him and allowing the debate on the treaty to go on to-day.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose there are other Senators here who have interests as well as the Senator Maine.

Mr. DAWES. Did the Senator from Delaware suggest that two hours should be given to-morrow?

Mr. GRAY. No; I said as much time to-morrow as is occupied by the Senator from New York after 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. I have only to say that I have had very great difficulty in getting the little debate I have had on the merits of the treaty before the Senate. Twice I have spoken here, first Friday evening, when we were put off by an adjournment until Monday, and this morning, when, very kindly, the Senator from Maine moved to allow me to proceed earlier than I was entitled to do, so that I might conclude my remarks. This evening I feel very tired and very weary indeed. I hate to go on. I am willing not to ask any more than the two hours' time. I do not ask any more than that.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I am informed by the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that he has no objection to having the time taken from 11 to 12 to-morrow. That will suit.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine modify his request?

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate agree to go into open executive session to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal, and that the time from then until 12 o'clock may be consumed by the friends of the treaty.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think that ought to be done unless the Senator from New York takes that much time. If he takes an hour longer it will be all right.

Mr. GRAY. Whatever time is taken by the Senator from New York to-day will be given to-morrow.

Mr. TELLER. Everybody else is cut off.

Mr. GRAY. If he takes less than an hour to-day we shall not want an hour to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. We only want two hours in all.

Mr. GRAY. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine as modified?

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Maine if he will not consent that some part of the time to-morrow morning may be taken up in the consideration of the joint resolution which I have introduced to take measures to suppress the yellow fever in the South?

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will not bring that in again to disturb us. It broke us up on Friday when we would have reached a conclusion then without the slightest difficulty and occupied Saturday. The Senator could not get his resolution in from 11 to 12 o'clock to-morrow morning. The voting on the treaty will be through by 1 o'clock, probably, and then the Senator will have an opportunity to avail himself of the floor.

Mr. CALL. I only wanted to ask the Senator if he would consent.

Mr. GRAY. I understand the Senator from Maine to ask that to-morrow morning such time may be given to those who favor the treaty as is taken by the Senator from New York after 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. I make no objection to such an agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine as modified? The Chair hears none. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. EVARTS. Out of whose time does the ten minutes come which has been occupied since I was stopped?

Mr. FRYE. Out of the time of the Senator from Alabama. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. I did not hear the remark.

Mr. EVARTS. It comes out of the two hours.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from New York asked out of whose time the ten minutes came which have just been wasted here.

Mr. EVARTS. I did not say "wasted."

Mr. FRYE. I said so.

Mr. EVARTS. I said "occupied."

Mr. GRAY (to Mr. EVARTS). You can take all the time you choose.

Mr. FRYE. It is over three-quarters of an hour before five.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, in reference to this famous Article V, I find that Sir Charles Tupper (or, rather, my attention was called to it) undertakes to give some explanation of this 3-mile navigation, and I understand that it concurs with my views.

As to Article XI, it is absurd to say that after you have permission to trade, etc., in aid of your voyage home, therefore at all times you have a right to purchase the casual or needful provisions and supplies without reference to going home. That is the pretension I mean. I should like to have it expressed if it is the meaning of the treaty. It does not mean it on any grammatical construction, and is not at all compatible with common sense. If it means something it would be well to have it put in such a phrase as to make an explicit expression that it may not make another quarrel. For myself I can see not the least support for that pretension.

Now comes Article XII. Article XII is the clause that takes up and parts with our exclusive fishery on our whole coast. What is the object of that? Who wants to give away our exclusive fishery on our coast? To whom should we give it? What is the consideration for it? With the provinces of Great Britain we have joint rights. We have two things here that the provinces may be interested in, and we as well. They want to exclude us from fishing grounds as far as they can. We wish to carry our fishing grounds as far as we rightly can. We wish hospitality, reciprocity, humanity, and execution of the clauses in the treaty of 1818 and in the treaty of 1783.

That means that we shall not be molested, and shall have resort to shelter and repairs. It means anything and everything in every civilized community that is appurtenant to our dealing and refitting and supplying. That is what we claim; and we want to hear Great Britain say, if she means to say it, that we are not under the clauses of 1818 and the clause that we shall be unmolested in our deep-sea fisheries by the treaty of 1783. I want here to say that she intends to execute against us the rigid and oppressive and inhospitable course that is inflicted upon us in these fisheries. Why is it done? It is that our fisheries may be encroached upon and we driven from them.

We are entitled, when we are dealing with a great and equal nation, to have it understood that one word is as good as articles as long as the Decalogue, when we are to have these advantages appurtenant to the enjoyment of our fisheries, of resort, of shelter, of repairs, of the purchase of what is essential. To us all restriction in courts, or your colonial system, or exclusion of trading vessels from your ports has all been blown away like a scroll. The treaty gave the fishermen a right to come in when you kept everybody out. Under that pretension we say, let them come in as traders and point to our ports for our hospitality for their fishing vessels. Under what? Under what was the supposed reciprocal trade relation in 1830? Now, Article XII says:

> Fishing vessels of Canada and Newfoundland shall have on the Atlantic coast of the United States all the privileges reserved and secured by this treaty to United States fishing vessels in the aforesaid waters of Canada and Newfoundland.

Can any one tell me what that means? We have undertaken by lines drawn to show where our rights up there were. Some of them are 10 miles from the bay line, drawn across bays at points within them of 10 miles wide; others are drawn 21 miles across, and all that. What does this mean? Where are your lines of demarkation down here? Where are your limits? At one fell swoop you introduce Great Britain into joint fishing interests along our coasts. Has England demanded it? Why should it be given? What are we paid for it? We are not paid by fishing rights up there, because the fishing rights we get are the fishing rights that the treaties gave us.

On the face of this delimitation it is to give us what was gained by the delimitations of our renunciation in 1818. Do the Florida, the North Carolina, and the Virginia fishermen, as well as the Jersey and the Long Island and the eastern coast fishermen, understand that this Government has waked up and traded away our exclusive fisheries, whatever by the law o. nations were so exclusive? If it means something less, point out to us what it means. The largest construction that will be put on it, after we have signed this treaty, we may rely upon the provincials insisting upon. If there is a limitation, show it; read it; let it not be a new quarrel as to what is accorded. If it comes to trading interests, we give them trading interests now by our own laws, by our own principles of intercourse and humanity. So it is not for that, but we give them now a great deal more than they give us. So it must be when you say that fishing vessels shall have all the privileges which are mentioned in this treaty. That means of course the other treaties, because this is ingrafted on to the other treaties. It means after this treaty is made, and is applied to the old one, and secured, and through all time.

Do the people of the United States think that they are in an attitude towards Great Britain or Great Britain towards us to demand that we shall share our fisheries with them? It is not within the four corners of the negotiation; it is not in the breast of an American unless in the breast of the Secretary of State and the signatories to this convention; nor is it in theirs with any consciousness of the extended and illimitable region that we are drawn into by the clauses of this article.

Article XIV has been commented on in detail by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who addressed us to-day. All this is a part of our treaty agreement, that our rights and their pursuit there are to be subject to the laws, the courts, and the processes of the courts there. I pointed out what I consider the rights. If we are to have a line drawn between us, then we are to have our treatment not as that of marauders any more than they are marauders when they interfere with us. This is not a case of prize condemnation; this is not a condition of constant hostilities; this is to be a treaty where under just claims there may come to be misunderstanding. When we are accused of perverseness, evasion, frauds, then let Great Britain complain to us of it, and we shall meet them in the way that any nation should meet imputations of that kind; but to say that across the line of disputation we are to submit to the exclusive control not only of laws that they have passed, but of any laws that they choose to pass, it will be a long while before a Senate of the United States will give its consent to put our yoke under a construction of disputed rights, honest claims against the treatment, decision, and enforcement of a foreign court.

It has been our subject of complaint all along, in 1843, in 1852, in 1856, when the alleviations were not intercepted by giving the free fish market to the provincials, that we were marauded. And I read the letter of Mr. Bayard, the Secretary of State, where he very intelligently and very firmly pointed out that the object of these procedures against us was to deprive us of our rights of fishing, and had drawn from an authority in the provinces the conclusion that that was exactly what he meant.

Article XV I do not need to talk about. It takes no effect, but it is a very extraordinary proposition to put in, that our giving our market is to be counterbalanced by what? By their giving us their market for fish that we catch. That is one of those interesting exchanges of equalities—as if we ever sent fish into their market. They have their own market to themselves. Down here we should like to have our own market. But then this admirable exchange is made: "Give us your market and we will give you our market!" "Coals to Newcastle!" An interesting interchange of commerce—our carrying fish there.

And then, what is thrown in? Why this very limited, close stipulation of what we shall get then? We shall not even barter up there. If they have got our market, and we have got fish to give for bait, we can not barter, or, if we have anything else to exchange, we can not barter. Yet the liberality is to be opened up, thrown wide open, because we give them our market. And here is a close enumeration of advantages that we shall have when, without any stipulation, we give them in our ports every privilege enumerated there, and every other that ordinary commercial intercourse and hospitality could give. And so it comes out exactly as I stated, that the demonstrations of our experience under the treaty of 1871 and under the treaty of 1854 showed us that the inshore fisheries that they thought so much of as an equivalent for an interchange with us for our market were of no value. It was demonstrated to them, although they pretended it was worth $15,000,000—and they got five and a half millions! So, too, the interchange of productions on each side of the line has been proved to our merchants and producers as not valuable to them.

As I said in my speech, they have nothing but molestation to trade in, in any reciprocating use, and they bring it here; and nothing that they give you is toward relaxing their irritations, their exclusions, but toward reduction of our entertainment and hospitality.

And now, after all that, there is another provision, for they must have equivalents all the time. The treaty says:

> The like privileges shall be continued or given to fishing vessels of Canada and Newfoundland on the Atlantic coasts of the United States.

One would suppose that when we left off at the close of the Revolution and became independent, although we owned a half of the fishery up there and obtained it by firm treaty, too, Great Britain owned half our fishery along our coast! For they come here and talk about dividing up and say, "Why, give us half your rights, too; why not? Among friendly nations who would stand on a question about a fishery?" It all comes to this: we thought that we, that Congress could settle the question of hospitality by reciprocal legislation.

What we had given them in advance and was denied to us we could redress, either by requiring equal hospitality there or refusing our hospitality here. Now, they take up that and say to us, "Well, if you will give us one-half of your fishery here, we will give up one-half of the hospitality to you that you show to us." And thus we swap off our privileges on this new equality between us. "We will accept your arrangement of giving up half your fisheries that are in dispute if you will give up half the hospitality." But no, they must have our coast fisheries to boot, from one end to the other, and our negotiators threw them in!

Mr. President, if the Senate rejects this treaty, as it will, you will see the opening to quiet and repose in the Northeastern fisheries. They are governed there by an addiction to their interests in common with the rest of the world, and our relations to them are vastly more important to them than their relations to us are to us. And we are not going to weigh and compare the arrangements of good neighborhood between us on a mere question of fisheries. We intend to have this neighbor of ours friendly in act and conduct from one end of its Atlantic to its Pacific coast on the principles of justice and equality.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, through the indulgence of my friend, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is to close this debate, I propose to take a very few moments to reply to some of the points that have been made this afternoon by those who are opposing the ratification of this treaty. I shall not be able in the time to which I have limited myself to reply fully to the questions of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I should be glad to do so, because anything coming from that Senator is worthy of a reply; but I think that in the course of this debate these questions have all been sufficiently dealt with and put it out of the power of any one to say that the points made by him have not been adverted to and replied to by Senators on this side.

I am glad that the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] has this afternoon supplemented his long speech of a few days ago, for I listened for two days to the Senator with great interest. His speech was a philosophical disquisition on a great many matters which I could not see specially touched the treaty now before the Senate; and I felt somewhat like the good old Scotch lady who, when asked by her minister whether she understood the sermon in which she appeared so much interested, replied "I wad na ha' the presumption." I do not know that I would have the presumption to understand the argument of the Senator from New York so far as the treaty was concerned in his two day's speech, although I was interested in it.

But to-day the Senator has come to discuss the articles of the treaty in detail, and we have from him a definite proposition; and I am glad, Mr. President, that it is now apparent that those who are opposing the ratification of this treaty have been driven by the stress of argument when they come at last to consider the treaty itself in the person of their most distinguished advocate to confess the weakness of the grounds of opposition that can be displayed in the Senate to making this most admirable treaty a part of the law of the land.

I understood the Senator from New York distinctly and categorically to say that he objected to this treaty because it gave to the fishermen of Canada and to the inhabitants of Great Britain complete, full, and absolute rights of fishery all along the Atlantic coast from Eastport to the southernmost points of Florida. That I understood to be his contention.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator will allow me to put in a caution which I insisted upon. I was not giving the reasons that I had for not engaging in this negotiation or in this treaty. That was not my point. I had given the reasons against negotiation and against the treaty; but taking up the treaty to be looked at as if it were a negotiation made, and that ought to be made, I pointed out distinctly what precluded me from any possibility of supporting it.

Mr. GRAY. Exactly. I did not, then, misunderstand the Senator. He states now, and we are to infer from the prominence which he gives it, that a principal reason for his objecting to the ratification of this treaty is that the twelfth article thereof admits to a participation in all the fisheries of the territorial waters of the States from Maine to Florida the Canadian and British fishermen.

Having, then, a distinct proposition between us, if I can convince Senators on that side, or on any side of this Chamber, as I undertake here to do, that that proposition is utterly without foundation, is utterly groundless, then I think I have a right to call upon the Senator from New York to say that, a large part and a principal ground of his opposition to this treaty having been removed, he will consider whether he can not support it.

I beg Senators to give me their attention for a moment. Article XII, the article in question, is as follows:

Fishing vessels of Canada and Newfoundland shall have on the Atlantic coast of the United States all the privileges—

Now, mark you, "fishing vessels," not fishermen—of Canada and Newfoundland shall have on the Atlantic coast of the United States all the privileges reserved and secured by this treaty—

Not any other treaty—to United States fishing vessels.

Where?

In the aforesaid waters of Canada and Newfoundland.

Now, what are "the aforesaid waters of Canada and Newfoundland?" Why, Mr. President, they are all waters in which, by Article I of the treaty of 1818, we have renounced any right of fishing at all, and therefore the privileges that are secured to Canadian fishermen in our waters can not by any possibility refer to fishing rights.

The aforesaid waters as recited in Article I of this treaty are plainly shown. Let us read the article:

ARTICLE I.

The high contracting parties agree to appoint a mixed commission to delimit, in the manner provided in this treaty, the British waters, bays, creeks, and harbors of the coasts of Canada and of Newfoundland, as to which the United States, by Article I of the convention of October 20, 1818, between the United States and Great Britain, renounced forever any liberty to take, dry, or cure fish.

I put it to the candor of Senators, I put it to their judgment and conscience, whether an objection like this to this treaty needs any other answer than the one I have made by simply reading the language of Article XII and of Article I. I do not need to repeat the remarks I made the other day in regard to a paper over the name of Mr. Levi Woodbury, in which he made this contention—in which I referred to the fact that the privileges secured by this treaty were not and could not be tortured into being fishing privileges at all. This is not an independent treaty, conferring rights of fishery; it is a treaty of interpretation of the treaty of 1818, by which, as we contend, we have secured to American fishermen pretty much all those rights and privileges, commercial rights and privileges for which they have clamored so long.

I am glad, as I said at the outset, that the Senator from New York has based so large a part of his argument against this treaty upon grounds such as this. It shows the desperateness of the case when that distinguished statesman and distinguished lawyer finds nothing upon which he can dwell with more earnestness and more emphasis than this completely flimsy and groundless charge, that this treaty confers any fishery rights on Canadian or British fishermen in the territorial waters of the States of this Union.

I said something the other day to this effect, that a treaty that attempted to do this thing would never receive my support or the support, as I believe, of any Democrat in this body—that we do not believe that the Government of the United States has the right to barter away the territorial waters of any State, and that the State of Maryland and the State of Virginia, the State of Massachusetts and the State of Maine have each valuable territorial fisheries which can not be impaired, can not be diminished under the treaty-making power of the General Government. The treaty of 1871 did attempt to do that thing, and under its strict language Canadian fishermen could claim the right to fish in Chesapeake Bay, but I think that the State of Maryland could have asserted, and that the United States Supreme Court would have supported her in asserting, her territorial sovereignty over all those waters, and that her municipal law would, by its own vigor, have protected her own citizens from any encroachments attempted to be made by Canadian fishermen.

If that is the doctrine of Senators on the other side, that the United States can give away the territorial waters of a State, then I say the sovereignty of the States is not safe in their keeping. I do not believe that the people of this country distrust or ever have distrusted a Democratic administration as regards the foreign relations of this country. The conduct of those administrations in this regard has brought glory and honor to our country's name, and has added many an illustrious page to American history. If that be the doctrine of the Republican party, that the United States Government can so deal with the rights of the States, then I say we may fear trusting them as the custodians of our foreign relations where they may use as counters, in a political gamble, the sovereignty and jurisdiction of any of the States of this Union.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that notwithstanding all that we have heard here in the way of boastfulness as to the power of this country and as to what Republican administrations have done to maintain it, I do not believe that the people of this country are ready yet to transfer power into hands that would maintain a doctrine like this. We have endeavored, or this Administration, as we on this side believe, has endeavored to place our relations with Great Britain upon a basis, not only of friendship, but of justice advantageous to all our citizens.

It has endeavored to deal fairly, broadly, and magnanimously, and when that course fails this Administration will know how to protect the honor and the good name of this country. I fear me that there are some who have figured and do figure largely in this debate who are like the men of Ghent, who, as we are told in the old song, had trodden on the tail of the lion of Flanders when he was asleep. The song says:

Ere a leaf was fallen the lion he went
And growl'd a growl at the gates of Ghent;
But they bended low when they saw him awake,
And said that they trod on his tail by mistake.

This Administration, Mr. President, and the Democratic party, while maintaining the position of this country upright and four square toward Great Britain and all the world, do not propose to put this country in any such attitude as that we would be obliged to retract or apologize when we had trodden upon the lion's tail by saying that we had trodden upon it "by mistake."

What are some of the other features of this treaty which have been discussed this afternoon?

The twelfth article has been given a prominence by the Senator from New York which I admit no other Senator has given it. But Article IX has also been alluded to by him, and he has broadly denied, as the report of the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations has broadly denied, that Article XI gives to American fishermen that large measure of commercial hospitality which the President asserts that it does, and which I contend that it manifestly does, within the four corners of that article.

The Senator from New York, as I understood him, contends that Article XI by its peculiar language gives these privileges of purchasing supplies that are ordinarily sold to trading vessels—for that is the measure of the privilege—all provisions and all supplies which trading vessels ordinarily need and procure, only to those fishing vessels that are on the homeward voyage. The President who sends us this treaty tells us that it means something else, and that the additional clause, "such vessels having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid shall also be accorded upon all occasions such facilities for the purchase of casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to the trading vessels," means just what it says, and that American fishing vessels on all occasions can supply themselves with provisions and everything that is ordinarily sold to a trading vessel.

If that be true, is not that a very large and broad provision for securing to American fishing vessels abundant facilities to supply themselves with what they need?

Mr. EVARTS. Will the Senator allow me to ask what was the privilege of the clause preceding, if there was a privilege?

Mr. GRAY. I will come to that in one moment, if the Senator will permit me.

Now, the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations admits that if this article has the meaning which I attribute to it, it would be a really broad provision, one which was intended to completely reverse the whole British pretension on the subject and put our fishing vessels upon all subjects of provisions and supplies upon the same footing that British fishing vessels occupy in the United States and that American trading vessels occupy in the British provinces.

So that it is admitted—admitted, I presume, by the Senator from New York, certainly admitted by the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which the Senator from New York is a member—that this is really an important concession, and, if susceptible of the construction which I now say belongs to it, would give to American fishing vessels a privilege in Canadian ports that is both valuable and large, one that never before has been conceded. And this is no longer to be a mere extension of comity or hospitality which can be withdrawn at pleasure, but a right secured forever by solemn treaty stipulation.

I said that the President conceived that to be the meaning of the article. We will not discuss questions of grammar or whether the article is somewhat confused in the juxtaposition of its clauses, for we are dealing with things far more important than this. But I would ask, if, in the opinion of any Senators, such a meaning as I contend belongs to this clause is not perfectly apparent, and if a more restricted meaning belongs properly to this clause of Article XI, why will they not consent to vote for an amendment which will make perfectly clear what may be obscure, and really put beyond cavil and beyond doubt what this article means? For I say very candidly to the Senator that if it does not mean what I say it does I am very much mistaken, and I am not willing to vote for the confirmation of this treaty without voting for its amendment in that respect.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator must be aware that Sir Charles Tupper distinctly repudiates any such interpretation as he now puts upon the article. The Senator will allow me to read a clause from Sir Charles Tupper's remarks. He says:

I say that in a case of a vessel which is homeward bound and requires provisions or needful supplies to take her home, if, for instance, she has some of her rigging carried away or some of her salt washed overboard, and is obliged to lose her voyage in going back to adistant port to refit, a provision that she may obtain casual and needful supplies of that kind was demanded in the interests of good neighborhood, and it was not going too far to say that we would allow them to enjoy those advantages.

Mr. GRAY. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator permit me just one moment?

Mr. GRAY. Very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether he finds in Sir Charles Tupper's speech or in the article itself anything to give the slightest indication that these needful supplies and outfit are to be granted except for vessels having taken a license for the homeward voyage?

Mr. GRAY. I say that I find in the plain words of Article XI just the meaning which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] says he does not find. I do not find that Sir Charles Tupper in the language quoted from his speech meant to say that the article in question had any narrower meaning than the one I gave to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator please wait one moment? Sir Charles Tupper was defending this treaty against adverse criticism in the Canadian Parliament—defending the treaty against the criticism of giving away the rights of Canadian fishermen. I would ask the Senator from New Hampshire, although it is a little irrelevant to the line of my present argument (for whatever Sir Charles Tupper says, we are dealing with the treaty and not his speech), what interpretation can be put upon this language:

If, for instance, she has some of her rigging carried away, or some of her salt washed overboard, and is obliged to lose her voyage in going back to a distant port to refit.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. GRAY. Wait a moment—

a provision that she may obtain casual and needful supplies of that kind—

And so on. Now, then, if going back to her home port was the thing to be remedied, was the thing to be avoided by giving her this privilege, then plainly he did not mean that this license to purchase casual and needful supplies was to be limited to vessels on the homeward voyage.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would like to ask the Senator——

Mr. GRAY. I do not wish to consume the few minutes I now have upon a matter as irrelevant as Sir Charles Tupper's speech.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the clause in Sir Charles Tupper's speech to mean that the article applies to a ship that has started on her homeward voyage and is not to go back to any Canadian port to get supplies or refit. I want to ask the Senator whether the article does not accord facilities for the purchase of needful provisions only to vessels which have obtained a license in the manner aforesaid, whether there is any privilege given in that article excepting to vessels that have taken the license for the homeward voyage?

Mr. GRAY. I will tell the Senator in a very few words, because I have no time to dwell on this irrelevant matter of Sir Charles Tupper's speech, if the Senator will give me his attention.

The first member of that clause of the article provides for licenses to vessels on the homeward voyage to purchase such provisions and supplies as are ordinarily sold to trading vessels, which shall be granted promptly on application and without charge to such vessels. Now I read:

Such vessels——

Mr. CHANDLER. "Having obtained"——

Mr. GRAY. Just wait—

Such vessels—

That is, such United States fishing vessels—

having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid——

Mr. CHANDLER. That is to go home.

Mr. GRAY. Well, no; let me put my interpretation on it.

Mr. CHANDLER. A license for the homeward voyage is the only license mentioned in the foregoing articles.

Mr. GRAY. A license for the homeward voyage is the only license mentioned in the first clause.

And such vessels—

Now, I interpret that to mean such United States fishing vessels—

having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid—

Shall have the right to buy provisions at all times.

That is, having obtained licenses upon application and without charge, not necessarily, certainly, licenses obtained for a home voyage. I admit that that clause of the article is susceptible, by a dialectical ingenuity, of a construction, of a meaning such as the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] has put upon it. But I do not think, taking the whole article together, that it is the natural meaning or the obvious meaning. But however that may be, I say to the Senator from New York that I will, with him, vote to make that article so plain that no one can object to it on that score, and put it beyond the range of cavil or of doubt.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator can propose any amendment he sees fit.

Mr. GRAY. Of course I can, but I am appealing to the Senator from New York as a fair man, who objects to an article on a specific ground, and I say to him that I agree with him that if that is to be the interpretation which he puts upon it that fairly belongs to that article, it is not such an article as ought to be in this treaty. Then I say to him further that if he will propose an amendment that would make it what he says it should mean I will vote for it, and I think that it is a fair appeal to ask him whether he will vote for such an amendment if I should propose it?

Mr. EVARTS. I was proceeding to say that the Senator can move any amendment he pleases of this treaty, he being in favor of the treaty, while it would not be fair for me to move an amendment while, after it was made, the whole scope of the treaty would be unpalatable to me.

Mr. GRAY. Well, Mr. President, I can not say that I exactly expected that answer from the Senator from New York, for I believe the Senator to be a fair man, as he is an able and distinguished one, but I am still sure that the position that I take in regard to that article is a fair one, and is one that ought to commend itself to those who are opposing this treaty on the ground that Article XI is not as broad as its friends say it is. And when we have the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] consuming the last hour of the debate on that side in debating upon Article XI and Article XII, resting his whole objection, so far as he objects to the conceding part of this treaty, on these two articles, when I tell him that I am willing to vote for an amendment that will make it all that he pretends it should be, all that the Committee on Foreign Relations say that it ought to be, in order to be really a broad provision, one which would completely reverse the British contention for seventy years on this subject—when I tell him that I will vote for that, when I have shown, as I think I can say I have shown, that his objection to Article XII is utterly groundless, then what becomes of this debate between him and me? Where is the question now in regard to the ratification of this treaty? Those are the two articles upon which the Senator from New York has expended most of his time in objecting to this treaty. I think that any fair, impartial listener to this debate, who is qualified to give a judgment, would have to say that the contention of the other side has been completely overthrown in regard to those two most important objections made by them.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator a question in regard to his suggestion that the argument of the Senator from New York was faulty in that the phrase "waters aforesaid," as used in the twelfth article, referred only to the waters mentioned in the first article. I wish to say that by such examination as I have been able to make of the treaty it seems to me that the Senator's assumption is entirely groundless, and that the "waters aforesaid," the phrase as used in the twelfth article, must refer to the Canadian waters, bays, and localities of the fishing as mentioned in all that precedes the twelfth article, and if that be so, or if it be doubtful that that be not so, then the Senator's reply to the Senator from New York is of no avail. I think if he will read the treaty he will find that I am quite correct.

Mr. GRAY. I had passed from that, Mr. President; but I should be glad to answer the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], so far as his remarks require answering, if I had not limited myself to a very few moments. I am very sure that if he will read the treaty attentively, and without bias, he will agree with me, for I have that opinion of him——

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. GRAY. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me again, for I have to go on. I should very gladly submit to the interruption if I had ten minutes more time, but I am sure the Senator will excuse me.

Mr. BLAIR. I would ask the Senator if he would have me read the treaty with less bias than he has read it himself?

Mr. GRAY. No, I would not. I would ask the Senator to read it without any more bias than I have read it myself. That is all.

Mr. BLAIR. I will try to do so. I think I have done so.

Mr. GRAY. Now, Mr. President, I can not trespass more than a few moments longer on the time which remains for the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] who has all along expected to close this debate.

I think that what I have said in regard to the two points has been sufficient—at any rate I am vain enough to think so—to convince all Senators who for the first time have had their attention directed to the articles of this treaty and to what it really attempts to secure and does secure, to convince them that this is a most important achievement in our diplomacy, and is not open to the denunciations that have been so unsparingly heaped upon it.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has consumed a great deal of time in this debate in objecting to any negotiation at all with Great Britain, as it appears to me, for instead of dwelling upon what has been done and accomplished by this treaty, he has confined his remarks largely to a recital of what he calls the outrages, some of them undeniable and some of them very questionable, committed by Canadian authorities upon American fishermen in those waters.

Now I have not attempted to consider as I should like in deference to the Senator from Massachusetts to have considered the questions that he raised this afternoon. But in connection with these seizures which he had examined—a large number in a list which we have not time to examine now and which he says will be printed—he spoke of forty-six of them, saying that they were cases of refusal to furnish facility for provisions and supplies. And yet he tells us that this treaty does not remove any of the causes of complaint or diminish the probability of seizures on grounds upon which they have heretofore been made in those waters. Yet as to forty-six cases on the list which he had he says the complaint was that they were for a refusal of facility to furnish provisions and supplies.

Now, I should like to ask Senators whether Article XI, as I contend it should be read—as it can be made to read; as the negotiators understood it to read—does not remove these causes of complaint, in the fact that it gives to all vessels at all times the right to obtain a license upon application and without charge, to purchase all needful provisions and supplies that are ordinarily sold to trading vessels?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator please state his authority for saying that the negotiators so understood it?

Mr. GRAY. I can. The President of the United States, who was the negotiator on our side, so far as he adopts the work of his subordinates, tells us that this Article XI means just what I say it means. I was just now, while the Senator was out, speaking upon Article XI.

Mr. HOAR. I have heard what the Senator said about it. I was not out.

Mr. GRAY. If it does not in the opinion of Senators mean what the President says it means, then I say we are here to co-operate with Senators on that side in inserting such an amendment as to put it beyond doubt or cavil.

Mr. HOAR. I have not been out of hearing of the Senator's voice. I have heard his remarks. My question to him was what his authority was for saying the negotiators so understood it?

Mr. GRAY. I say that the President of the United States was my authority, in his message, of course, I mean, for I have had no other communication with him. In his message communicating this treaty to the Senate he calls attention to Article XI, and he says about it just what I say.

Mr. BUTLER. And none of the negotiators have ever denied that construction.

Mr. GRAY. And none of the negotiators, as my friend from South Carolina says, have denied that construction. Sir Charles Tupper, in the language quoted by the Senator from New Hampshire, certainly does not deny it.

What then, Mr. President, is to be the position that Senators on that side would take after this attempt at negotiating a fair and reasonable treaty of interpretation of the convention of 1818 has been rejected, and we are thrown back into the condition of things in which we have been since the treaty of 1871 was abrogated, without any consensus between the two countries as to what the rights of the respective parties to that convention of 1818 are?

The Senator from New York says that it will be much better than it is with this treaty; that a condition of irritation, a condition that involves complaint, that gives opportunity under varying interpretations of treaty phrases for the seizure of American vessels, is a condition of things that is more desirable than a settlement and composure of such things!

Mr. EVARTS. Than such a settlement.

Mr. GRAY. That we are likely to be on better relations, and not worse, with Great Britain if this treaty should not be ratified! I must confess that that pleasing fancy of the Senator from New York makes no impression upon me; I wish it did. I should be glad to be in that happy frame of mind which he seems to be in, when he can calmly and with composure contemplate a condition of things that at any time may result in a difference which will be followed by a collision.

The Senator from New York said the other day that somebody on this side talked about war, and had threatened war. I have heard no threat of war. That we should be anxious as to the results of irritating questions between the two countries is not a menace of war. It is not that any Senator on this side of the Chamber fears war in the sense that he wishes to avoid it where there is just cause for it to come, or that there is any threat on the part of Great Britain of war, that I have ever heard. It is not that, but I will tell you what we fear. We do fear that the relations of this country with Great Britain may lapse into a condition, not in which she will declare war against us, but in which we may be compelled by a just regard to our honor, to our national reputation, to consider for ourselves the question of war with her, and for that reason, as a great, powerful, and magnanimous nation, I wanted to see my country placed in a position where she could say to all the world, "We desire to settle difficulties when they arise and to remove the causes of irritation and collision, and, so desiring and so offering, we are content then to leave the responsibility to others if war should actually come." It seems to me a poor and mean position to put this great country in that we sit here quarreling and nagging and making faces at these little provinces up there on our Northern and Northeastern border, that instead of seeking to compose we should be seeking to excite causes of difference, to exaggerate them, and to promote them. I do not dwell upon that picture with pleasure. It is not my idea of what this country ought to be amongst the nations of the earth.

It ought to be the great exemplar of that strength and self-containment which would advance the civilization and promote the happiness of all the dwellers upon the earth. It ought to be such that any man who was proud of his country, who loved her institutions, and whose heart swelled as he thought of her great and magnificent future, should feel and say, "This is the position for my country, great, strong, powerful, and filled with a brave and intelligent people, to assume toward all other nations of the earth, whether they be powerful or weak, great or small."

Now, Mr. President, I can not consume any more of the time of my friend from Alabama. I have trespassed, I am afraid, too long upon it already. Nor can I answer some of the questions of the Senator from Massachusetts which I had hoped to have time to answer. But I propose now to offer as an amendment to this treaty that in Article XI, in place of the word "such," on line 159, and before the word "vessel," on line 160, there be inserted the words "all United States fishing;" so it shall read:

And all United States fishing vessels having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid.

Mr. FRYE. You will have to strike out "in the manner aforesaid."

Mr. GRAY. Then strike it out.

Mr. FRYE. Let me call the Senator's attention——

Mr. GRAY. Just one moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAWES in the chair). The Chair understands that the motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. GRAY. Then I will give notice that I will offer such an amendment; and also, after the word "licenses," on line 160, to strike out "in the manner aforesaid;" so that the section may read:

And all United States fishing vessels, having obtained licenses, shall also be accorded, upon all occasions, such facilities for the purchase of casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to the trading vessels.

And so on.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Delaware why he would strike out the clause as to the manner of obtaining licenses?

Mr. GRAY. I only intend to make the article read as I think it was intended it should read. Where the negotiators for some good reason supposed it was necessary in according this privilege that a license should be had, inasmuch as this was an exceptional state of things for a fishing vessel to have a trading license, they provided that a license should be given in certain cases upon a certificate to a vessel as being entitled to a privilege under this treaty. I do not know any other reason. It certainly can not be a very serious objection that a privilege should be got upon a license without charge. I think that amendment will remove the most serious objection of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations—I mean that that seems to me of all that was said in that report to be the only place where a criticism legitimately hung on this treaty. As to all the rest of the objections, they have been treated by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I can not longer occupy his time.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire of the Chair how much time I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of the two hours, not counting the preliminary talk, one-half hour was consumed by the opponents of the treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. How much time, then, is left to me?

Mr. HOAR. I would say to the Chair that I looked at the clock when the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] ended, and called the attention of other Senators to it. It was then just half past 4. It was ten minutes past 4 when that Senator resumed his speech. He occupied twenty minutes after 4 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. How much time have I now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can ascertain that as well as the Chair.

Mr. MORGAN. I simply wanted to know what was the understanding of the Senate about it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has just an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If twenty minutes were taken from the two hours, the Senator would have until twenty minutes after 6 o'clock, and if the Senate adjourns at 6 o'clock the Senator would have twenty minutes in the morning.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has one hour in all.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] did not occupy an hour, and we had two hours in which to close.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless the Chair has made a mistake in keeping the time, the Senator from Alabama is entitled to an hour and twenty minutes.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator has a right to speak until 6 o'clock without reference to the new arrangement; that is forty minutes, and he gets from me twenty minutes, which I consumed. That comes to an hour.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Delaware occupied a half hour, and we have two hours in which to close. I do not understand how that leaves me only an hour.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Delaware has occupied an hour with the exception of interruptions.

Mr. GRAY. Oh, no. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the Senator from New York stopped at half past 4, and I spoke until about a quarter past 5.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Delaware spoke fifty minutes.

Mr. FRYE. The Senate, by unanimous consent, goes into executive session immediately after the reading of the Journal. To-morrow morning the reading of the Journal will certainly be completed by ten minutes past 11, and I do not believe any Senator will object to the Senator from Alabama occupying the time from then until the vote is taken 12 o'clock.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know that the Senator from Maine can say that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware began at half past 4 and closed at a quarter past 5. That is three quarters of an hour, as the Chair understands.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, Mr. President, I will proceed. In the conduct of this debate it has fallen to my lot to speak at odd times when other Senators were not prepared to proceed with the debate, and in that way I have been compelled to break in fragments the remarks that I desired to make, and so have not had an opportunity for making a consecutive argument upon the articles of the treaty. I never attempted it until I took the floor on Friday, when I was cut off by an interference with the arrangement for closing the debate which the Senate knows about. I have deferred a discussion of the merits of the treaty until I could hear from Senators on the other side, and until we could get out of the way a concerted series of collateral and unnecessary issues under which it has evidently been the purpose to bury this question and confuse the public mind.

When I was cut off to-day by our agreement I had a hope that I should have an opportunity of going on until I could get through with my argument this evening. If Senators do not wish to stay until so late an hour, I suppose the Presiding Officer will remain. We can get a prothonotary to take down my remarks, and I can have the benefit of a part of the time of which I was deprived by the adjournment over Saturday, by the action of Senators on this side, in disregard of the unanimous consent of the Senate.

When I was taken from the floor this morning under that broken agreement, I had taken the position, which I reiterate now, as it has been reiterated by other Senators, that in the delimitations made in the treaty of 1888 Great Britain gave up two-thirds of her pretensions in regard to the area of the renunciation in the treaty of 1818, and we gave up one-third, so that there was a reciprocity, a sufficient reciprocity in that feature of the treaty of 1888 for excluding the American fishermen from certain bays that are therein designated, and with reference to which certain fixed delimitations are made in the treaty itself.

I was also proceding to show that some of these people who reside back in the very interior of these countries to which these long bays extended were doubtless anxious to have shut out from intercourse and communication with them foreign fishermen, because they have had a great many severe trials on this subject, not the least among them being that Sunday incident of our fishermen in Fortune Bay, in reference to which the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] is said to have achieved such a wonderful victory in getting some $75,000 for a Sunday morning's fishing there by our people. Smuggling has been carried on, according to the British contention and British representation, freely in those deep bays and secluded creeks and coves of the rock-bound shores, and other practices by foreign fishermen that were offensive to the moral sense of the quiet and orderly Acadians who live in quiet simplicity in the hamlets described by Mr. Waggerman.

It is a subject to which the Government of the United States has had its attention called by the British Government on several occasions, and I take it that it is the right and duty of the Government of Great Britain, so far as it may be able to do so, to regulate the approach of vessels that have a commission to approach the coast in such a manner as that they shall not be engaged in smuggling or have opportunity to smuggle or to rudely disturb the peace of those people. I, therefore, have not felt that we were giving up anything that was of any real value to us, and were securing them against intrusion, because the Committee on Foreign Relations have said that the fishing there was of no value at all, and that has been reiterated by the Senator from Maine time and again, as to the value of the right of fishery in these bays. In some of these discursive debates that we have had here I have also called attention to the fact that the British fish commission have established fish hatcheries and propagation establishments within the bay of Miramichi and some others of these bays the names of which I can not recall to mind, and it was doubtless with the view of protecting these fishing establishments, which are for the benefit of all mankind, that some of these fixed delimitations were put into this treaty.

But, sir, the right of fishing in those bays was a trifling matter and it has been so asserted by your Committee on Foreign Relations and by the Senators who oppose this treaty. And that surely can not be a substantial argument against a delimitation which includes bays that are less than 10 miles wide. The example for that, as I have had occasion to mention in some remarks made by me heretofore, is found in the arrangements between maritime countries in their modern treaties relating to fishing. They have changed the rule so as to shut out foreign fishermen from access to the coasts of their bays that are less than 10 miles wide, and they will not permit any fishing ship to come within 3 miles of a line drawn across the mouth of a bay which measures less than 10 miles in width. There is no reason that I know of why the American Government should not adopt that particular arrangement, especially as we have to make some arrangement before a great while, I suppose, with reference to our Alaska fisheries—fisheries that are of very great value and to which I have often adverted. If we have to go over to the Pacific with a line 3 miles from our shore, established upon a principle of acknowledged international law, we are to admit the people of all nations to come and fish in our waters, and shall give that up to foreign countries without any reciprocal advantage at all. We will do this recklessly upon a conceded principle of international law that this Senate is about to decree; we shall give up some of the most important rights and advantages that this nation can have in the future.

With those remarks I pass from the subject of the delimitations in this treaty, making a reference, however, to the rights of the fishing vessels on our coast, under our own laws, which I will now read:

SEC. 4365. Whenever a vessel, licensed for carrying on the fisheries, is found within 3 leagues of the coast, with merchandise of foreign growth or manufacture, exceeding the value of $500, without having such permission as is directed by the preceding section, such vessel, together with the merchandise of foreign growth or manufacture imported therein, shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture.

Some of the Senators who have been discussing this matter this afternoon, some of the strongest and ablest Senators on that side, have indicated the straits to which they have been driven by the stress of this debate in a way that is very remarkable. The have culled out from this very long debate the points on which they wanted to make a final stand after they had really been routed horse, foot, and dragoons from the other points in the case; and the Senator from New York submitted that fifth article of the treaty and committed himself to propositions here, sir, which would do no great credit to a mere novice in diplomacy and in legal construction. This treaty relates only to those portions of the waters from which we had been excluded by our renunciation in the treaty of 1818. That is distinctly stated in the first article. Then following along in consecutive order and making no reference to any other waters except those from which we have been excluded, and, in fact, having no occasion to make reference to any other waters, for this treaty touches no other waters than those, the portion of it regarding delimitation, Article V, provides:

Nothing in this treaty shall be construed to include within the common waters any such interior portions of any bays, creeks, or harbors as can not be reached from the sea without passing within the 3 marine miles mentioned in Article I of the convention of October 20, 1818.

That the Senator from New York said was a navigation clause—a clause that prohibited navigation. It is a clause put in there merely for the purpose of indicating with absolute certainty that these waters, the shores of which stand within 6 miles of each other, are not waters to any part of which any article of this new treaty was to apply. Then going forward to Article XII of the treaty the negotiators say:

ARTICLE XII.

Fishing vessels of Canada and Newfoundland shall have on the Atlantic coast of the United States all the privileges reserved and secured by this treaty to United States fishing vessels in the aforesaid waters of Canada and Newfoundland.

And there the Senator from New York in his distress finds himself compelled to reason on a forced construction of Article XII of this treaty, and to ignore the express words of the first article in order to find a ground of opposition to this treaty, after minute search that is utterly untenable, a treaty that would give the people of the United States, if it should be ratified, such very important advantages. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], however, disposes of that matter so completely that argument is absolutely unnecessary.

The ninth article starts off on an independent subject. It says:

Nothing in this treaty shall interrupt or restrict navigation of the Strait of Canso by fishing vessels of the United States.

Sufficient reference has been made in the instructions given by Mr. Fish to the Joint High Commission to show that that Strait of Canso in 1871 was a disputed matter between the United States and Great Britain, and especially it was disputed in respect of the right of our fishing vessels to go through that strait. Was there any harm, or can there be any harm, in clearing up that question? This treaty makes it entirely clear so far as fishing vessels are concerned; and what is the real ground of objection to that? Mr. President, there can be none. It is idle to say that some national sensibility is offended by our concession that there could be a dispute about our right to pass with all our ships through the Gut of Canso. We had paid more than $3,000 light dues there before the treaty of 1871 was made, and Mr. Fish called the attention of our Joint High Commissioners to the fact in his instructions to them.

ARTICLE X.

United States fishing vessels entering the bays or harbors referred to in Article I of this treaty shall conform to harbor regulations common to them and to fishing vessels of Canada or of Newfoundland.

There can certainly be no objection to that, requiring them to conform to the harbor regulations which apply to the Canadian vessels and also to the French vessels or any other vessels that may enter those ports.

They need not report, enter, or clear, when putting into such bays or harbors for shelter or repairing damages, nor when putting into the same, outside the limits of established ports of entry, for the purpose of purchasing wood or of obtaining water.

Is not that an advantage given to our fishermen, even above the advantage that we confer upon foreign fishermen or foreign vessels of any kind entering our ports. We require them to report, to enter, and to clear when entering into such bays and harbors for any purpose at all, for shelter, for repairing damages, for obtaining wood and water, for commercial purposes, and what not; so that if we would put the British fishing vessels under our statutes upon a parity of privileges with our own, that article would be found of great advantage to our fishermen. We do not do that. We deny to them privileges which are secured in this Article X by treaty obligations in favor of our fishermen. The advantage to us under this clause is palpable.

I read the exception as to reporting, etc.:

Except that any such vessel remaining more than twenty-four hours, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, within any such port, or communicating with the shore therein, may be required to report, enter, or clear; and no vessel shall be excused hereby from giving due information to boarding officers.

Now, compare that with our own statutes. It is claimed here that all that is demanded by the gentlemen who want commercial privileges or privileges of hospitality is that there shall be extended to our ships in Canadian ports the same hospitality that we extend to theirs. I submit the different statutes which apply to that part of this case to show that when vessels enter our ports and harbors for any purpose whatever, even those which are in distress, they are required to report within twenty-four hours and to enter.

SEC. 2773. If any vessel, having arrived within the limits of any collection-district, from any foreign port, departs, or attempts to depart from the same, unless to proceed on her way to some more interior district to which she may be bound, before report or entry shall have been made by the master with the collector of some district, the master shall be liable to a penalty of $400; and any collector, naval officer, surveyor, or commander of any revenue-cutter may cause such vessel to be arrested and brought back to the most convenient port of the United States. If, however, it is made to appear by the oath of the master, and of the person next in command, or by other sufficient proof to the satisfaction of the collector of the district within which such vessel shall afterwards come, or to the satisfaction of the court in which the prosecution for such penalty may be had, that the departure or attempt to depart was occasioned by stress of weather, pursuit or duress of enemies, or other necessity, the penalty imposed by this section shall not be incurred.

SEC. 2774. Within twenty-four hours after the arrival of any vessel, from any foreign port, at any port of the United States established by law, at which an officer of customs resides, or within any harbor, inlet, or creek thereof, if the hours of business at the office of the chief officer of the customs at such port will permit, or as soon thereafter as such hours will permit, the master shall repair to such office, and make report to the chief officer, of the arrival of the vessel; and he shall, within forty-eight hours after such arrival, make a further report in writing, to the collector of the district, which report shall be in the form, and shall contain all the particulars required to be inserted in, and verified like, a manifest. Every master who shall neglect or omit to make either of such reports and declarations, or to verify any such declaration as required, or shall not fully comply with the true intent and meaning of this section, shall, for each offense, be liable to a penalty of $1,000.

SEC. 2867. If after the arrival of any vessel laden with merchandise and bound to the United States, within the limits of any collection district, or within 4 leagues of the coast, any part of the cargo of such vessel shall be unladen for any purpose whatever, before such vessel has come to the proper place for the discharge of her cargo, or some part thereof, and has been there duly authorized by the proper officer of the customs to unlade the same, the master of such vessel and the mate, or other person next in command, shall respectively be liable to a penalty of $1,000 for each such offense, and the merchandise so unladen shall be forfeited, except in case of some unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress of weather. In case of such unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress, the master of such vessel shall give notice to, and together with, two or more of the officers or mariners on board such vessel, of whom the mate or other person next in command shall be one, shall make proof upon oath before the collector, or other chief officer of the customs, of the district within the limits of which such accident, necessity, or distress happened, or before the collector or other chief officer of the collection district within the limits of which such vessel shall first afterward arrive, if the accident, necessity, or distress happened not within the limits of any district, but within 4 leagues of the coast of the United States. The collector, or other chief officer, is hereby authorized and required to administer such oath.

How does this, our hospitality, compare with this clause of the treaty, or with the complaints of Senators about Canadian inhospitality? If our ships are repaired under the treaty of 1818, or under this treaty, we charge a duty of 50 per cent. on the repairs.

SEC. 3114. The equipments, or any part thereof, including boats, purchased for, or the expenses of repairs made in a foreign country upon a vessel enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States to engage in the foreign and coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States, or a vessel intended to be employed in such trade, shall, on the first arrival of such vessel in any port of the United States, be liable to entry and the payment of an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent. on the cost thereof in such foreign country; and if the owner or master of such vessel shall willfully and knowingly neglect or fail to report, make entry, and pay duties as herein required, such vessel, with her tackle, apparel, and furniture, shall be seized and forfeited.

A fisherman is scarcely wise who takes out a license to touch and trade under such penalties of forfeiture for non-payment of 50 per cent. customs dues, when he returns home after his vessel has been wrecked in Canadian waters and repaired in Canadian ports under the treaty of 1818. A stern issue is anxiously noticed by Senators arising upon the fact that this treaty requires the number of the fishing vessel to be painted on her nose. The debate here has been lively and profound, by turns, on this method of identifying ships. It will be instructive to know what our statute requires on this subject:

SEC. 4334. Every licensed vessel shall have her name, and the port to which she belongs, painted on her stern, in the manner prescribed for registered vessels; and if any licensed vessel be found without such painting, the owner thereof shall be liable to a penalty of $20. [See section 4178.]

A fisherman who prefers to conceal the name and number of his vessel would probably agree with Senators who take a stern view of this question, but I think that question has been magnified into undue prominence through the sensibilities of some Senators on a matter of etiquette.

I do not like the next section of our statute on this subject. It has a tendency to bring our moiety system into disrepute.

SEC. 4178. The name of every registered vessel, and of the port to which she shall belong, shall be painted on her stern, on a black ground, in white letters, of not less than 3 inches in length. If any vessel of the United States shall be found without having her name and the name of the port to which she belongs so painted, the owner or owners shall be liable to a penalty of $50; recoverable one-half to the person giving the information thereof, the other half to the use of the United States.

If Canada had enacted a law in these words against our ships, we should have had a war by this time over these stern issues. I am grateful to our negotiators that they have transferred these ship-marks to the noses of our vessels. It will save us from the moiety hunters.

I suppose that Canada must have some law like the following to justify or excuse the great number of boardings of vessels about which the Senator from Massachusetts complains:

SEC. 4336. Any officer concerned in the collection of the revenue may at all times inspect the enrollment or license of any vessel; and if the master of any such vessel shall not exhibit the same, when required by such officer, he shall be liable to a penalty of $100.

That is almost barbarous, but it is not harder than the iron doors with which we close our doors when "thieves would break through and steal." We seem to resemble the Canadians in our diligent guards against smugglers.

SEC. 3125. If the master of any enrolled or licensed vessel shall neglect or fail to comply with any of the provisions or requirements of the nine preceding sections, such master shall forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of $20 for each and every failure or neglect, and for which sum the vessel shall be liable, and may be summarily proceeded against, by way of libel, in any district court of the United States.

That is a general sweeping penalty wisely devised to keep our shipmasters awake to their duty in obeying the law.

I regret that these things are needed, but such has been the judgment of all ages amongst maritime powers.

We are also particular in our laws about landing passengers and baggage.

SEC. 3121. The master of any vessel with cargo, passengers, or baggage from any foreign port shall obtain a permit and comply with existing laws before discharging or landing the same.

A fisherman can not land on our coasts without a permit. Why do we claim this privilege in Canadian ports? Why do we rage with Republican heat when our fishermen are arrested for going ashore without a permit? Mr. Bayard, however, has healed this national wound in this treaty if we would accept it.

SEC. 4364. Whenever any vessel, licensed for carrying on the fishery, is intended to touch and trade at any foreign port, it shall be the duty of the master or owner to obtain permission for that purpose from the collector of the district where such vessel may be, previous to her departure, and the master of every such vessel shall deliver like manifests, and make like entries, both of the vessel and of the merchandise on board, within the same time, and under the same penalty, as are by law provided for vessels of the United States arriving from a foreign port.

So far as I am informed by the facts that have been disclosed in this debate, no American vessel licensed to fish and trade that has made her manifest and left it on record with the collector of the port from which she departed has ever yet presented that manifest and that permit to a Canadian custom-house and demanded to be admitted as a vessel of commerce. They do not go out with cargoes; they go out for fishing purposes alone, with a mere outfit for those ventures.

SEC. 4365. Whenever a vessel, licensed for carrying on the fisheries, is found within 3 leagues of the coast, with merchandise of foreign growth or manufacture, exceeding the value of $500, without having such permission as is directed by the preceding section, such vessel, together with the merchandise of foreign growth or manufacture imported therein, shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture.

Suppose one of our fishing vessels going to Canada is there found violating these statutes, would we not fight Great Britain if, under a colonial statute, in the same words, one of her provinces should inflict these penalties upon our ship and for these causes?

I do not find any exception in favor of Canadian fishing vessels in the following statute:

SEC. 2774. Within twenty-four hours after the arrival of any vessel, from any foreign port, at any port of the United States established by law, at which an officer of the customs resides, or within any harbor, inlet, or creek thereof, if the hours of business at the office of the chief officer of the customs at such port will permit, or as soon thereafter as such hours will permit, the master shall repair to such office, and make report to the chief officer, of the arrival of the vessel; and he shall, within forty-eight hours after such arrival, make a further report in writing, to the collector of the district, which report shall be in the form, and shall contain all the particulars required to be inserted in, and verified like, a manifest. Every master who shall neglect or omit to make either of such reports and declarations, or to verify any such declaration as required, or shall not fully comply with the true intent and meaning of this section, shall, for each offense, be liable to a penalty of $1,000.

The treaty of 1818 does not exempt our vessels from making such reports and entries. But this much-reviled treaty of 1888 provides a full release from these duties for the benefit of our fishermen.

Here is the sort of bail or replevin we give to property that we seize for confiscation:

SEC. 3086. All merchandise or property of any kind seized under the provisions of any law of the United States relating to the customs, shall, unless otherwise provided for by law, be placed and remain in the custody of the collector or other principal officer of the customs of the district in which the seizure shall be made, to abide adjudication by the proper tribunal, or other disposition according to law.

I can not see that Canada has greatly exceeded our barbarity, as their conduct is styled, in this method of holding property subject to the judgment of our courts.

Neither are we less careful than they are in collecting the costs under prosecutions for violations of their customs regulations:

SEC. 3089. Whenever a seizure, condemnation, and sale of merchandise takes place within the United States, and the value thereof is less than $250, that part of the forfeiture which accrues to the United States, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied to the payment of the cost of prosecution.

Is not this a strong temptation to the moiety men?

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] would call this legislative bribery if it was found in a Canadian statute.

Here is another sweeping clause to fill up every chink that might otherwise afford a means of escape to customs delinquents:

SEC. 4380. All penalties and forfeitures which shall be incurred by virtue of this title may be sued for, prosecuted, and recovered as penalties and forfeitures incurred by virtue of the laws relating to the collection of duties, and shall be appropriated in like manner; except when otherwise expressly prescribed.

Article X continues:

They shall not be liable in any such bays or harbors for compulsory pilotage.

Could we extend to the Canadian fishermen those same privileges in the United States? Those States which have laws requiring compulsory pilotage would not be at all satisfied. In fact we have no right under the Constitution, as I understand it, to break down the State laws in respect of compulsory pilotage; and the States which have such statutes would object most seriously to having their statutes repealed by a treaty or by an act of Congress. But here in this treaty we secure to our fishermen in all these Canadian states, which have much the same autonomy of government that we have, the privilege of entering into their bays and harbors without any liability for compulsory pilotage.

Nor, when therein for the purpose of shelter, of repairing damages, of purchasing wood, or obtaining water, shall they be liable to harbor dues, tonnage dues, buoy dues, light dues, or other similar dues; but this enumeration shall not permit other charges inconsistent with the enjoyment of the liberties reserved or secured by the convention of October 20, 1818.

Here our statutes, which I also submit, bristle with requirements in regard to harbor dues, tonnage dues, buoy dues, and light dues, and other similar dues, which we impose upon British fishermen and British commercial vessels when they enter our ports. Ours are to go there, though, under a treaty obligation without paying any of these dues. Is not that an advantage in favor of the American fishermen, and a very decided one.

Our laws provided that—

SEC. 4225. A duty of 50 cents per ton, to be denominated "light-money," shall be levied and collected on all vessels not of the United States which may enter the ports of the United States. Such light-money shall be levied and collected in the same manner and under the same regulations as the tonnage duties.

We exempt our fishing vessels from tonnage tax, while we tax Canadian fishermen.

SEC. 4220. No vessel belonging to any citizen of the United States, trading from one port within the United States to another port within the United States, or employed in the bank, whale, or other fisheries, shall be subject to tonnage tax or duty if such vessel be licensed, registered, or enrolled. (See section 2793.)

This treaty relieves this unseemly disparity, and gives to our fishermen in Canadian ports what our laws deny to Canadian fishermen in our ports.

The Senator from New York can trace no civil jurisdiction in this statute to the distance of 12 miles from our shores.

SEC. 2760. The officers of the revenue-cutters shall respectively be deemed officers of the customs, and shall be subject to the direction of such collectors of the revenue, or other officers thereof, as from time to time shall be designated for that purpose. They shall go on board all vessels which arrive within the United States, or within 4 leagues of the coast thereof, if bound for the United States, and search and examine the same, and every part thereof, and shall demand, receive, and certify the manifests required to be on board certain vessels, shall affix and put proper fastenings on the hatches and other communications with the hold of any vessel, and shall remain on board such vessels until they arrive at the port or place of their destination.

If it is not civil jurisdiction, rightfully exercised, it is a forcible trespass, and would be piracy if the intent was capture or plunder and no governmental authority supported the invasion on the high seas.

Is this the exercise of civil jurisdiction in the fringe of the 3-mile limit? If so, what sort of jurisdiction is it beyond that limit? I read further:

SEC. 2765. Whenever any vessel liable to seizure or examination does not bring-to, on being required to do so, or on being chased by any cutter or boat which has displayed the pendant and ensign prescribed for vessels in the revenue service, the master of such cutter or boat may fire at or into such vessel which does not bring-to after such pendant and ensign has been hoisted and a gun has been fired by such cutter or boat as a signal; and such master, and all persons acting by or under his direction, shall be indemnified from any penalties or actions for damages for so doing. If any person is killed or wounded by such firing, and the master is prosecuted or arrested therefor, he shall be forthwith admitted to bail. [See section 4843.]

I can not think of a higher jurisdiction than this, or of greater immunity to an officer who may take life in trespassing upon an innocent ship.

I am astonished that we should carp at Canadian laws regulating arrests when we give indemnity to our revenue officers in cases like these.

I read further:

SEC. 970. When, in any prosecution commenced on account of the seizure of any vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, made by any collector or other officer, under any act of Congress authorizing such seizure, judgment is rendered for the claimant, but it appears to the court that there was reasonable cause of seizure, the court shall cause a proper certificate thereof to be entered, and the claimant shall not, in such case, be entitled to costs, nor shall the person who made the seizure, nor the prosecutor, be liable to suit or judgment on account of such suit or prosecution: Provided, That the vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise be, after judgment, forthwith returned to such claimant or his agent.

Here we pardon the offender and condone the offense if probable cause for a wrongful seizure is found by the court.

Our strictures on Canadian laws are in bad taste when we read our own enactments.

See how we, like the Canadians, indemnify the men who execute our laws against costs:

SEC. 971. If, in any suit against an officer or other person executing or aiding or assisting in the seizure of goods, under any act providing for or regulating the collection of duties on imports or tonnage, the plaintiff is nonsuited, or judgment passed against him, the defendant shall recover double costs.

See how we punish with double costs one who fails in his complaint against our officers.

When the claimant wins his suit we do not allow him to have his property until he pays his costs:

SEC. 979. When judgment is rendered in favor of the claimant of any vessel or other property seized on behalf of the United States, and libeled or informed against as forfeited under any law thereof, he shall be entitled to possession of the same when his own costs are paid.

This is almost as bad as the statutes of Canada that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has examined, after Mr. Seward, Mr. Fish, Mr. EVARTS, and Mr. Frelinghuysen had allowed them to be utterly forgotten for twenty-five years.

Now we come to Article XI, about which there has been debate here this afternoon.

ARTICLE XI.

United States fishing vessels entering the ports, bays, and harbors of the eastern and northeastern coasts of Canada or of the coasts of Newfoundland under stress of weather or other casualty may unload, reload, transship, or sell, subject to customs laws and regulations, all fish on board when such unloading, transshipment, or sale is made necessary as incidental to repairs, and may replenish outfits, provisions, and supplies damaged or lost by disaster; and in case of death or sickness shall be allowed all needful facilities, including the shipping of crews.

That is called hospitality.

I read for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the Senate the state of the law in the United States upon the subject of hospitality what this barbarous Government does in regard to vessels which are brought in in a state of distress:

SEC. 2867. If after the arrival of any vessel laden with merchandise and bound to the United States, within the limits of any collection district, or within 4 leagues of the coast, any part of the cargo of such vessel shall be unladen, for any purpose whatever, before such vessel has come to the proper place for the discharge of her cargo, or some part thereof, and has been there duly authorized by the proper officer of the customs to unlade the same, the master of such vessel and the mate, or other person next in command, shall respectively be liable to a penalty of $1,000 for each such offense, and the merchandise so unladen shall be forfeited, except in case of some unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress of weather. In case of such unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress, the master of such vessel shall give notice to, and, together with two or more of the officers or mariners on board such vessel, of whom the mate or other person next in command shall be one, shall make proof upon oath before the collector or other chief officer of the customs of the district, within the limits of which such accident, necessity, or distress happened, or before the collector, or other chief officer of the collection-district, within the limits of which such vessel shall first afterward arrive, if the accident, necessity, or distress happened not within the limits of any district, but within 4 leagues of the coast of the United States. The collector, or other chief officer, is hereby authorized and required to administer such oath.

SEC. 2868. If any merchandise, so unladen from on board any such vessel, shall be put or received into any other vessel, except in the case of such accident, necessity, or distress, to be so notified and proved, the master of any such vessel into which the merchandise shall be so put and received, and every other person aiding and assisting therein, shall be liable to a penalty of treble the value of the merchandise, and the vessel in which they shall be so put shall be forfeited.

The provisions connected with the unloading of vessels in distress show that we exercise the most complete and arbitrary vigilance over these ships. We put them in the charge of an officer the moment they land, and they are to remain in his custody until the vessels are unloaded and the cargo is put into a warehouse or is otherwise disposed of.

So when we come to speak about the hospitalities which are secured in Article XI and the natural hospitalities which are due from every maritime power to every other one in the world, and come to look at our own statutes upon that subject, we find that we have gained in favor of our fishermen rights and privileges when they are in distress, and shall enter the ports of Canada, which are far in advance of any we give to vessels of any kind approaching a port of the United States. When we come to survey our own laws and to realize the fact of the privileges of hospitality the Canadian fisherman and the Canadian merchantman may have in our ports under our statutes, and we find they are so far short of the privileges secured in Article XI in favor of our fishermen going into Canadian ports, I think it is time we had paused and considered whether we are not stultifying ourselves.

Then comes this license question about which the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and others think there may be some difficulty of construction. The President of the United States in his message accompanying this treaty says in respect to that:

The articles permitting our fishermen to obtain provisions and the ordinary supplies of trading vessels on their homeward voyages, and under which they are accorded the further and even more important privilege on all occasions of purchasing such casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to trading vessels are of great importance and value.

Upon that the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations say:

And if such a really broad provision as is supposed was intended to be inserted in the treaty—one which was intended to completely reverse the whole British pretension upon the subject and put our fishing vessels, for all purposes of provisions and supplies, upon the same footing that British fishing vessels occupy in the United States and that American trading vessels do in the British provinces—it certainly should, and probably would, have been stated in language incapable of sincere misunderstanding.

Whether the misunderstanding may be sincere, I do not question it in that particular at all. At the same time it seems to me that it is the plainest language almost that could be employed to indicate that vessels homeward bound have the right of taking out the license without the payment of any fees to obtain supplies such as are ordinarily sold to trading vessels, and also such vessels, United States vessels, not homeward bound vessels, but the vessels last named in the clause preceding.

And such vessels, having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid—

How in the manner aforesaid? By making an application and getting it without fee or reward. That is the whole matter—shall also be accorded upon all occasions—

Whether homeward bound or outward bound, it makes no difference what the occasion is—such facilities for the purchase of casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to the trading vessels.

There the words "casual or needful provisions" are the words which mark the right. A man can not go and throw his provisions overboard or go without provisions into a port there and seek to buy in the Canadian ports; but if having gone upon his voyage some casualty or some necessity arises, if something of course that was unexpected should arise——

Mr. GRAY. Not necessarily unexpected.

Mr. MORGAN. If something that would probably be unexpected should arise, then he has the right upon all occasions by taking out a license, without fee or reward, to purchase such supplies as are ordinarily granted to trading vessels.

It is suggested, why should he take out a license at all? Merely from the fact that it is necessary to identify him as the man who is a fisherman and who is entitled to this privilege under the treaty with Great Britain.

Mr. GEORGE. The license is to cost nothing.

Mr. MORGAN. The license is to cost nothing, but he is to take out a license as a means of identification, not only convenient to the Canadian Government, but also convenient to the Government of the United States in the event of the denial or refusal of any such privilege as this guarantied under the treaty.

I do not think that it is necessary to amend this feature of the treaty, but we are here, as has been often stated and argued, as negotiators. We are trying, if we are doing our duty, or attempting to do it, to amend this negotiation so as to take out of it every shadow of doubt and misconstruction that is possible; and if there are provisions omitted from it which are necessary to be inserted for the better security of American rights it is our duty to put them in.

But the other side of this Chamber take the ground that this is a treaty which can not be improved. If the treaty can not be improved, Mr. President, what are you going to do when you have to make another negotiation? The Senator from Massachusetts in his concluding remarks to-day committed himself positively to the proposition that negotiation with Great Britain was necessary, and took issue with me upon my assertion, several times made in the Senate, as to whether the Committee on Foreign Relations had ever taken any different view of that question. He asked me to produce the passages from the report in which a different view had been taken. Here is one that of itself covers the subject fully. There are others, however, almost quite as emphatic and distinct as this one is. The committee proceed to say:

In view of the plain history of these transactions and of the matters hereinbefore stated, it does not seem to the committee that the existing matters of difficulty are subjects for treaty negotiations.

Mr. GEORGE. There can not be any dispute about that.

Mr. MORGAN. There can not be any dispute about it.

Not only that, but the President of the United States is criticised, and an attempt has been made to shame him. The question has been urged in this report as to whether he was a self-respecting President, because he entered upon negotiation, and the other question was raised and distinctly put whether he was not under the instructions of the Senate of the United States, and also the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, which forbade him from making any negotiations at all. Both these propositions are put at him in the report, both intended to convey to Great Britain, to the world, as well as to the executive department of this Government, the conclusion to be reached by the Senate on the rejection of the treaty, that from this time forward there was nothing but retaliation.

The Senator from Massachusetts also found it necessary to inquire of me if any Senator on that side of the Chamber had used the word "retaliation." Has there been a human being in the United States who has paid any attention to this debate or this controversy, taking form in 1886, who has not understood that our policy in respect of Great Britain was one of retaliation? No human being has ever thought of such a thing. The President of the United States in his reply to Mr. Steele, which is copied in the minority report of the committee, uses this language in regard to the attitude of the Government:

The act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, authorizing a course of retaliation, through executive action, in the event of a continuance on the part of the British-American authorities of unfriendly conduct and treaty violations affecting American fishermen, has devolved upon the President of the United States exceedingly grave and solemn responsibilities, comprehending highly important consequences to our national character and dignity, and involving extremely valuable commercial intercourse between the British possessions in North America and the people of the United States.

The President of the United States understood that act. He knew what its meaning was just as well as every Senator in this Chamber knows it now and knew it in 1887. He knew that it was intended to be an act of retaliation, and Mr. George Steele conceiving it to be such, picked out the subject of retaliation, and wrote to the President of the United States and urged upon him that he would confine the retaliation simply to the subject of fish, thereby seeking by indirection to put the prohibition upon fresh fish being imported into this country, which the Republican House of Representatives and Senate on various occasions both as legislators and as treaty-makers had made free. Nobody misunderstood that this was a mere oppugnation, a mere response. Everybody understood then and understands now that it is retaliation.

If after this treaty has been rejected the wrongs and injustices of which we have been complaining so much should be repeated the President of the United States, under the implied instruction of the action of the Senate, would scarcely have the liberty of an option any longer in regard to the execution of the law, and that feature of the act of 1887 which gave him the discretion and made him responsible for the exercise of that discretion in resorting to retaliation would now be considered as absolutely mandatory, when he should issue his proclamation under this mandatory condition of affairs and should say, "I will exclude fish from coming to the American markets," or "I will exclude grain," or "I will exclude barley," or wool, or copper, or iron ores, or timber, or lumber, or anything of that kind—"I will exclude all Canadian productions from coming into the United States under my proclamation until you have done what Congress has prescribed that you shall do in respect of granting commercial privileges to our people." No man who understands the meaning of the English language would ever hesitate to say that that proclamation inaugurated retaliation.

But the Senator from Massachusetts has been compelled, yes, he has been driven into these nice refinements upon words and words only. He has been driven to deny that the majority of the committee have declared that the time for negotiation has passed, and that this is not a fit subject of negotiation in order to clear the ground in front of him.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator if he is alluding to me?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, I allude to you. He admitted that when he introduced his resolution here providing for that committee of which he is chairman for the purpose of taking into consideration all these matters relating to the relations between the United States and Canada; and, as I observed before, he was merely making a soft bed on which to fall after this treaty had been ended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Alabama suspend for a moment? The Chair understands the agreement to be that debate for to-night shall cease at 6 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. How much time shall I have to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Half an hour, the Chair understands.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator from Alabama to prefer to complete his remarks to-night by an extension of the time after 6. I hope there will be unanimous consent.

Mr. GEORGE and others. Oh, no; do not do that.

Mr. MORGAN. I would prefer to do it personally, but my friends are tired, as they have a right to be.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to utter one single sentence before he sits down?

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to the Senator uttering a sentence.

Mr. HOAR. The statement of the committee to which the Senator alludes was that the time of "negotiation and unavailing remonstrance" had passed. I merely want to have that appear.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, take both words together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama ask unanimous consent to complete his remarks to-night?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Would it be agreeable to the Senator from Alabama if I now move that the Senate adjourn?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 21, 1888, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 20, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HEMPHILL, for two weeks.

To Mr. KELLEY, indefinitely, on account of ill health.

To Mr. MAHONEY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. SHIVELY, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CROUSE, for six days from Monday, August 20, on account of urgent business.

To Mr. DINGLEY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCKINLEY, for five days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill (H. R. 8662) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannack Indians for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, for the purposes of a town site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that that body had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 751) for the relief of the estate of J. J. Pulliam, deceased, and asked for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOAR, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. STEWART as managers of said conference on its part.

It further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 11062) for the removal of the political disabilities of Gustavus W. Smith.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Texas. This being Monday, the regular order is the call of the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions for reference.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WHEELER offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Thursday, August 23, and Saturday, August 25, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

ABUSES UNDER THE TARIFF LAWS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (H. R. 11207) to correct certain abuses arising under the present tariff laws in relation to bagging for cotton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

He also introduced a bill (H. R. 11208) to correct certain abuses arising under the present tariff laws in reference to sugars fit for consumption; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

He also introduced a bill (H. R. 11209) to correct certain abuses arising under the present tariff laws in relation to coal-oil; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

He also introduced a bill (H. R. 11210) to correct certain abuses arising under the present tariff laws in relation to alcohol; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

He also introduced a bill (H. R. 11211) to correct certain abuses arising under the present tariff laws in relation to cotton-seed oil; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether these bills relate to abuses growing out of the formation of trusts. If so, I would like to have one of the bills read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The abuses are involved in the formations known as trusts, though I dare say that there are some individual instances of such extortion outside of trusts. The abuses to which the bills relate are simply the legitimate consequences of the partial features of the existing tariff laws in their respective lines.

The SPEAKER. The bill can not be read at this time unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the request.

REPORT ON "TRUSTS."

Mr. ADAMS introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America (the Senate concurring therein), That there be printed for the use of the House and Senate 5,000 copies of the report (with evidence) lately made by the Committee on Manufactures of the House in relation to the sugar trust and the Standard Oil trust, 3,000 copies for the use of the House and 2,000 for the use of the Senate.

PENSIONS.

Mr. LANE introduced a bill (H. R. 11212) to increase pensions in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PUNISHMENT OF "TRUSTS."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (H. R. 11213) to define "trusts" and to provide for the punishment of persons connected with them or carrying them on; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

COMMANDERS OF MERCHANT VESSELS, ETC.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, also introduced a bill (H. R. 11214) to regulate commanders and crews of certain merchant, fishing, and whaling vessels; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF PACIFIC RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, also introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Whereas there was appointed by authority of an act of Congress approved March, 1887, a commission to investigate the affairs of the Union and Central Pacific Railroads and their branch lines, and to report thereon to the Fiftieth Congress by the first Monday in December, 1887; and

Whereas said commission discharged the duties enjoined by said act and procured a vast amount of evidence and information touching the affairs of said roads, and made report thereof as by law required; and

Whereas said report and the evidence and information on which the same is based was procured at an expense of $100,000; and

Whereas the report and the evidence and information accompanying it and made a report thereof comprise a history of the construction and management of said lines of railway involving an expenditure of a great many millions of the people's money, and involving, all circumstances considered, momentous interests of the highest concern to the American people; and

Whereas said investigation was had for the purpose of enlightening the public mind as to the best policy on the part of the Government in further dealing with these roads; and

Whereas said investigation disclosed a most scandalous law-breaking career on the part of the management of said roads in their relations to the United States and the people, from the organizations of said companies down to and including the time covered in making said investigation; and

Whereas there seems to be a disposition in certain quarters to suppress and withhold from the public said report and the evidence and information accompanying it; and

Whereas such success has attended the effort at suppression as very largely to nullify the purposes of the investigation and render the $100,000 expended in making the same a useless expenditure of the people's money; and

Whereas the publication of said report, and the evidence and information accompanying it, will show to the country the most reckless and profligate prostitution of these great public highways to the selfish uses of a few corrupt men who, through the manipulation of these roads and other railway and commercial corporations, numbering more than seventy-five, organized in connection therewith, the whole constituting a great and powerful combine dominating the entire business interests of the larger portion of the States and Territories west of the Missouri River, and in its unchecked and unrestrained unlawful career the prolific source of demoralization to the business interests of the whole country: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and hereby is, authorized and required to print 10,000 copies of the report of said Pacific Railroad Commission, and the evidence and information accompanying said report, and that the same be properly indexed.

BRIDGES ACROSS KENTUCKY RIVER, ETC.

Mr. CARUTH introduced a bill (H. R. 11215) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville Southern Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CONDUIT PIPES ACROSS OHIO RIVER.

Mr. CARUTH also introduced a bill (H. R. 11216) to authorize the Union Gas Company to lay conduit pipes across the Ohio River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

VIOLATION OF NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. DINGLEY introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

Whereas it is alleged by evidence adduced by the committee of the House of Representatives appointed to investigate immigration that in many instances foreigners are commanding, and in some instances owning, vessels registered or enrolled as vessels of the United States and engaged in the coasting trade; and

Whereas the laws of the United States provide that only vessels registered or enrolled as vessels of the United States shall participate in the coastwise trade, and that no vessel shall be registered or enrolled as a vessel of the United States unless it is wholly owned by citizens of the United States and commanded by a citizen of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the House whether the Treasury Department has information of such violation of the laws of the United States, and if so, what steps have been taken to vacate the register or enrollment of such vessels and to prosecute persons who have violated our navigation laws.

RESERVATION OF SENECA INDIANS OF NEW YORK.

Mr. NELSON (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 11217) to provide for judicial proceedings for the removal from the reservation of the Seneca Nation of Indians of New York of persons other than Indians trespassing thereon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COTTON BAGGING ON THE FREE-LIST.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (H. R. 11218) to amend the revenue laws by placing bagging for cotton on the free-list; which was read a first and second time (the second reading being in full upon the demand of Mr. MORGAN), referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON "TRUSTS."

Mr. BUCHANAN introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

Resolved, That there be printed 30,000 copies of the testimony taken by the Committee on Manufactures, including the testimony relating to the sugar, Standard Oil, and whisky "trusts," with the report of the committee thereon; 10,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 20,000 copies for the use of the House.

DRAWBACK ON COTTON BAGGING.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced a bill (H. R. 11219) to allow importers of cotton bagging a drawback to the full amount of the duty on said article during the continuance of what is known as the "cotton-bagging trust;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HENDERSON, N. C.

Mr. SIMMONS also introduced a bill (H. R. 11220) for the construction of a public building at Henderson, in the State of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ILLEGAL USE OF THE MAILS.

Mr. GROSVENOR submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

Whereas it is charged in the public journals and by responsible persons that gross violations of the postal laws are being committed in the State of Ohio, and which violations are being openly and notoriously committed by officers of the postal service and others: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to communicate to this House whether it is true that an enormous edition of a certain publication, called the "Tax-Reform Advocate," was sent and distributed in violation of the postal laws through the mails, being sent out from Columbus, Ohio, and to all, or nearly all, the post-offices of the State; and if such is the case, whether any officer or officers of the Post-Office Department has been guilty of such acts, or has known of the same, and has not taken any steps to prevent the same; and also what further legislation by Congress is necessary to enforce the laws of the United States in regard to the postal service, and to prevent the repetition of such offenses; and also the honorable Postmaster-General is requested to report what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department to punish such offenses and to prevent their recurrence.

PROBATION AGENT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LEE introduced a bill (H. R. 11221) for the appointment of a probation agent for the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC WITH CERTAIN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. CHEADLE. I am requested by my colleague, Mr. OWEN, who is absent from the city, to present the following resolution, which I ask to have read and properly referred.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas a large liquor traffic is being carried on between this country and the Congo and the South Pacific Islands;

Whereas the civilized nations have been importuned to prohibit, by international treaty, such traffic to these countries:

Resolved, That the honorable Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to submit to this House such information as his office possesses concerning said traffic, and all correspondence or action in reference thereto.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

DECISIONS OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 215) providing for the printing of 800 copies of the reports of the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF PORTLAND, OREGON.

The SPEAKER. A few days ago the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] made a report from the conference committee on House bill 1761, for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon. In the report it is stated that the House "receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and with the following amendment agreed to the same." It appears that there were two amendments of the Senate, one being, however, only to the title of the bill; and if there be no objection the vote by which this report was agreed to will be reconsidered, and it will be amended so as to make it read, "amendments of the Senate," which will complete the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DETAILS OF MILITARY OFFICERS FOR EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution introduced two weeks ago and modified as follows, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution proposed by the gentleman from Missouri as modified will be reported.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask, Mr. Speaker, if the regular order is not the consideration of a pending motion submitted by myself?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the condition of the pending motions.

On the third Monday of last month the Committee on Military Affairs was called in its regular order for motions to suspend the rules; whereupon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] moved to suspend the rules and pass the resolution in relation to the celebration at Gettysburgh, the Chair thinks; which motion was not disposed of, a second being demanded, on which no quorum voted. On the first Monday of the present month the regular order was demanded, and the gentleman did not then call up for action that motion which was pending. It not having been called up at that time, the Chair supposed the gentleman had abandoned the motion, and thereupon recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER]. If, however, the gentleman from Illinois insists upon his motion, the Chair thinks it is the pending motion and has precedence.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My reason for not pressing the motion was that I did not wish to interfere with the gentleman from Missouri, and I supposed also that the motion would go over properly to the third Monday, that is for to-day.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. Will the motion to which I have referred be in order immediately after the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri is the pending motion, but no second has been ordered, and hence it is subject to modification, if the gentleman desires to modify it, as he has intimated his intention to do so.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice that I shall raise the point of order on the motion the gentleman from Missouri now proposes to call up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not call it up, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HOOKER. I mean when the motion is called up.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs to withdraw the motion which has just been mentioned by the Speaker, and offer the bill S. 186, the bill detailing officers of the Army or Navy to educational institutions; and I move to suspend the rules and pass that bill.

The SPEAKER. That, however, is a separate motion, and the motion of the gentleman from Missouri has priority, because that is a pending motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri to allow me to have action first on this motion.

Mr. WARNER. I do not wish to lose any rights to which I may be entitled.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri will come up immediately after this is disposed of.

Mr. WARNER. With that understanding I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This matter will take but a few moments to dispose of.

I now move to suspend the rules and pass the bill to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for a second.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I propose to pass the Senate bill as amended by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. It appears that this bill has been partially considered by the House already during the hour set apart for the consideration of bills, and some amendments have already been agreed to. Does the gentleman's motion also include those amendments?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is the motion I have made. I ask that the bill be read as amended by the House when this bill was up for consideration, and also as proposed to be amended by the committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by an act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, be, and the same is hereby, further amended, so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1225. The President may, upon the application of any established military institute, seminary or academy, college or university, within the United States having capacity to educate at the same time not less than one hundred and fifty male students, detail an officer of the Army or Navy to act as superintendent, or professor thereof, but the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed fifty from the Army, and ten from the Navy, being a maximum of sixty, at any time, and they shall be apportioned throughout the United States, first, to those State institutions applying for such detail that are required to provide instruction in military tactics under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, donating lands for the establishment of colleges where the leading object shall be the practical instruction of the industrial classes in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics; and after that, said details to be distributed, as nearly as may be practicable, according to population. The Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may appear to be required for military instruction and practice by the students of any college or university under the provisions of this section, and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case, in double the value of the property, for the care and safe-keeping thereof, and for the return of the same when required:" Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the detail of officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy as professors in scientific schools or colleges as now provided by act of Congress approved February 26, 1879, entitled "An act to promote a knowledge of steam-engineering and iron-ship building among the students of scientific schools or colleges in the United States;" and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government on the terms and conditions hereinbefore provided to any college or university at which a retired officer of the Army may be assigned as provided by section 1260 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. That the said section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the said act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed, saving always, however, all acts and things done under the said amended section as heretofore existing.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman give attention to the reading of the bill, so as to know whether it included the amendments that were adopted?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was amended in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The amendments adopted in committee have been read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments adopted in the House. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLAND. We had better have a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 8.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate; fifteen minutes on each side, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to control the time in support of the bill and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to control the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The bill having been so fully discussed the last time it was under consideration in the House, I do not feel like occupying the attention of the House this morning in discussing it any further, but I will ask to have the report read by the Clerk for the information of the House. The House report substantially adopts the Senate report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 186) entitled "A bill to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions, etc.," having considered the same, report as follows:

The committee fully concur with the report of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs (which is hereto appended) as to the merits of this bill.

And, in order that it may not conflict with the act of Congress of February 26, 1879, authorizing the President to detail officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy to scientific schools, and to the end that the scope of the bill may be slightly extended, the committee recommend the following amendments:

In line 9 of section 1225 of the printed bill, after the word "established," insert the word "academy."

In line 12 of section 1225 of the printed bill, after the word "Army," insert the words "or Navy."

At the end of section 1225 add the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the detail of officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy as professors in scientific schools and colleges as now provided by act of Congress approved February 26, 1879, entitled 'An act to promote a knowledge of steam engineering and iron ship-building among the students of scientific schools or colleges in the United States.'"

After the amendment last recommended insert the following:

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, on the terms and conditions hereinbefore provided, to any college or university to which a retired officer of the Army may be assigned, as provided by section 1260 of the Revised Statutes."

As thus amended, the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 99, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 186) entitled "A bill to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes concerning details of Army officers to educational institutions," having had the same under consideration, report in favor of the passage of the same, with some amendments.

Section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, which the bill (S. 186) proposes to amend, authorizes the President, upon the application of any established college or university in the United States having capacity to educate not less than one hundred and fifty male students, to detail an officer of the Army to act as military instructor therein, and prescribes that the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed thirty at one time. It also authorizes the Secretary of War to issue, under certain conditions and regulations, small arms and field artillery for the purpose of military instruction of and practice by the students in such institutions.

On the 5th of July, 1884, Congress amended this law by providing that the number of officers so detailed should not exceed forty at any one time. By the provisions of the act of July 2, 1862 (see 24 United States, chapter 130, page 503), commonly known as the "agricultural college grant," military tactics are required to be taught in the colleges intended by that act.

Your committee do not deem it necessary that they should more than suggest the great good that has been accomplished by this military instruction in the colleges that have procured instructors from the Army of the United States under the beneficent provisions of these acts. Such instruction tends to better the discipline and improve the physical and mental condition of the pupils who are thus taught.

The bill under consideration proposes to increase the number of officers authorized to be detailed from a maximum of forty to a maximum of fifty, and it also provides that the State institutions, which, as beneficiaries under the act of July 2, 1862, are required to teach military tactics, shall be preferred in the apportionment of the detail contemplated by the act.

Your committee are advised that the number of officers authorized to be detailed under the existing law is insufficient to meet proper demands therefor by the State institutions of learning, and that several colleges that have become beneficiaries under the agricultural college act of July 2, 1862, have not been able to secure the detail of military instructors to teach military tactics, as required by that act. The existing law gives them no priority, as it puts all established colleges and universities on the same footing in this respect.

Your committee referred this bill to the Secretary of War for his suggestions in relation thereto, and attaches hereto his letter of January 23, 1888, by which it will be seen that he now, as he did heretofore, strongly recommends its passage. It is apparent, also, from his letter that the General commanding the Army also approves. The suggestion is made by him that the words "small arms or pieces of field artillery," in lines 27 and 28 of section 1, be stricken out, and that in lieu thereof there be inserted the words "ordnance and ordnance stores."

Upon full consideration, it is deemed well by your committee that the number of instructors to be detailed should be increased to a maximum of sixty, of which fifty shall be detailed from the Army and ten from the Navy. Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: In section 1, line 14, after the word "fifty," insert "from the Army and ten from the Navy, being a maximum of sixty." In same section, in lines 27 and 28, strike out the words "small arms and pieces of field artillery" and insert the words "ordnance and ordnance stores;" and amend the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions," and that as thus amended the bill pass.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, February 17, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st instant, requesting the views of this Department upon Senate bill 3100, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, "to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning detail of Army officers to educational institutions, etc."

In reply, I beg to advise you that the Lieutenant-General regards the proposed changes in the existing law, extending to fifty the number of officers that may be detailed to colleges, and specifying the institutions to which they shall first be apportioned, as a decided improvement upon the present system.

The Chief of Ordnance also commends the proposed increase in the number of officers to be detailed, and recommends that on line 27 the words "small-arms or pieces of field artillery" be stricken out, and the words "ordnance and ordnance stores" substituted, inasmuch as accouterments and ammunition are now issued in addition to small-arms and field artillery, as being necessary for military instruction, and the proposed amendment will cover such issue.

These views and recommendations are concurred in by this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
Of the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 23, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, inclosing Senate bill 186, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, and requesting my views upon the proposed legislation.

In reply, I beg to inform you that the present bill, which is herewith returned, appears to be identical with Senate bill 3100, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, which formed the subject of my letter to you of February 17, 1887, copy herewith. The Lieutenant-General at that time reported favorably upon the proposed increase in the number of officers to be detailed, and their appointment to certain institutions, and the Chief of Ordnance also favored these amendments, and recommended the substitution on line 27 of the bill of the words "ordnance and ordnance stores" for "small-arms or pieces of field artillery."

In this recommendation I concurred; and with the change made in line 27 the present bill will fully accord with the views of the Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
United States Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. There is doubt in the minds of some gentlemen about this bill. It is believed that the passage of the bill will cancel the details that are now made at certain schools and colleges. A number of the colleges are anxious about this, and have so much feeling on the subject that I want to know whether this bill will have the effect of changing the details.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman desires to know whether the bill is intended to affect the present details?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As I understand, the bill does not affect the present details. The purpose is to enlarge the number of details.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Would it not require a reassignment and thus effect a change of details?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The assignments are left with the War Department. I have no reason to believe there will be any change; and there is nothing in the bill that I know of that would effect such a change.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You mean there is nothing in the bill compelling the Secretary of War to change the present details?

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not that necessarily involve some rearrangement?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The present law is upon that basis. I do not know, and of course can not answer for the War Department, but my understanding and impression is that there will be no change in the present details. The bill does not require it. It is a matter left entirely with the War Department. I have no reason to think there will be any change.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask how many officers there are in the United States Army and how many in the Navy?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There are something like 2,000 officers in the Army, but how large a number in the Navy I do not know. [To Mr. HERBERT.] How many are there?

Mr. HERBERT. A thousand or twelve hundred.

Mr. BLAND. How many privates.

Mr. BLOUNT. What does my friend from Alabama mean? Are they on shore duty or sea duty?

Mr. HERBERT. The question is asked me suddenly as to the number of officers. For the line there are 730; engineers about 170. There are about 220 engineer officers, but the number is gradually being reduced to 170. Besides this there are surgeons and staff officers. Altogether the number of officers in the Navy will be about 1,100.

Mr. BLAND. How many privates?

Mr. HERBERT. Seven thousand five hundred men and boys is the number; and it is probably not kept up to the full quota.

Mr. BLOUNT. Are more than one-third of these officers on sea duty?

Mr. HERBERT. I should suppose more than one-third, but I will state that the number of ships in the old Navy is being very rapidly reduced. There are not now more than twenty-six or twenty-seven vessels, and as a matter of course there are a great many officers at home and not on sea duty. Quite a number of these, and very nearly all of them, are on useful duty inspecting steel and other things; and the number of officers is much less, I think not half as many as in the Army.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In order to prevent any misapprehension in the minds of any gentleman, I wish to state that this bill does not propose to increase the number of officers. The bill does not increase the number of Army or Navy officers at all, nor does it impose upon the Treasury any appropriation. The bill is really for the purpose of enabling the colleges and academies of the country to avail themselves of the instruction which the Army and Navy officers can give them, and to take those who are off duty. We have a surplus number of officers, and it is believed that the best use we can put them to is to detail them for this purpose to colleges and academies asking their services.

Mr. MACDONALD. I wish merely to say for the information of gentlemen who have made the inquiry that in the early part of the winter I made application to have a detail made for a university of our State, and in doing so the matter was discussed with the Department and an examination of the law was made.

The present law, without any amendment, provides for the assignment of these officers among the different States upon the basis of population, and the Adjutant-General informed me that, inasmuch as population was changing all the time, unless a law was passed by Congress authorizing the Department to increase the number of these assignments, it would be necessary for him in the course of the coming year to change the assignments already made in compliance with the requirement that the assignment shall be on the basis of population. The passage of this bill, therefore, will have the effect to prevent the disturbance of the assignments already made. The object of it is to enable the Secretary of War to assign officers of this class to States such as the one which I have the honor in part to represent, and which are now unable to procure assignments under the law. The bill seems to be entirely unobjectionable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] a statement of the exact number of officers in the Army. It is 2,174.

Mr. BLAND. What is the number of privates?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is difficult to state that exactly, because the number is all the time changing, but I think there are between 17,000 and 18,000.

Mr. BLAND. Can the gentleman give the House information as to the salaries of the officers of the Army and those who are on the retired-list? Can he let us know what we are paying for officers who are doing nothing?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can give the gentleman that information, but I now desire to reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has only one minute remaining.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well; I reserve that.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the Committee on Miltiary Affairs have not reported a bill here reorganizing the Army and dismissing every unnecessary officer. I do not know what amount this Government is paying to-day to gentlemen who are on the retired-list of the Army, officers without any command. We have over 2,000 officers to about 16,000 or 17,000 privates. At this time, Mr. Speaker, when the Treasury is overflowing with money, when bills are pending of all sorts and sizes for appropriations for disbursements, for elevating gentlemen above their present rank in order to give them a little more pay, we find other bills brought in here to create a necessity or an excuse, if you please, for continuing in the public service gentlemen who are now holding sinecures and who ought to be in private life earning their own living. I say I regret that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has not responded to the popular demand in this country that all sinecures and unnecessary offices shall be abolished and those who hold them relegated to private life. It is not necessary in this country to continue 2,000 Army officers with only 17,000 soldiers.

Mr. WHEELER. There are 25,000 soldiers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The actual number is not so large as that.

Mr. BLAND. Nor is it necessary to pass laws here furnishing a pretext for assigning these men, who are pensioners upon the Federal Government, to the private institutions of the States. Why not pass the Blair bill itself? Why not let the Federal Government take charge of all the schools in the States and send out its civil officers and its military officers as school-teachers all over the country to aid and direct the State governments in performing their proper functions? Such legislation is contrary to the theory of our Government, and contrary to the popular demand of the people. The people demand that all these unnecessary officers shall be thrown upon their own resources, to make their own living, as the people themselves have to do. For that reason, sir, I oppose this bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is time that Congress should announce to the people of this country that it intends to return to the original principles of republican institutions; that this is not a paternal Government to take care of the States or of the institutions of the States, or to collect large sums of money for the purpose of sending out an army of officers or teachers through the country to interfere with State institutions in any way. Let the States, upon their own responsibility and at their own expense as independent sovereigns, take care of their own institutions, and let Congress pursue its proper line of duty within the limits of the Constitution and the theory of our Government. I yield now to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the House has been told that this is a proposition to increase by ten the number of officers that may be detailed from the Army for the purposes indicated, and also to increase by ten the number of officers who may be in like manner detailed from the Navy; and it is said that as these officers are now a charge upon the Government——

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had twelve minutes of his time remaining when he yielded the floor, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has consumed two minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to know how much time I am to have, so that I may measure my speech accordingly.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Georgia will have eight minutes remaining after the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] shall have occupied two minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole I offered an amendment including in the provisions of the bill the Ohio Soldiers and Sailors' Orphan Home. That is an institution which has about eight hundred students, and it is a graded school, the higher branches of which have a curriculum about equivalent to that of an ordinary academy. The vote was taken upon that proposition, and an overwhelming majority—nine out of ten, or more than that—voted in favor of the amendment. But the point of no quorum was made. And now the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs selects such amendments as he sees fit to put into this bill and excludes that amendment in favor of the institution I have the honor to represent. Therefore I will oppose this bill, not only by speech but by every means within my power, so as to teach the gentleman that he will have to treat public institutions of the character of this one with at least as much respect as he does the promiscuous academies of the country.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman does me injustice, and I know he does not want to do it. I have simply asked to incorporate in the bill the amendments already adopted by the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The amendments which the gentleman proposes to incorporate were adopted simply as mine was.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Every amendment adopted by the House is incorporated in the bill as now perfected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman is in favor of my amendment will he let me offer it now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair is informed that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] was agreed to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly it was; and now the gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question, leaving out my amendment and putting in those that happen to suit him. This bill is not to be passed in that sort of way.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman's amendment was lost the other day——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have said the amendment was not lost.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman had not thrust in his amendment the other day the bill would have passed then.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman had treated my amendment as he did the others we would not have got into this controversy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio was adopted, and in the present motion is included among the amendments to be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Unfortunately it is not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk so informs the Chair.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I listened very carefully, and heard nothing of the kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion was to adopt the bill with the amendments already agreed to by the House. If that amendment was agreed to, it is included in the motion.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But in the copy which was read by the Clerk my amendment was wholly omitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But that does not govern the House. The bill will include the amendments which were adopted, whether the printed copy be correct or not.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, am I not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. BLOUNT. It has been stated to the House that this bill proposes simply to allow the assignment or detail of not more than fifty Army officers and ten officers of the Navy to these institutions; that these officers are now supported by the Government and therefore may, without additional expense, be utilized in giving instruction in the various academies or institutions of learning herein designated. Now, I wish to call attention to the fact that there is much more in this bill than this statement of its effect would imply. It provides that—

> The Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may appear to be required for military instruction and practice by the students of any college or university under the provisions of this section.

It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that the bill provides not only for detailing officers for this service, but also for supplying ordnance and ordnance stores to these schools "for military instruction and practice." Will any gentleman undertake to say that this will not cause a large amount of expenditure? There is no limitation in this respect except in the discretion of the Secretary of War, who may issue to these institutions such amount of ordnance and ordnance stores as in his judgment "can be spared for the purpose." When this practice has been once inaugurated, our expenditure for ordnance and ordnance stores will no doubt be immensely enlarged.

This is but the beginning. When you shall have passed this measure—when fifty officers of the Army and ten officers of the Navy shall have been assigned to these institutions of learning, there will come a demand (and you will be compelled to yield to it) in favor of making to other institutions similar details of officers and similar allowances of ordnance and ordnance stores. Thus you are inaugurating a system which will surely become a burden upon the Treasury of the United States. So that this is very much more than a mere question of the detail or assignment of unoccupied officers of the Army and Navy.

Sir, in regard to our idle officers of the Army and Navy, right reason suggests a remedy far better than this.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; I can not. The gentleman understands that my time is limited.

Mr. Speaker, we have several hundred officers of the Navy for whom there is not one particle of use. We have those on sea duty, those on shore duty, and those on furlough, all receiving pay under the law. According to the present practice of the Government, there is no such thing as furlough pay. There is a fiction that when an officer is not at sea he is engaged on shore, although in fact he may be actually doing nothing. This is now the case in numbers of instances. There was a time in the history of this country, before the war, when a healthy conception of the interests of the service and of the duty of Congress to the people provided a law for retiring all useless officers; and several hundred were retired. If you now have hundreds of officers doing absolutely nothing, traversing the country under pretense that they are on shore duty, although, in fact, rendering no service to the Government—and that this is so is a matter known to every one—why not meet the case by providing a means of getting rid of them?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The law at present provides——

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I thought you wanted to be corrected.

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; not by the gentleman from Illinois, because I know as much about this matter as he does.

If you have these still doing nothing, you do not meet the situation by adding ten more. If they are idle, why not take them all? When you take hundreds and assign them to schools throughout the country, and provide them with such ordnance stores as may be needed for practice, your magnificent, gigantic system would astonish the country and the public sense would restrain you.

We should stop it. We had at one time seventy; we got back to forty, and the proposition now is for sixty. Here is a proposition to supply ordnance and ordnance stores to these schools. It continues to grow gradually and stealthily, and you will find you have inaugurated a system that you will not be able to get rid of very soon.

If this is to be done, I do not want it to be done blindly. If this bill is suffered to be passed detailing officers, I want gentlemen to know what it comes to when we are also to furnish ordnance and ordnance stores. This House knows what it costs to move artillery from here to Fortress Monroe, and for practice there. Every gentleman who has paid attention to the subject knows what it will amount to when you have multiplied that amount by schools all over the country. I want them to understand it means nothing in the world but the inauguration of a wasteful system. To establish such a system would seem to be actuated only by a desire to get rid of the surplus in the Treasury by all means.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; not now.

Mr. Speaker, the time was when the Democratic party took possession of the House that it would not have been thought of. Men who inaugurated systems of economies and brought us to triumph in those days seem to have lost their potency here. Extravagance upon extravagance is fastening itself upon this side of the House. There need be no such flattering unction that we are preserving the record for economy upon which we came into power.

Mr. HERBERT. Yield to me for a minute.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not. And I warn gentlemen on this side of the House against this extravagant legislation on the plea that there is no expense to come upon the Government. If ordnance and ordnance stores are left out there may be some probability——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Georgia is straining at a gnat to-day, when the other day he swallowed a whale in the increase of the appropriation for the postal service nearly $5,000,000.

I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. HERBERT. I ask my friend to yield to me to make one statement.

Mr. WHEELER. I will yield to the gentleman for half a minute.

Mr. HERBERT. In the half minute yielded to me I desire to state to the House that the naval appropriation bill now reported and ready for passage amounts in the aggregate to $20,000,000. In 1858, thirty years ago, it was over $14,000,000. At that time the expense per capita of population amounted to 48 cents. The expense has not increased, so far as the Navy is concerned, therefore, but on the contrary has been reduced, as the per capita to-day is only 33 cents.

Mr. BLOUNT. You have no more of a Navy to-day than you had then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express myself as thoroughly in favor of the bill under consideration. In a country like this our Army can be little more than a school of military instruction, and there is no duty to which its officers can devote themselves more usefully than instructing the youth in our colleges. Besides extending military knowledge among the people, this character of duty is in many ways beneficial to the Army. It instructs and improves the officers thus engaged, and also performs the important function of bringing the Army near to the people.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who oppose this measure, are quite mistaken in their assumption that it involves any considerable expenditure. It does not authorize any increase in the number of officers either of the Army or Navy. It merely permits a most advantageous use of fifty officers of the Army and ten officers of the Navy who are now on other and less important duty. It does not authorize the purchase or construction of any ordnance, but simply permits the temporary use of ordnance by State colleges for purposes of instruction. Is not that better than for these guns to remain where at present they are of no use whatever?

Some gentlemen insist that they do not want to see any increase in the military spirit of our country. I desire to most emphatically dissent from such wishes or opinions.

Section 1225 of the Revised Statutes already provides for the detail of forty officers for this purpose, and the small increase provided for in this bill has been frequently recommended by the War Department.

After years of experience with details of this character, the Secretary of War and Commander of the Army join in recommending the increase authorized by the measure now before the House. I say to Congress, let us give respectful consideration to the views of these officials. On January 23, 1888, the Secretary of War, Hon. William C. Endicott, wrote:

> I beg to inform you that the present bill, which is herewith returned, appears to be identical with Senate bill 3100, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, which formed the subject of my letter to you of February 17, 1887, copy herewith. The Lieutenant-General at that time reported favorably upon the proposed increase in the number of officers to be detailed, and their appointment to certain institutions, and the Chief of Ordnance also favored these amendments, and recommended the substitution, on line 27 of the bill, of the words "ordnance and ordnance stores" for small-arms or pieces of field artillery.
> In this recommendation I concurred; and with the change made in line 27 the present bill will fully accord with the views of the Department.

I wish our people could understand how little we are doing to keep up with the world in military service. We have a magnificent corps of officers, anxious to study, investigate, and improve, and it is the duty of Congress to give them proper opportunities. To show how the opponents of the bill misunderstood its purpose and practical operation, I will read from the Senate report which accompanied this bill when reported to that body:

Section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, which the bill (S. 186) proposes to amend, authorizes the President, upon the application of any established college or university in the United States having capacity to educate not less than one hundred and fifty male students, to detail an officer of the Army to act as military instructor therein, and prescribes that the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed thirty at any one time. It also authorizes the Secretary of War to issue, under certain conditions and regulations, small arms and field artillery for the purpose of military instruction of and practice by the students in such institutions.

On the 5th of July, 1884, Congress amended this law by providing that the number of officers so detailed should not exceed forty at any one time. By the provisions of the act of July 2, 1862 (see 24 United States, chapter 130, page 503), commonly known as the "agricultural college grant," military tactics are required to be taught in the colleges intended by that act.

Your committee do not deem it necessary that they should more than suggest the great good that has been accomplished by this military instruction in the colleges that have procured instructors from the Army of the United States under the beneficent provisions of these acts. Such instruction tends to better the discipline and improve the physical and mental condition of the pupils who are thus taught.

The bill under consideration proposes to increase the number of officers authorized to be detailed from a maximum of forty to a maximum of fifty, and it also provides that the State institutions, which, as beneficiaries under the act of July 2, 1862, are required to teach military tactics, shall be preferred in the apportionment of the detail contemplated by the act.

Your committee are advised that the number of officers authorized to be detailed under the existing law is insufficient to meet proper demands therefor by the State institutions of learning, and that several colleges that have become beneficiaries under the agricultural college act of July 2, 1862, have not been able to secure the detail of military instructors to teach military tactics, as required by that act. The existing law gives them no priority, as it puts all established colleges and universities on the same footing in this respect.

Your committee referred this bill to the Secretary of War for his suggestions in relation thereto, and attaches hereto his letter of January 23, 1888, by which it will be seen that he now, as he did heretofore, strongly recommends its passage. It is apparent also from his letter that the general commanding the Army also approves. The suggestion is made by him that the words "small-arms or pieces of field artillery," in lines 27 and 28, of section 1, be stricken out, and that in lieu thereof there be inserted the words "ordnance and ordnance stores."

Upon full consideration, it is deemed well by your committee that the number of instructors to be detailed should be increased to a maximum of sixty, of which fifty shall be detailed from the Army and ten from the Navy.

In reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] as to the number of officers and soldiers in the Army, I will state that the last report of the Secretary of War stated the number of officers on the active list at 2,200 and the total enlisted men of the Army at 24,236. The last report of the Secretary of the Navy states that on June 30, 1887, there were 8,342 enlisted men and apprentices in the Navy, and I find from other reports that there are 973 officers of the line of the Navy, 547 officers of the staff, and 184 warrant officers, making a total of all grades of 1,704 officers.

The limited few who oppose this measure always vote to keep up the Army and Navy, and I feel certain they will agree with the large majority who favor the bill that, maintaining an army and navy as we do, we should sanction all wise legislation which is necessary to make the best use possible of these great arms of national defense.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now ask for the vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to suspend the rules and pass the bill with amendments, which have been read.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 83, noes 25.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. TOWNSHEND were appointed tellers.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 9 members only voting in favor thereof.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 22.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. That point has been already made.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent that this matter be laid aside with a view to taking up the general deficiency bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That can not be done when there is no quorum voting.

Mr. BURNES. No further count will be demanded, I presume.

The SPEAKER. Unless this proposition now pending is withdrawn the tellers will continue the count.

Mr. BURNES. I hope the Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent to lay aside this matter and proceed to the consideration of the general deficiency bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not consent to that. If we have not a quorum to pass this bill we have not a quorum to pass the deficiency bill.

Mr. McCREARY. If it is intended not to pursue this subject further, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 3304) in relation to Chinese immigration, which went over from last Saturday.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday I gave notice that I would on to-day, if a quorum failed to appear, submit a resolution revoking all leaves of absence except in cases of sickness. At the request of several members I withhold that motion until to-morrow.

Mr. McCREARY. It is evident that there is no quorum in the city; and with the consent of the gentleman from Illinois I desire to call up the bill I have indicated, which came over from Saturday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair). That can be done now only upon the withdrawal of the pending proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. But unanimous consent can be given to do that.

Mr. McCREARY. If I thought there could be a quorum I should not object to continuing the matter. But it is evident that no quorum is now present.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, he now asks consent to lay this matter aside temporarily with a view to taking up the Chinese bill, and after the consideration of that, that the House will again proceed to consider the pending question?

Mr. McCREARY. That is it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to proceeding with the consideration of the Chinese bill without disturbing the status quo of the present proposition?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. Will that leave the suspension business in the same order as now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will. The gentleman from Missouri will have the same rights that he now has.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois should be left hanging on as a standing order in the face of the general business of the House, and especially in the front of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will not be after to-day until the first Monday in September.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand we are now within fifteen of a quorum, and with the hope that that number of members may drop in during the course of the discussion on the Chinese bill, I want to have the right to return to this question so as to take a vote on it to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places and resume the count. The Chair will state that there is no way of getting this bill out of the way on suspension day except by a direct vote or by the withdrawal of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking for the yeas and nays. It is time we got a quorum here; and if we can not get it any other way, why then let us revoke the leaves of absence granted.

Mr. McCREARY. I think the gentleman from Texas is now willing to withdraw his objection.

Mr. KILGORE. On the explanation made to me by the gentleman from Kentucky, I will not insist.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I renew the objection.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky this question, if in order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All of this is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I understand that. Is it not true that this treaty has been sent to China to be ratified there, and that that ratification must be first returned, and that it will involve a delay of some months? I understand that it can not be expected here before December, and therefore I do not see the necessity for this haste.

Mr. McCREARY. The Senate amended the treaty, and these amendments have been sent to China to be ratified by that Government——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And as to this——

Mr. McCREARY. Let me answer the question first. Because of the absence of the Chinese minister to this country, who is now in Peru.

It is very important that we pass the bill without delay, so that as amended it may go to the Senate, and the Senate have an opportunity to concur in the amendment. We have no time for delay, for as soon as the treaty shall be agreed upon we ought to have a law ready to enforce the provisions of the treaty.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] having for the present withdrawn the bill called up by him, I will call up Senate bill 3304 for immediate action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was not paying attention at the time the gentleman made his statement, and would request that he make it again.

Mr. McCREARY. I call up for immediate consideration Senate bill 3304.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has no right to the floor for the purpose of calling that bill up. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], from the Committee on Military Affairs, has moved a suspension of the rules to pass a bill; and pending that all proceedings are by unanimous consent.

Mr. MCCREARY. I thought the gentleman from Illinois had agreed that this bill should go over to the next day for the suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection was made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], which was withdrawn, and was renewed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not consent that it should go over to the next day, but withdrew it for the present.

Mr. MCCREARY. Then it does not require unanimous consent——

Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MCCREARY. Then I make this request, that we take up the Senate bill 3304 for immediate consideration——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. On condition that it does not disturb the status of the bill under consideration.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky how long they are going to debate that bill?

Mr. MCCREARY. We will try to make an agreement about the length of time that it shall be debated.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. We all know about this bill, and why not just vote upon it at once?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Florida object?

Mr. MACDONALD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, the tellers have been occupying their places about one hour, and I demand that they shall report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They have reported, but a quorum has not voted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I will move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers have announced that on this question the ayes were 120, the noes 27. No quorum has voted, and the gentleman from New Jersey moves a call of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will withdraw that motion.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will withdraw it if business is to be done.

Mr. MACDONALD. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota has withdrawn his objection. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MCCREARY. I call up for consideration the Senate bill 3304, entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States," which is now before the House for consideration. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] is entitled to the floor, and I yield it to him; but before anything is done I desire to make an agreement in regard to the debate. There ought to be a limit to the debate, and I desire to make an agreement with the other side on that subject. How much time will the gentlemen on the other side want?

Mr. HITT. On this side of the House we have not had the same proportion of time for debate the gentlemen have had on the other side, and I request that we have two hours and twenty minutes. I understood that the gentleman agrees that twenty minutes be given to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have talked about this bill——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is another proposition pending, and when it is disposed of the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MCCREARY. I understand the gentlemen on the other side desire two hours' debate. This side has already had one hundred and fifty minutes and the other side has had one hundred minutes. Now, to equalize, I propose that we give to the Republican side two hours for debate and to this side an hour and ten minutes, which will make three hours and ten minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that such an arrangement would carry the debate past 5 o'clock.

Mr. MCCREARY. I am aware of that, and desire to reduce the time for debate,

Mr. MORROW. I do not see how we could consent to that; but we could extend the session until the bill is disposed of.

Mr. MCCREARY. Then I ask unanimous consent that the session be extended beyond 5 o'clock, and after we have consumed the time agreed upon that the previous question be considered as ordered upon the pending amendment and upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and that the previous question also be considered as ordered on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending bill be closed in three hours and ten minutes—two hours to be allowed the side on the left of the Chair and one hour and ten minutes to be allowed to the side on the right of the Chair; that the time for the adjournment be extended, and that the previous question be considered as ordered on the amendments and the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and also on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman permit me? The House seems to be unanimously in favor of this bill, and why can not we proceed to vote upon it now?

Mr. MCCREARY. I would be quite willing to vote upon this measure now, but our friends on the other side desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCREARY. I want to state, so that all members will be present, that this agreement contemplates taking a vote this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session is extended so that a vote shall be reached this evening.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States, which has already passed the Senate, is a bill that will actually do much to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers. It will do it as far as it can be done by a bill framed under the authority and terms of the new treaty, to carry out which and in anticipation of which this bill is proposed. The measure is a good one. It is most carefully framed to do all that is possible. It presses to the very verge of our authority under the treaty to legislate, and notwithstanding the suggestions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], that he distrusts any measure on Chinese immigration that comes from the Republican Senate, I feel assured that the most searching discussion of this bill to the very bottom in the most thorough manner will only the more certainly secure for it the assent of every member of the House.

The bill is necessarily limited to doing what is allowed or authorized by a treaty, as it deals with a question relating to a foreign nation—a question about which we have entered into solemn treaties. However eager we may be to prevent the almost intolerable evil of the influx of Chinese labor, we are and have been always compelled to deal with it in the light of our national obligations, because we are bound by plighted national honor; and the zeal of members to press the views of their constituents and to protect what they believe to be the interests of the country has ever been modified in the best minds in this House and in the Senate by that highest duty and noblest sentiment, the observance of national faith. We can not drive out or exclude a foreigner belonging to a nation with which we have a treaty except in the manner or in the degree set down in the treaty.

This has been the trouble really in all our legislation touching the Chinese labor question. The treaty was not all that we desired. Our treaties with China were in the first instances wrung from a reluctant power, and only recently have any suggestions from our Government been at all welcome in that country when we have proposed anything—either enlarged intercourse as we used to urge, or restrictions as we have done lately. Our first treaty which was of amity and commerce, that of 1844, negotiated by Caleb Cushing, was unwillingly assented to by China. The Tientsin treaty, of 1858, by Reed, was one that we obtained by co-operating with other powers that were harshly pressing China, and was extorted from a prostrated nation at the close of a disastrous war. When Mr. Burlingame, our own countryman, came back here in 1868 as a representative of China to offer us a liberal treaty of intercourse, with freedom of immigration, it was a great and signal event in the history of nations.

There had already been a large influx of Chinese labor into California; more than a hundred thousand Chinese had arrived since 1851; but there was an enthusiastic welcome to Burlingame and his proposed treaty everywhere by all parties, in California and here. It was only by the forethought of Mr. Conness, then a Republican Senator from the State of California, that the Senate was induced to add to the treaty a provision which prevented the naturalization of Chinamen in this country. The treaty itself seemed to contemplate with favor the coming of Chinese if they came freely and voluntarily; its restrictions were aimed only at the coolie trade, involuntary emigration from China.

When the Trescott-Angell treaty was made in 1880 we had already discovered the deplorable effects of the incoming of Chinese labor into California, and our commissioners pressed hard upon China to obtain as broad terms as possible to check this evil flood. They did secure the right to regulate, limit, or suspend the entry of Chinese laborers into California. The protocols show how China maintained her dignity, and it was reluctantly agreed to by a power jealous of all foreigners, with the door still only half open and with a profound distrust of all influences or propositions from without.

It is under that treaty that we have had to legislate ever since, and when in this House in 1884 a bill was presented, as stringent as could be framed without manifest and flagrant violation of treaties, there were many conscientious men who, earnest and strenuous as they might be in their desire to check the incoming of Chinese labor, said: "We can not vote for such a bill because national faith would be violated by it." For instance, that bill proposed, among other things, to subject any merchant coming here from China to a series of indignities and of inquisitorial questions, how much money he was worth, where it was, what was his business, where was he going, who was his father, who was his grandfather, whom did he know here, etc.

This, although we had agreed in the treaty to an express declaration that Chinese merchants coming to this country should have the same right to enter, travel, reside, and depart as citizens of the most favored nation; and this was just as bad faith and as gross violation of international right as to pass a law declaring that no Englishman, no Frenchman, no German, no European of any nation should land in New York without undergoing all these indignities. The pressure of public interest or the necessities of national policy are a justification of the construction of an ambiguous treaty as far as possible in our own interest; but never for its violation.

In truth, there was no urgent necessity at that time for the act, because there had just been a lull in the flood of Chinese immigration. The fact was brought out on this floor—I remember it yet—that there had not been a Chinese laborer landed at San Francisco for a number of steamers, and that there had not been five hundred of them landed since the beginning of the year. The Chinese Government, recognizing the change of sentiment in this country, and also its own interest in avoiding as far as possible all causes of irritation with the United States, had forbidden the issue of certificates to Chinamen to come here, and generally discouraged the movement. There was also, perhaps, an apprehension of the passage of the act then in prospect, which tended to prevent the agents of that immigration from great activity. At all events the immigration itself had slackened very much, while there was evident at the same time a marked change of disposition on the part of China.

That act of 1884 was passed. Then nothing could be done beyond that except by a new treaty. Public attention was called to the need of a new treaty in that debate. The press of the country emphasized the matter with great force everywhere, especially on the Pacific coast. A new administration was just coming in, and this was a burning question demanding the earliest action, for the Chinese immigration rose again, full and strong and troublesome as ever.

In the letter of the Secretary of State transmitting the new treaty that we have before us to-day to provide for and anticipate by this bill, he says himself that shortly after the advent of this Administration, in view of the manifest popular discontent in the Pacific States at the presence of the Chinese and the uselessness of laws to prevent their coming, it was considered advisable that an effort be made for relief by treaty. I do not wonder that the new administration found out what everybody knew, what had been discussed so recently on this floor and in the press. What was done? The case was urgent.

Three years and more have elapsed, and we have been all this time waiting without power to proceed a step further in legislating until now. In prospect of the treaty contemplated by this act we hope to pass a law which will tend at least to prohibit the further immigration of Chinese labor. It is much to be regretted that we have had to wait so long. There are evidences that in all this our Government has a willing party to deal with, at least to a great degree, so far as is consistent with its dignity, in the Chinese Government. I have seen it stated unofficially that a decree or order has been issued by the Chinese Government forbidding Chinese subjects who are laborers to come to this country; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] intimated the fact that this negotiation has been, in unofficial ways, made known by the State Department to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House, and I think also of the Senate. There is no doubt a willingness on the part of China to come to an agreement with us as soon as possible. They have long been willing to agree that we shall not only regulate, limit, and suspend, but totally prohibit all immigration of Chinese labor.

I regret exceedingly that I can not agree with the views of my colleagues on the committee—the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER]—that the treaty as negotiated by the Secretary of State was complete or satisfactory. It was a defective instrument as he sent it to the Senate. Had the Senate not attached to the treaty the two amendments which now appear, there is every reason to believe that the prohibition would have been evaded—evaded by thousands. Those two Senate amendments have stopped great holes in this treaty. It was largely in pursuance of suggestions in the opinions of the courts that those amendments were made.

While the words of the first article of the treaty seemed to prohibit absolutely the coming of Chinese laborers to this country, they did not touch the question which there was strong reason to believe the courts would soon touch, as my friend from California [Mr. MORROW] brought out so distinctly—the question as to the right of return of those Chinese not now in the United States, and who had certificates that they had been here and might return. The courts might hold that according to the terms of the existing treaty and the certificates they should be considered outstanding obligations on the part of this country. Then the whole flood of these certificated Chinese would again pour in. It was well and wisely thought by the Senate that this should be prevented in advance, and the amendment to the treaty was added that none should enter even if holding return certificates.

So, too, as to the second article, wherein the treaty specifies the exceptions of Chinese laborers who may come back if they carry away certificates; that is, Chinamen who leave here a child, a wife, a parent, or a thousand dollars' worth of property. Under the principles recognized by our courts, a Chinaman who pretended that he had lost his certificate would be allowed to prove by ordinary means or oral evidence his right to come into the country under this provision even if he had no certificate in hand. But the ordinary means of proof as existing among Christian nations are of very little value among Chinamen, with whom perjury is so cheap.

Hence it was prudently provided by the Senate at the end of that section, in accordance with the view in a judicial decision cited by my friend from California in his remarks on Saturday, that the returning Chinaman should bring the written evidence, the certificate itself made by our officer, which he could not falsely prove, when he pretended it was lost, by Chinese witnesses, however great the stock of cheap perjury so familiar to the courts of San Francisco. It is a severe provision, but justified by public interest and the certainty of false testimony if it is allowed. In this matter you are dealing with a subtle race, with a body of men most cunning and evasive, who have studied all the arts possible to human ingenuity, so as to search their way through every crevice into the ports and borders of the Pacific coast. Hence no precaution should have been neglected by the Senate, and the amendment was a wise one.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] finds fault with the Senate, and says it has delayed the ratification of the treaty by this. The delay is not long, and the object is of real importance and worth three weeks' time after we have waited on your State Department for over three years to make an imperfect treaty. Had the gentleman urged that the Senate had imperiled the treaty and added what China would refuse her assent to it would have been a serious charge. But he knows, we all know, that there will not be any question whatever about the assent of China. The whole tenor of the discussion from the beginning makes it evident that China is ready to assent to this provision or any other consistent with the dignity and interest of that nation. We are certain of her assent. I am, therefore, not at all alarmed by the misapprehension which the gentleman professes to have as to the consequences which may come from those Senate amendments so much deplored by him and other gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House. I am glad that the Republican Senate, in dealing with this Chinese question to-day, as well in acting on the treaty as in passing this bill to carry it out, has proceeded with that promptness, that searching care and vigilant energy which have characterized it in years gone by whenever the question of Chinese labor came up. I would that we in this Democratic House had kept abreast of the Senate.

There are some provisions of the treaty that I could have wished our State Department had ripened and perfected more fully. That provision which allows free transit of Chinese laborers throughout this country without any limit of number is one that may lead to trouble. They are left free to pass under such regulations as the Government may prescribe. It puts too great a power in the hands of a single officer—the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

I would have preferred to see a question so grave as this more determinately settled by the words of the treaty, or in accord with its provisions, by specific and detailed enactment of law. No man should have such discretion in his hands, no matter how high his station, as to be able, even by neglect or mistake, to let loose the floodgate of this Chinese immigration.

Unlike the circumstances in 1884, when we last discussed this question here, when there were few Chinamen coming into this country, there is now a great stream pouring in, more than a thousand every month, nearer fifteen hundred sometimes. The indefinite number who slip in illegally at the ports can not be ascertained, nor those who succeed in making their contraband way through the mountains upon the northern border.

The question is a present one, a great and rising question; pressing upon us and demanding action. I would myself go further in interpreting the authority granted in the words of the treaty on that subject to-day than I would have gone in 1884. Circumstances and the necessities of public interest and national policy give a meaning to words and justify action amongst friendly nations which might not otherwise be adopted.

This treaty makes no provision, and can not make any, to put an end to the irregular influx of Chinamen on our northern border by land. It is said, and I believe it to be true, that they pour through the mountain trails along the borders of British Columbia in great numbers. It is apprehended they will come, and some have come, from the southern border. That was at one time a grave source of apprehension on the South towards Mexico, when the great cooly-immigration scheme was on foot in Mexico. The Burlingame treaty anticipated in part that impending trouble. It has not come, fortunately.

The Secretary of State, in his communication I have already referred to transmitting this treaty, remarked that the attention of the Administration was called to this whole subject very early after its entry into power—to the manifest popular discontent in the States bordering on the Pacific growing out of the presence of Chinese labor there, and that owing to its lack of sympathy with our own citizens there was a necessity of something being done beyond the statute law for the relief of this situation by treaty. Yet not the first word has been heard suggesting treaty, convention, or anything else with Great Britain, the power that controls the chief point of departure in Asia of that Chinese labor which torments us, or the point of arrival, Vancouver, and the long border on the north also.

As a matter of fact Chinese laborers come to this country very rarely from China direct, but they embark from the English port of Hong-Kong. Great numbers, in spite of the local hostility of British Columbia, in spite of adverse legislation there, land at Vancouver, and they percolate through our northern borders. I would have been very glad, when the attention of this Administration was called more than three years ago to the necessity of doing something to stop this exasperating and irritating influx of pagans, if the President had thought of some convention, treaty, or arrangement with the power really in control of the whole subject.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] said the Committee on Foreign Affairs were familiar with the fact that negotiations had been long pending for the relief of the people of the Pacific Slope from this great evil. I agree that I have heard of much informal and lately of formal negotiation with China, but it has been taken with very deliberate steps. The Chinese rulers themselves are much annoyed by the existence of this source of irritation. Yet notwithstanding all this discussion, we have not yet had a remedy provided by any treaty, negotiation, or arrangement with Great Britain by which to put an end to it and to stop it at once.

There may be reasons unknown to members of Congress that prevent any concerted action with the English Government; and I do not profess to know of the influences that govern our diplomacy now. I know that they can not be always understood in all their bearings outside of the Department. I am well aware, too, that a criticism of this kind should always be made in a spirit of fairness, and not of carping fault-finding. But I submit, sir, in all fairness, it is a just criticism of this Executive, who states that for three years the Administration has been considering this source of irritation, which can only be cured by treaty, that it has never even thought of that which is so self-evident to the plainest man on the Pacific Slope, who feels himself wronged by the presence of the pagan laborer at his side. Certainly there was no delay in entering upon negotiations with Great Britain concerning our fishing interests. Only eight days after the inauguration that unfortunate and precipitate correspondence began with the British Minister, that was learned with such surprise and alarm by the whole fishing interest

There is urgent need of early action in regard to this treaty, and I am sorry to delay the House a single minute from voting upon this bill. I was desirous that we might vote as soon as it was called up the other day, when it came back from the committee, by the gentleman from Kentucky, as no extended debate seemed necessary. I was desirous, as were all of our friends on this side of the House, that this bill should be taken up for action the moment it came in from the Senate, notwithstanding the expression of distrust by the distinguished representative Democrat from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] who sits before me and honors me with his attention, who said he distrusted all measures of his kind coming from a Republican Senate.

He ought to have taken the word of his own Democratic Committee on Foreign Affairs, which had examined it as well as the Department, that the Senate, Republican as it is, has in this matter done its work well; and the bill, when it came here, might have been considered at once, and I think the President's signature would not have been withheld a moment. In that case it would have been law to-day. But it went to the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon his objection. When it came back it would have been passed here after a brief debate, upon its own proper merits had not a violent partisan speech by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM], not aimed at Chinese immigration, but at the November election, been interjected into the debate, which thrust it over another day and brought on this prolonged discussion and delay. Who are the friends of speedy action here, and which side is causing all this delay?

But the bill is, as I have already said when I began, one that I am sure we must all of us on both sides, in fairness and in patriotism, assent to, though it does come from a Republican Senate, and I trust we will not adjourn to-day, Mr. Speaker, without passing it through the House.

I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. McKENNA].

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the gentleman takes his seat let me ask him if the bill has not been somewhat improved by an amendment of the House put upon it?

Mr. HITT. The amendment offered by the distinguished Republican member from California [Mr. MORROW] in the committee, and accepted by the committee, is one of precaution, which I think is wisely proposed and has been wisely accepted.

Mr. McCREARY. Before the gentleman from Illinois takes his seat I, too, would like to ask him a question.

Mr. HITT. Certainly, if the gentleman from California will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. McCREARY. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that the bill ought to have been passed, and thinks it could have been passed as it came from the Senate to the House?

Mr. HITT. I said that it would have been taken up if there had been no objection the moment it came in from the Senate. I think, myself, our scrutiny of the bill has done it no harm.

Mr. McCREARY. Does the gentleman think it ought to have been passed in the form it came from the Senate?

Mr. HITT. I think, as I have said, that the amendment of the House, suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], who asked to have it taken up, was a wise one and a necessary one.

Mr. McCREARY. Because I was about to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Committee on Foreign Affairs had added to the bill an important amendment, and if that amendment should not be adopted, or if the bill as it came from the Senate had been adopted, then between the time of approval of this bill and the ratification of the treaty there would have been no law whatever to prevent the Chinese from coming to this country.

Mr. HITT. I have stated that the amendment was a wise one.

Mr. MORROW. I wish to state that I had drawn that amendment and was prepared to offer it personally when the bill as it came from the Senate was before the House for consideration.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. And it would have been settled without a reference of the question to the committee at all.

Mr. HITT. Yes, at once. I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. McKENNA].

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HITT. One hour.

Mr. McKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I have attended to this debate with interest, and especially to the speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM]. It did not surprise me much. I have got used to such exhibitions on this floor. I am not sure, sir, that it is necessary to reply to it. It was so artificial and affected and interested, and so visibly so, that it could deceive nobody, or if it could deceive, its deception was, and is, intended for another audience than that to which it was addressed. The speaker held the floor exclusively. The author stuck to his manuscript exclusively. As there was none of the spontaneousness of debate about it, he had resolved that there should not be any of the truth that springs from debate about it. It was to be sent rank to the voters of Indiana, in the full "blossom of its sins unhouseled and unaneled." I am told, sir, that contemporaneously with its delivery it was setting up or even before its delivery, it had been set up in the Government Printing Office and furnished in advance to the New York press, so that its poison could be hastened through all the channels of communication to a credulous people. We can not follow it, sir. Its distribution will shun the day. We need not follow it. This year Indiana can defy its surreptitious poison or any poison like it.

Mr. Speaker, when my colleague [Mr. MORROW] moved to immediately consider the pending bill—when it came from the Senate and was laid before the House by the Speaker—he could not have expected opposition to his motion from a Democrat. A Californian—Republican or Democrat—having regard to what his State was entitled to, rather than what it could get, might have objected. But the treaty, and the bill is but the enaction of the treaty, is the best that this Administration can do or will do. It is not what the situation demands and will one day insist on. But as it is the best that this Democratic Administration will do or can do, opposition—no, not even impediment was expected from a Democrat. The Speaker did not expect it, or he would not have recognized my colleague; but objection was made by Democrats and the bill was maneuvered into the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I will not say that this maneuvering had other purposes than what appeared in this debate—to give the Democratic party a chance to attack Mr. Harrison. It is significant, Mr. Speaker, that no member of the committee has done so; and it is as pleasant as it is significant. Maybe the members of the committee were too dignified to do so, or too fair; and the gentleman from Indiana was pushed forward, or rushed forward, to a congenial and invidious service for his party. It would have been better taste if he had deputed the office to another. He is a fellow-citizen of General Harrison. This did not check him. The distresses of the Democratic party could not await on the amenities of life. Things must be getting awfully rough in Indiana. [Laughter.] Dire necessity obliged, or I am sure the gentleman from Indiana would not have volunteered or could not have been forced to the disagreeable and invidious rôle he enacted on Saturday.

I will not complain therefore of him. He need not, however, have dropped into the vulgarity of sneering. He could not hurt General Harrison by it; he did himself injustice. Big men do not sneer; only little men do that. It is only little men that have to do that. It is the only way that they can drag down to their low level the merit they can not attain to, and because they can not attain to it hate it, and sneer at it, and spitefully use it. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from Indiana had no such excuse, and I wonder at him. Mr. Speaker, some things occur here that would be diverting if they did not become tiresome by their repetition. I do not know, sir, that the fantastic tricks that are played in this House make the angels weep, because I do not know that the angels are regarding us much, or concerned about us much. But I do know that the fantastic tricks that are played in this House, and before the country, are fit to sadden men and to disgust men.

There must be an infinite gullibility on the part of the people, or at least the Democratic party thinks so. It may be, sir, that this is the only way it can account for its existence and success. But at any rate, sir, it must think that there is such gullibility, or it would quit its perpetual play of politics and would do business for the business sake; would do good, if it were capable of doing good, for good's sake; and not always, as it will, help one party and hurt the other. Can not it forget for one instant the offices and the spoils? It seems not. Can not it rise for one instant above the petty practice of being the servant, I had almost said the tool, of politics and politicians? It seems not.

But, sir, the attempt to make politics out of the Chinese question is ludicrous. It is even ludicrous in a Democratic Congress. [Laughter.] If there is any question that I had supposed was settled, that has passed from dispute to conviction, and which engrosses us all, and is the destruction of none, it is the Chinese question, and how thoroughly idle it is, how thoroughly wearisome it is, how thoroughly nauseous it is to recur from the final and settled stages of a question to the first and disputable stages I need not emphasize. But, sir, it appears that the Democratic party is always doing this. It loves to delve among dead things, and is never so happy as when it is fondling a corpse or buzzing about a corpse. Why, sir, from the action of some of its members I should think that the only life that it likes and aims at is the life that infests dead things, and that the only light that it cares to shine by is the light of decay and putrescence.

But I am surprised at the gentleman from Indiana. He has been an active member—his face to the front, and to the future. He has not heretofore appeared in the rôle of the antiquary or the grub. [Laughter.] This has been the office of the antique Congressmen who have been in so many Congresses that they have become fond of relics, and think the mummy of an issue better than a live issue.

But, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Indiana has always been an active member and has always lived in the present, he ought to have known, and I have no doubt did know, that in the rawness of the first stages of the question opposition is excusable. Afterwards it may be reprehensible; afterwards the important inquiry is not whether one was reluctant to begin, but how strong one is now. Not when one began, but how long has he held out and will he hold out.

Judas Iscariot commenced very early, but he quit as early. Saul of Tarsus commenced later, and preceded his commencement with bitterness and persecution, but his conversion was thorough and constant afterwards, and his teaching and example marched down the ages, and will march down the ages forever and forever. [Applause.]

And, Mr. Speaker, as I can recall the time and movements of his magnificent mission and the glorious eloquence of his addresses to the Ephesians and Corinthians, the eager, entranced multitudes that followed him and loved him, I can also recall some pitiful, piddling Democratic Gentile from an ancient Indiana snapping and snarling and frantically squealing, "Look at his record!" "Look at his record!" [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, what would have been the destiny of Christianity if that ancient Indiana Democrat could have been heard? [Laughter.] Look at records! The Democratic party should be the last to recall records. No party—I do not say it in accusation; I quit that taunt years ago—no party—and I commend it to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] who honors me with his presence—no party has claimed so much or has received so much from the charity which forgets and forgives as has the Democratic party.

Its constant hope has been that Time's lengthening shadow would at last reach and hide its deformities, and I say to the gentlemen on the other side of the House if we on this side do not lift the "blanket of the dark" from your crimes, do you not lift it from our faults. If we are willing to let bygones be bygones, you should be. Gentlemen, turn from the past. Hail with us the light of the new issue. Its sun has full high advanced and is advancing. Do not avoid or deny it. In the language of another you may raise a smouldering smoke that may obscure it from your own eyes, but you can not strike it from the heavens. But I do not blame you. In its light there is no gladness for you or hope. To you it is the "sun of Austerlitz."

But, sir, the gentleman from Indiana may hold and compose himself in peace. He need not worry about the record of General Harrison, and he may be assured that the concern of the people of this nation is not what General Harrison was, but what he is and will be, not what the Democratic party was, but what it is and will be, and they can not be juggled from that concern by any artful politics or artful politicians.

But if we must minutely examine records, if we must peruse with microscopic gaze, motives and men, as does the gentleman from Indiana, I think, sir, we may challenge the boasting of the Democratic party and can easily detect and pierce the gaudy gloss of its Chinese record. The gentleman should have known that it is common experience that an early concession is often an interested concession. It may be as swift to desert or as soon to grow tired as it was swift to comply. The gentleman should have thought of that before he challenged investigation or view of the Democratic record.

There is evidence to raise a suspicion that what it did in the Chinese matter was the interested, I will not say the demagogic, attempt of a minority party to catch at every aspect of popularity, and often reckless as to how it catches at it, too. It is very certain that the Democratic party soon grew inactive. The gentleman from Indiana, in his headlong rush and charge, forgot that criminal omission of 1880 and 1881—for criminal omission it was, because he himself has quoted Mr. Thurman to show that ignorance was inexcusable even at an earlier period, and he himself, as eloquently as truly, displayed the importance of immediate and always action.

The gentleman forgot, I repeat, the criminal omission of a Democratic Congress in 1880 and 1881. From this omission sprang and is springing all the evils we are contending with. From this omission came the evil, if evil there was, in General Harrison's action or non-action. If the Democratic party had performed its duty then there would not have been any evil for General Harrison to have assisted or avoided, and it is proper and significant retribution, fulfilling the proverb, that the gentleman from Indiana did not utter a single malediction but the instant it flew from his mouth it returned to roost on his own head.

The gentleman forgot the significant halt of his party in the Forty-ninth Congress. This has been referred to, sir, but I will refer to it again for the sake of continuity in my argument, and also for the purpose of drawing attention to some aspects of it that have not been referred to. My colleague [Mr. MORROW] introduced a bill in the Forty-ninth Congress restricting Chinese immigration the very first bill day of the session. It was adequate to the situation, completely adequate to the situation, and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that it was very much better than the pretentious treaty. It would have been more useful, besides because it came at a more critical time. It provided for twenty years' exclusion. It was reported for only ten years. The Democratic committee could not raise itself to the height of twenty years. It was reported, therefore, for ten, which would make sixteen years in all, including the time of the old law not expired. It provided against every abuse and would have prevented every fraud. It was inexcusable to have dawdled about it as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] said the Democratic party dawdled about it in the vain hope that the Democratic Administration would negotiate a treaty.

Mr. MCCREARY. I did not understand the gentleman's reference to me.

Mr. MCKENNA. I said that the Morrow bill was so good and so perfect, so adequate and so complete, that it was inexcusable to dawdle about it as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] said the Democratic party did dawdle about it in the vain hope that the Democratic Administration would negotiate a treaty.

Mr. MCCREARY. I desire to say to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] that I did not say that the Democratic party had dawdled about it.

Mr. MCKENNA. I have not yielded to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MCKENNA. No sir. He will have to ask me before I yield.

Mr. MCCREARY. I am sure the gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me, and I desire to correct his statement.

Mr. MCKENNA. Go ahead.

Mr. MCCREARY. I did not make the remark which the gentleman attributes to me.

Mr. MCKENNA. No, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman did not use the word "dawdle," but that is my description of his action and of the Democratic committee's action, and it is a true description, too. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, what was there—the gentleman can answer in his own time—what was there in the Morrow bill (which was but a complete fulfillment of the existing treaty) to prevent a Democratic Administration from negotiating another treaty? Not a word, not a syllable nor an idea. Why, sir, that bill was not even reported from the Democratic committee until the importunities of the California delegation had not only become fatigued but had become a nuisance.

Mr. MCCREARY. It was put on the Calendar May 1, 1887.

Mr. MCKENNA. The gentleman will please not interrupt me. He has plenty of time to make any statement he desires.

It was never passed, Mr. Speaker. Where was the Democratic zeal then? "High-reaching Buckingham grew circumspect." Was it not important that it should be passed? Why, the gentleman from Kentucky on last Saturday did not want to wait even two hours; and to-day he metes out the minutes as if meting out precious jewels of time. Then it certainly was important to be passed. The gentleman himself stated in eloquent tones that by the continuance of Chinese immigration the very institutions of the country were put in peril; and my colleague [Mr. MORROW] showed that during the time the Democratic House waited and wasted, 20,000 Chinamen came to the country to compete with those already here against our wage-earners.

But, Mr. Speaker, for fear that this non-action would not be pro-Chinese enough, for fear it would not denote with emphasis enough the Democratic party, the Democratic committee reported and the Democratic House passed a Chinese bill. It passed the bill to give $147,000 to the victims of the Rock Springs riot. There was no legal obligation to do it. The Secretary of State said so. No international obligation to do it. The Secretary of State said so. Yet it was done, and speedily done. I did not vote for that bill, nor will I stop to question its merits. For argument's sake I will concede its merits. But it was not more meritorious than the restriction bill and the great and dear interests that depended on the restriction bill.

Mark you, sir, ignorance was inexcusable; the gentleman from Indiana thinks he has proved that; Republican institutions were menaced, labor was threatened with degradation and impoverishment; the gentleman from Kentucky has proved that. Yet the Democratic House of Representatives, with its 43 Democratic majority, abandoned institutions and laborers, and marched right up to the tune of $147,000 for dead Chinamen, but would not stir one inch for menaced white men.

Oh, yes; you had abundant zeal, gentlemen. And the gentleman from Indiana was in Congress then. He says that Mr. Harrison remained in his seat in the Senate in cold and abhorred silence, while burning eloquence was uttered all about him of the sufferings of men. "Callous, heartless, immovable," is the gentleman's language. Why was the gentleman from Indiana silent in the Forty-ninth Congress? There was plenty of chance then for burning eloquence for the sufferings of men. But dumb he was, and dumb remained. Dumb his party was, and dumb remained. He and it sat "callous, heartless, and immovable." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] In bitterest words the gentleman has pronounced his own phillipic.

Here was a chance—I think I quote the gentleman correctly—here was a chance "to present the question with a fervor and a sentiment that would have aroused the innermost feelings of the very soul of any man who had an atom of sympathy for those doomed to endless toil"—eloquent language from the gentleman from Indiana. But, alas, the gentleman did not feel the "fervor" in the Forty-ninth Congress, or he knew that his party would have been as insensible to it as a stick or a stone. At any rate he did not try, but waited over two years; ay, three years of a Democratic administration to go by, and the gentleman comes out of his silence and thinks that he has done his duty and his whole duty when he denounces General Harrison for the omissions that he was guilty of himself. Ah, Mr. Speaker, it is a common experience that people who live in fragile places will throw stones.

The bill for the payment of $147,000 was the inspiration of a Democratic Secretary of State. It was whispered, and somewhat forcibly whispered, too, that its passage was necessary to smooth the path of negotiations. Democratic diplomacy had to be pioneered by a gift of $147,000. Is it not strange, Mr. Speaker, that Democratic diplomacy must always concede the nation's rights, as with Canada, or buy them, as with China? [Applause.] The gentleman from Indiana has taught me to feel and express indignation at this.

The Democratic party, he said, in describing its action on one of the bills, was not tender—I think I quote him correctly—"was not tender of the feelings of the Chinese Government." Should a Democratic Secretary of State, then, have been tender of the feelings of the Chinese Government? Should it have paused to make the rights of American citizens and the American nation a matter of bargain and barter with the Chinese Government? Should it have paused, "if our citizens were suffering, to see whether the proposed measure" (I am using the language of the gentleman from Indiana) "for the relief of the citizens met the approval of the Emperor of China or not?"

A Democratic Secretary of State who would do so, in the gentleman's denunciation, is abject and un-American. Such a Secretary "would, indeed"—I again quote the gentleman; he has equipped me with words and suggested their use—"such a Secretary would, indeed, be conscientious, and he could not have better performed the wishes of the Emperor of China if he bore the imperial commission rather than the commission of the United States"—language substantially that the gentleman used about General Harrison. If it is true of the Secretary of State, it is true of more than he. The Secretary is but the minister of the Administration. If it is true of him, it is true of the Democratic President of the United States, of the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, if we must get down to politics. And, sir, it is as true of the President and of the Secretary of State as it is of General Harrison. Let us be fair. In no sense is it true of either—in no absolute sense, nor in the remotest transferred or metaphorical sense—for whatever else President Cleveland and Secretary Bayard may be, I do not think they are "abject and un-American," and I will not allow the bad example of the gentleman from Indiana make me say so.

So, sir, the Democratic party paused in the Forty-ninth Congress. Its Secretary of State paused; he had been an early zealot. Its House of Representatives paused; it too had been an early zealot. Whether either started again, and how, we shall consider hereafter.

Let us now contrast a Republican Senate with the Democratic House, Mr. Harrison with his accusers.

Mr. Fair, of Nevada, introduced in the Senate a counterpart of the Morrow bill. It was the Morrow bill. It was entirely of Mr. MORROW'S composition. Senator Fair did not prepare a word or letter of it. And it is always so, Mr. Speaker, all the intelligence that has been usefully exerted in this matter, all the push and activity, have come from Republicans. No Democrat in any useful sense has devised means or pointed out the way.

The bill passed the Senate and it came to the House. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and there it was smothered; and smothered, it is fair to infer from the language of the gentleman from Kentucky, by the connivance of the Secretary of State and the Democratic Administration.

Mr. MCCREARY. I deny the statement of the gentleman from California.

Mr. MCKENNA. Well, the gentleman can explain in his own time why it was not reported. It was kept in committee, it is said, so negotiations should go on. If it was kept there, was it not kept there by the connivance of the Secretary of State and the Democratic Administration? And the Administration must also be held responsible for the sin of allowing twenty thousand Chinamen to come into the country, and for those which may come until the treaty is ratified.

Mr. MCCREARY rose.

Mr. MCKENNA. I do not yield. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] was unfortunate. He should not have drawn attention to the Democratic record. The best parts of it is drawn into suspicion by the conduct of the party when off its guard or when it has other interests. Why, I ask, if you were so zealous, gentlemen—why did you not report the Felton bill? It regarded the respect and the dignity of the nation—the respect and dignity of China, but——

MCCREARY. I understand the gentleman addressed me a question.

Mr. MCKENNA. You do not give me time to finish my sentence, but jump up and interrupt me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked the gentleman whether he yielded.

Mr. MCKENNA. I do not yield to interruptions, but notwithstanding my refusal the gentleman jumps up in the middle of a sentence and throws me off the line of my remarks by interpolating questions.

Mr. PETERS. He does not even ask for permission.

Mr. MCKENNA. I repeat, why did not the committee report the Felton bill? It was dignified and respectful to this nation; it was dignified and respectful to the Chinese Government, and it provided for perpetual prohibition of Chinese immigration. Why did not the committee report the Henley bill? It was harsher in its method than the Felton bill, but it also provided for perpetual prohibition of Chinese immigration.

The gentleman from Kentucky said there was a treaty obligation in the way. The gentleman from Indiana says we should observe none, and denounces Mr. Harrison for his scruples, which he intimates were sentimental and hypocritical.

Mr. MCCREARY. I merely wish to state that the committee did report the Morrow bill, and placed it upon the Calendar.

Mr. MCKENNA. Why did you not pass the Morrow bill? The gentleman constantly asks questions to divert me from the point. If there were treaty obligations, the Felton bill regarded them. Were you not bound to report it? It is the duty of a government—and you were the government then—to prevent all the evil it can prevent; to do all the good it can do. If it neglects either it is reprehensible. A great man once said:

He who sleeps on his watch betrays his cause as much as he who deserts to the enemy.

[Applause.]

In the light of all this how can the Democratic party escape just condemnation? Why, sir, you can not tell when the party is sincere or when it is showing off. [Laughter.] Mr. STEWART, Senator from Nevada, the other day related a significant fact of history about it. He said that Mr. Thurman, the Democratic Vice-Presidential candidate, and one whom you are proud to say and name as "the noblest Roman of you all," that even he would play at politics, and, for the purpose of partisan advantage, risked the dearest interests of his country, and maneuvered, with Sumner and Schurz, and others like them, to force Chinese naturalization on the country. I hope, sir, that he was moved only by partisan purposes. I hope that he was not moved by the grosser and baser purposes that if Chinese naturalization should be forced upon the country he could claim for his party Chinese suffrage as the reward of his valuable aid.

I do not believe that he was so influenced, but adopting the style of criticism of the gentleman from Indiana I might say he was so influenced.

Mr. Speaker, I am tired already of the exposure of Democratic brag, and tired of enumeration of Democratic omissions, and yet I am not done.

How stands its Secretary of State? Its Secretary of State was for many years a great, able, and distinguished Senator of the United States. The office of Senator of the United States is an eminent office and its duties should be discharged with grave and balanced care and deliberation. In a special sense, under the Constitution, is committed to a Senator of the United States the preservation of international obligations and the keeping of the nation's honor. What Mr. Bayard should observe as Secretary of State Mr. Bayard should have observed as Senator of the United States. Can any one deny it? Did he do it? I will let the Secretary of State answer for the Senator; I will let the Senator answer for the Secretary of State.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], in his dignified and statesman-like eloquence, related to the House how Chinese exclusiveness was forced or cajoled by the nations of the earth. Our method was not force, as England's was. Ours was adroit diplomacy, and we crawled through the breaches made in the Chinese wall by the guns of other nations; and, sir, we had become so used to the act and attitude of crawling that we have not stood up straight since. [Laughter.] But we got in, and we all remember with what gush and flourish the Burlingame treaty was ratified; with what Democratic gush as well a Republican gush, for we all gushed.

That treaty, sir, declares, with pompous explicitness and the usual verbal salams and genuflections of showy courtesy, that it is the inalienable right of all men, Chinese as well as American, to change their residence and their allegiance at their pleasure. Mr. Bayard, as Senator, construed this to mean all Americans, any number of Americans, but only fifteen Chinamen at a time, and voted for the so-called fifteen passenger act bill, which prohibited any vessel from bringing more than fifteen Chinamen at a time. I would not patiently listen to any one who would dispute with me that if, under the explicitness of the treaty, the coming of Chinamen could be limited to fifteen, it could not be limited to a less number, but whether to a less number or not, only fifteen at a time was practical prohibition. We have approached no such remedy since. Bayard, Senator, had no scruples. They come to Bayard, Secretary of State. President Hayes vetoed the bill, and Bayard, Senator—no prophecy then of Secretary of State—with nimble alacrity voted to pass the bill over the veto. The bill was distinctly vetoed on international grounds.

I will not follow the gentleman from Indiana in his attempt to attribute sinister purposes to President Hayes. The country acquiesced in the President's views. Negotiations were started to modify the Burlingame treaty, and mark you, Mr. Speaker, the negotiations were not proceeded or accompanied by the gift of $147,000 or of a dollar or of a cent. It is Democratic diplomacy, not Republican diplomacy, which needs such adventitious aids. A new treaty was negotiated. It qualified the universal permission of the Burlingame treaty, and allowed us to suspend or limit the coming of Chinese to this country for a reasonable time, but not to prohibit it.

A bill was introduced in the Senate by Mr. Senator MILLER to execute the new treaty. It provided for the suspension or prohibition of immigration for twenty years. It is useful to remember the time of suspension, for it will be significant hereafter. Mr. Bayard, Senator—no prophecy yet of Secretary of State—voted for that bill. It was vetoed, and he voted again actively to pass the bill over the veto. I am not afraid, you see, to give a Democratic Senator's record. Then the ten-year bill was passed. A few years elapse and Bayard, Senator, becomes Bayard, Secretary of State, and represents, I presume, the Democratic party; and is to execute its zeal against the Chinese. Then, of course, full remedy, peace, and rest. Was he not an active, nimble Senator. No treaty obligations bound as Senator his bold and fierce Americanism, his devoted love for "laborers doomed to endless toil." He was no miserable, mercenary Republican, if I may paraphrase the language of the gentleman from Indiana, adoring only capitalists and dollars, and helping capitalists to cheap labor, but a great Democratic chieftain. Of course he recommended a fifteen-passenger act; he had voted for one. Of course he recommended a twenty years' exclusion act; he had voted for one. Of course he recommended another ten years' exclusion act; he had voted for one.

Alas, no, Mr. Speaker. Bayard, Senator, had disappeared; Bayard, Secretary of State, was another man. Not a recommendation, not a movement. Three years of administration, and not an anti-Chinese sign or sound. Not a sound but the sound of revelry by night from the balls at the Chinese minister's with the Democratic Secretary of State in attendance. [Laughter.] It is not reported, sir, whether the chopsticks that were used on those festal and Oriental nights by the Democratic members of the House and Senate who attended were the same chopsticks that the naughty Republican party let in free of duty and taxed Bibles, as the gentleman from Indiana charged.

Seriously, sir, how can this various conduct of the Senator and the Secretary—the inactivity of the Secretary of State be reconciled with the bragging of the gentleman from Indiana? Did treaty obligations restrain the Secretary? They did not restrain the Senator. Can they bind the Secretary and not bind the Senator? I said I would make the Secretary answer for the Senator. I have done so, and if the answer vindicates the Secretary it condemns the Senator—if it condemns the Senator it vindicates General Harrison. He had no more scruples than the Secretary of State, and his scruples did not cost anything. The scruples of the Secretary of State will cost the country the sum of $147,000, the amount of the indemnity bill, and $276,619.75, the amount provided to be paid by the new treaty, and which is worse, 20,000 Chinese immigrants to compete with the labor of our country.

The gentleman from Indiana says that Mr. Harrison voted for Chinese naturalization. A falser statement, or rather deduction, was never made. It is the last accusation of interest and despair. It is the forlorn hope of partisan misrepresentation.

Even as the gentleman from Indiana made it Mr. Harrison denied it. This should have been and should be enough, on account of Mr. Harrison's character. Even the charge against him admits he is fearless and no demagogue. His reputation shows him truthful. But with some men honesty is nothing, evidence everything; and a circumstance which can be tortured and turned any way is dwelt on, while worth and character are contemptuously slurred away. I will not allow myself to be afraid of such an effort as to General Harrison. If such an effort could succeed, there would indeed be nothing "serious in mortality, * * * renown and grace would be dead."

Against the accusation I put General Harrison's word—against the accusation I put a worth and a reputation which have made him eminent in Indiana, which have made him renowned in the nation, and which have selected him and fitted him for the splendidest station on earth. I disdain to discuss the charge further.

As to the statement of naturalization of Chinese in Indiana I am surprised. Can any one think it is important or reflects on General Harrison? If it is important there is record evidence of the naturalization. But not the record is produced, but only hearsay of the record. Even a member of the House of Representatives, as the gentleman from Indiana is, nor a Senator of the United States, as Mr. VEST is, can prevail by hearsay against the legal and natural presumption which marks as false a fact which is rested on secondary evidence when primary evidence is accessible. That Chinamen were voted by Mr. Harrison's law partner has been denied by his law partner.

If the gentleman from Indiana had asserted it on his personal or representative responsibility I should accept it; but when he rested it on the evidence of a Democratic clerk in a Democratic Department, I may suspect a kinship with the Morey letter. It comes, then, with all the signs and badges of that infamous imposition. But the people can not be duped again. In this satisfaction I dismiss the subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to the consideration of the treaty. It is the boast of the Democratic party and measures that party's merit. I would fain have regarded it as a gift horse and shrunk from the ungraciousness of looking in its mouth. I was willing to take it at its worth. I can not take it at what the gentleman from Indiana says it is worth. I might have left it with the mild and modest assumption of merit for the Administration by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. Their manner would have induced me to more than that, for in their manner and dispositions to the question California knows that it can only receive adequate solution.

California here, as she does at home, would keep it out of politics. She would make it not Republican, not Democratic, but American. She would enlist the patriotism of all, and make the question, not the bragging competition of the Democratic party or Republican party, but the emulation of all as citizens, not pausing at party, but eager for the good of the country.

If such dispositions had earlier prevailed the remedy for the evil we complaim of would be further advanced. The treaty is not adequate. It was very insufficient when it was submitted to the Senate. As it was before then, I can not account for and not condemn the Secretary of State. The evil of the old restriction bills was not in the period of exclusion; the period of exclusion was their merit. The evil was in the exceptions from exclusion. The treaty does not correct this evil; it increases it so as to make the treaty without the Senate amendments no advance on existing law.

There was infinite simplicity in the State Department or carelessness when the treaty was agreed to. If I was of the temper of the gentleman from Indiana; if my party was in the distress his party is in and I could bring myself to help it by invidious criticism, I should say that the ignorance which appears to have presided and prevailed when the treaty was agreed to by the State Department can not be reconciled with ability and learning and zeal in the Secretary of State.

Was his simplicity deceived by oriental diplomacy? Did not he care? Did he linger, like Cinderella in the child's story, too long at the Chinese ball, and all the brave zeal of his party wither to rags at the stroke of the hour that he had forgotten, and made him rush for refuge into anything? The Senate resolution, which I shall quote hereafter, may have startled him.

But to continue. The exception to the prohibition of Chinese immigration in existing law is of the laborers who were here at the ratification of the last treaty or who had departed from this country before the passage of the existing law. Provisions to identify the laborers who were entitled to come and for the exclusion of all others apparently made the old treaty perfect. This seemed simple, but the laborers who were entitled to come multiplied beyond the multiplication of the loaves and fishes in the miracle, and the whole population of China seemed to be able to prove a prior residence in this country.

The new treaty is as facile to Chinamen. The new treaty makes one of the exceptions to prohibition to consist in the return of any laborer who has a debt of a thousand dollars due him and pending settlement. A debt from whom? From anybody; from another Chinaman. Must I stop to argue to this intelligent body, or to any body, that the identification of a Chinaman, as in the old acts, is rendered easier by the addition of the circumstance that a debt shall be due him and pending settlement, as in the new treaty.

The productive perjury of Chinese witnesses which so easily invents a place and a time and the circumstances of a prior residence will invent without straining a debt of a thousand dollars pending settlement. The treaty you will see, sir, is not a very perfect remedy.

What do the Senate amendments add? The Senate amendments include in the prohibition of the treaty all those laborers who are not at its date in the United States; and if the amendments do not make the giving of the certificate as they ought to do an executive question exclusively, they make the fact and the sufficiency of the certificate when produced an executive question exclusively, and irresponsible courts and habeas corpuses and bail bonds are made impossible.

The Senate amendments, therefore, are an improvement to the treaty and give it the only vitality it has or good it has. The pending bill is also a Senate measure, and is better again than the treaty even as amended, and all therefore that is tolerable in the treaty and bill is the work of the Republican Senate.

I have referred, sir, to the delay of the Administration. It is significant that on the 1st day of March of this year the Senate passed the resolution which I now read:

Resolved, That in view of the difficulties and embarrassments that have attended the regulation of the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States, under the limitations of our treaties with China, the President of the United States be requested to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China, containing a provision that no Chinese laborer shall enter the United States.

This resolution was delivered to the President on the 3d, and on the 12th the treaty was signed. Did the Senate resolution cause the treaty? It is certain the resolution hastened the treaty. Longer delay was possible. So everywhere the Republican Senate's care and vigilance and prompting are conspicuous.

Mr. Speaker, I said in the beginning of my remarks that while the treaty is the best the Administration will do or can do it does not satisfy the situation. Indeed, the whole proceeding shows still a want of appreciation on this side of the continent of the evil, and that Eastern sentiment has not yet reached the height of the argument.

But the Pacific coast does not despair. The day of full relief is at last breaking. Its light streams from the Republican platform.

A few words more, sir, and I am through with this question. The opposition to Chinese immigration by the Pacific coast was once referred by those not of the coast and native to the evil as an unreasoning race prejudice. It was not thought to be, as it was and ever has been, the chosen conduct of men taught in the traditions of a free country and reverencing its principles, hoping always to live by them and ready if need be to die for them; willing, always willing to extend them to all people capable of receiving, preserving, and perpetuating them; never willing nor ever will be of debauching and shaming them by making them the profit of Chinese parasites.

It was evident to us that the Chinese could not to become as Americans, that Americans ought not to become as Chinese. One or the other might have to be. We could not raise the Chinese to us. We should not stoop to them. One or the other we might have to do. In these alternatives, the alternatives of their continued immigration, we thought we had and think we have dear and grave interest, and while reverencing the principles and institutions of a free country and knowing all the hope there is in them for mankind, we can not but discern that any effort to extend them to China and the Chinese will be impossible—as impossible to them as destructive to ourselves. And, believe me, sir, let Chinamen come as they are coming, and will come if not restrained, and you will as surely destroy this free Government as though, to use a figure of Wendell Phillips, you should put gunpowder under the Capitol.

Mr. Speaker, I shall have to skip a good deal of what I desired to say, and will go to the part, and to that part which I really consider the most important in the discussion. I do not regard it as very important what the Republican party has done heretofore, because I consider the important thing is what it is now. It is important to inquire why the gentleman from Indiana has made this attack on General Harrison. I think, sir, the purpose is palpable.

The Democratic party has threatened the industries of the country, and it stands appalled at the doom that awaits it from the indignant workingmen of the country. It is trying to deflect the blow to General Harrison by a conjuration of the Chinese question; but, Mr. Speaker, the attempt will not succeed. The object and purpose of it is too evident. Besides, the principles of that party, if consistently carried out, lead directly to Chinese immigration. I do not mean to say that Democrats are not sincere in their position, but I say if they were consistent under the declaration of their principles they would favor cheap Chinese labor. It is a natural deduction from the economic doctrines they have announced. Not swallow their words or stultify their record, to use the language of the gentleman from Indiana. They will have to swallow a whole dictionary of words and encyclopedia of bad policy and bad principles before they can consistently support the bill. They declare that they are in favor of cheap goods. Why not be in favor of the cheap cause of cheap goods?

I would like to have time to elaborate that, but I must hurry on. General Harrison opposes Chinese immigration. He has declared so, or he could not be the candidate of the Republican party at this time on its platform; because, sir, coincidently with clear declarations for the protective system is as clear a declaration for the absolute prohibition of Chinese immigration, and the declaration is consistent and just. The prohibition of Chinese immigration is the concretest form of protection to American labor. Under it all the evils of cheap foreign goods and cheap foreign labor is seen the distinctest and felt the bitterest. Through it and on account of it the country has been forced to the conviction that the time has at last come to consider, not to whom it can extend its civilization, but for whom it can preserve it; not to whom it may give liberty, but for whom it may lose liberty; not to whom it may give bread, but for whom it can save bread. These are the alternatives of free trade and protection, and from them. There is also forced this other consideration, that equality and freedom are not alone to be the radiance of the heights, heaven-kissed enough, of ease and wealth, but must illumine and adorn the slopes and levels where struggle is and where labor is, where the nation is and forever must be, and where grace and beauty and happiness must come to it if they come at all. And if they come at all they can only come and stay and grow from protection to American labor. The very essence of the protective system, the very essence of the principles of the Republican party, is exclusion to cheap goods and cheap men, and General Harrison is its chieftain and will be its President.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the following proceedings were had:

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be allowed to finish his remarks.

Mr. BYNUM. You have time which you can give to him.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] have sufficient time to conclude his remarks, and that the same amount of time be granted to the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That changes the order of the House, and would necessitate a like extension of the time for adjournment beyond 5 o'clock.

Mr. HEARD. If it is expected to reach a vote upon this question to-day, this will compel us to stay just that much longer.

Mr. PETERS. It will; but I will make the request that the hour for adjournment be postponed the necessary time.

Mr. MCCREARY. That order has already been made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The agreement was that one hour and fifty minutes be given to those on the left of the Chair, and an hour and ten minutes to the side on the right of the Chair, and that the necessary extension beyond 5 o'clock be made so as to permit that to be done. But if there is an extension of the time to either side it must be accompanied with an additional order for extending the duration of the session.

Mr. HEARD. I have no objection to extending the time of the gentleman from California, but I do not want to be kept here so much longer in order to get a vote this evening.

Mr. PETERS. I will state my proposition in this way. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be allowed sufficient time to complete his remarks in addition to the ten minutes which have been given to him, and that an equal amount of time be consumed on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then it will be necessary that there be an extension to a corresponding time beyond 5 o'clock.

Mr. MACDONALD. As it is understood that we are to have a vote this evening, I will object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Then I ask that the vote be taken to-morrow instead of taking it this evening, and that the time of the gentleman from California be extended.

Mr. DIBBLE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina objects.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MCCREARY. How much time does the gentleman require?

Mr. MCKENNA. I did not know how much time it would take me, and I may have miscalculated the time, but I think it will take thirty minutes, which will be twenty minutes additional time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made to the request, and the regular order is demanded.

Mr. CHEADLE. I do not think objection ought to be raised. By unanimous consent we extended the time of my colleague [Mr. BYNUM] on Saturday. This speech is a reply to his, and there ought to be no objection.

Mr. MCKENNA. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be allowed ten minutes.

Mr. MCCREARY. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to take up unnecessary time in discussing a measure that I am sure, when it comes to a vote, will pass this House with scarcely a dissenting voice. But the matter under consideration is of such vital importance, not only to the people of the Pacific coast, whom in part I have the honor to represent, but to the people of all the States of this Union when they come to understand it as we do in California, that I am constrained at least to voice the sentiment of my constituency in assuring the members of this Congress and the people they represent that, notwithstanding what may have been in the past, there is now but one side to the issue of Chinese immigration in California. It has been my province to see with my own eyes for thirty years the formation of the hideous Mongolian incubus upon that fair State, which has robbed it of much of its natural growth and prosperity. No tongue can convey or pen portray the ugliness of the monster. Personal inspection alone will convey anything like an adequate idea of the moral degradation of Chinese laborers wherever they are herded together in any considerable numbers in this or any other country.

Had I time to do so, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the people of the Atlantic States, from this floor, a good deal about the character and habits of this unassimilative alien race as we have seen it on the Pacific shores.

The Chinese are purely a clannish, selfish, grasping people, totally devoid of all moral instincts and endowed with an endurance unequaled by any other class of laborers. A distinguished writer, thirty years ago, describing them in their own country, said:

Facts of daily occurrence brought to the knowledge of the missionaries reveal the prevalence of the most fearful immoralities and furnish a melancholy insight into the desolating horrors of paganism. Female infanticide in some parts openly confessed, and divested of all disgrace and penalties everywhere; the dreadful prevalence of all the vices charged by the Apostle Paul upon the ancient heathen world; the alarming extent of the use of opium (furnished, too, by British and American merchants), destroying the productions and natural resources of the people; the universal practice of lying and dishonest dealings; the unblushing lewdness of old and young; harsh cruelty towards prisoners by officers, and tyranny over slaves by masters—all forming a full unchecked torrent of human depravity, and proving the existence of a kind and degree of moral degradation of which an excessive statement can scarcely be made or an adequate conception hardly be formed.

Such is their condition in the midst of Christian civilization in California to-day. With few exceptions, places from whence they have been driven by popular uprisings of the people, every town or village has its Chinese quarter, and every Chinese quarter has its gambling hells, opium joints, and other dens of infamy—a constant menace to the moral welfare of American children, both boys and girls, thousands of whom, contracting the opium habit, become hoodlums and outcasts and are ruined for life.

Pitiable it is to behold these wan-faced victims of Mongolian debauchery upon our streets. They appeal to the civilization of America to save them, and this can only be done by driving back this yellow tide from Asia that threatens to inundate and ruin our country and its people. This, I know, is strong language and may be considered by some unnecessarily extravagant, but when I view the black contaminating pall of paganism that has spread itself over our glorious land of sunshine and flowers within a quarter of a century, and reflect that it is supported by four hundred and fifty millions of such people as I have described, I confess that it produces in me a sense of alarm for the future of this free land, this asylum of nations. Would to God that I had the gift of language and the power of eloquence to arouse my countrymen to a sense of the danger that threatens them.

Talk about Christianizing the heathen Chinee! Why, Mr. Speaker, the most carefully collected statistics on that subject showthat—

In proportion to population the "Joss-house" is more common in Chinatown, San Francisco, than are the edifices of the Christian church in other portions of that city.

Let me quote further from an exhaustive and carefully prepared report made to the board of supervisors of that city by the present mayor and other members of that body:

So far in San Francisco "the heathen Chinee" has, in the slang parlance of the day, "got in his work" with the same irresistible force as that with which Boston's other "slugging" champion has always displayed in his ring encounters. And Senator HOAR, and his followers, who would fain open wide our gates to the "little brown man," that he may be converted to Christianity and share in the blessings of American citizenship, may possibly find food for new reflection by a careful study of some of the naked facts which your committee have been enabled to present upon this branch of the subject. * * *

Idols of the most hideous form and feature squat upon their altars, from which license, in the belief of the Chinaman, sufficient to justify crime or vice of any degree may be had for the asking. Idols that typify not the precepts of morality taught by Confucius, carved and created by the mechanical fancy of the most skillful Mongolian artist into every conceivable distortion of feature and limb, more frequently represent and give license to the practice of a vice than a virtue to be inculcated and lived up to. Even the "Goddess of Prostitution" sits enthroned upon her altar in more than one Joss-house in San Francisco, and licenses her votaries to the practice of nameless indulgences and the most bestial gratification of their sensuous lusts. Let the skeptic who views this statement as an exaggeration or misrepresentation of fact visit the Joss-houses of San Francisco and he will no longer doubt; for it is the truth.

While the Chinese have thus planted their idolatry among us with all its attendant vices, while they have undermined the morals and the physical health of our youth, and defied our laws, what has Christianity to show, through the aid of its missionaries or otherwise, in its conflict with Asiatic heathenism, whether it be in the advance of Christian morals or the Christian religion?

In morals, nothing! And no one can possibly so pervert the truth as to maintain otherwise. In religious teachings let the evidence of the missionaries themselves speak for itself. Thirty-five or thirty-six souls saved by the missionary work of Mr. Gibson, eighty by Mr. Loomis, making one hundred and fifteen in all, deducting nothing for backsliders, in a maximum period of seventeen years, that being the term of the administration of Mr. Loomis! Against this, thousands of young men debauched and diseased for life by reason of their presence among us; innumerable young men and young women confirmed in the opium habit from the same source; the laboring classes deprived of work and impoverished, their children graduated in the school of "hoodlumism;" the laws set aside and defied; a filthy and disgusting mode of life set up by a clannish population in the fairest and best portion of the city, and made a constant menace to the welfare of the community by reason of the danger from fire and disease that will some day spring from that locality. All this to offset the salvation of a few score of souls of beings whose miserable lives and souls ought not in the aggregate to bear a feather's weight against the deep damnation of the curse they have inflicted upon our race, and the ruin and everlasting misery they have brought upon thousands—if the Christian religion be "the true faith" by which human souls are to be saved.

In San Francisco over 35,000 Chinese are huddled together in the space of twelve blocks of that city, occupying what was once the fairest and best portion of it, and in all that great population there are less than sixty families living as such with legitimate children. Three thousand of these Mongolians are employed in various manufactures within the Chinese quarters, and many more thousands outside of it, supplanting white labor in almost every industry. As a race they have no regard for this country or its laws. They defy its authority, have a system of government of their own, and resist the payment of taxes whenever they can do so, paying in San Francisco only about one three-thousandths part of the tax, and for the State at large less than one four-hundredths part of the revenue required to support the Government. The cost of keeping Mongolian prisoners in the State prison is more than double the whole amount of the property tax collected from the Chinese population of the State. As has been most fittingly defined, the Chinese population of this country is like a huge sponge, which absorbs all it can in America and is then squeezed out in China.

The record of the Republicans, including my colleagues of that party in this House, on the subject of the pending treaty of exclusion and legislation to enforce it, has certainly been an anomalous one.

Believing that a treaty of exclusion was our only remedy against the Chinese evil, a year ago last April I came to Washington to urge upon the authorities that measure. I was encouraged to do so by what President Cleveland had said in his letter of acceptance bearing upon the Chinese issue as identified with the labor question, and I was assured that such negotiations would be pushed to a conclusion as rapidly as was practicable. When I returned to this Congress I found them still in progress, and never had a doubt of the success of the negotiations if it was in the power of the President and our Secretary of State to perfect them. My Republican colleagues, however, were not so confident, and ridiculed the idea of a treaty of exclusion. The Senate also was incredulous, as on the very threshold of its accomplishment a resolution suggesting a treaty was submitted by that honorable body and responded to by the President, as follows:

To the Senate:

A copy of the following resolution, passed by the Senate on the 1st day of the present month, was delivered to me on the 3d instant:

"Resolved, That in view of the difficulties and embarrassments that have attended the regulation of the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States under the limitations of our treaties with China, the President of the United States be requested to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China containing a provision that no Chinese laborer shall enter the United States."

The importance of the subject referred to in this resolution has by no means been overlooked by the executive branch of the Government charged under the Constitution with the formulation of treaties with foreign countries.

Negotiations with the Emperor of China for a treaty such as is mentioned in said resolution was commenced many months ago and has been since continued. The progress of the negotiation thus inaugurated has heretofore been freely communicated to such members of the Senate, and of its Committee on Foreign Relations, as sought information concerning the same. It is, however, with much gratification that I deem myself now justified in expressing to the Senate, in response to its resolution, the hope and expectation that a treaty will soon be concluded concerning the immigration of Chinese laborers which will meet the wants of our people and the approbation of the body to which it will be submitted for confirmation.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 8, 1888.

When the treaty, through the graciousness of the Senate, after much delay, and in contravention of the President's recommendation that it be immediately made public, was given to the people it was generally denounced by the Republican representatives and newspapers of California. The State convention of that party, when it met to send delegates to the Chicago convention, also denounced it in the following language:

We denounce the treaties suggested by the President and his Secretary of State as mere trifling with a great question, and unworthy the support of any good citizen.

The bill reported to this House by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, through its chairman, Mr. BELMONT, which, as has been stated by the acting chairman of that committee, Governor MCCREARY, was substantially the same as the bill now under consideration, was repudiated through the press of San Francisco by my worthy colleague, Mr. MORROW, who was so anxious a few days ago to rush the pending bill through this House without reference or debate. The passage of the bill at that time, without amendment, as has transpired, would have repealed immediately the restriction laws now in operation and opened our ports indefinitely to an influx of Chinese coolies. This was of course an oversight on the part of my esteemed but in that instance overzealous colleague, and I congratulate him as well as our constituency upon the happy escape made from such a public calamity.

I fear our Republican friends have also made a mistake in causing delay in the ratification of the treaty through the amendments suggested by the Senate. At the rate they are coming now, more Chinese will get in pending the unfortunate delay of the treaty than would be kept out in the same space of time under the operation of the unnecessary amendments.

The essence of the treaty is exclusion, and it remains only for Congress to provide the laws to carry out its provisions. I do not admit that this Government is unable to enforce its laws. It can, and, under this Democratic Administration, will do so, despite the efforts of any power, domestic or foreign, to set aside or ignore them.

The Democratic party has at all times been united in opposition to the coming of Chinese to this country. In the earliest days of our State's history it legislated against them through the enforcement of a miners' tax of $20 per month. This law as amended from time to time was in successful and effective operation until the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution cut it off. The tax was undoubtedly the means of checking the influx of these people from the time of its enactment early in the fifties until it was declared unconstitutional under the operation of the Federal Constitution. The following figures, showing the arrivals and departures of Chinese at the port of San Francisco during the time the foreign miners' tax law was in force and subsequent thereto, demonstrate this fact:

In 1852 the arrivals were 20,026 and the departures 1,768. In 1862 the arrivals had dropped off considerably, while the departures had increased, the figures being 8,175 arrivals and 2,792 departures.

Ten years later 9,770 arrivals and 4,890 departures. It was about this time that the tax was removed under the operation of the fourteenth amendment, and in 1882 there were 45,665 arrivals and 13,414 departures; in 1885, 40,221 arrivals and 18,703 departures; in 1886, under operation of the restriction acts, there were 6,714 arrivals and 12,267 departures. In 1887 there were 11,572 arrivals and 9,919 departures. During the first six months of the current year there have been 7,422 arrivals and 1,734 departures. The total Chinese arrivals in this country through the port of San Francisco have been 366,636 and 179,095 departures, leaving a balance of 187,541. In addition to these, large numbers have come in at other ports or have been transported across the boundary from Mexico and British Columbia.

It is said that all the Chinamen who were employed on the Canadian Pacific Railroad have since crossed the boundary into the United States, and it is safe to estimate that there are now on the Pacific coast 200,000 Chinese, 125,000 of whom are in California, and probably 50,000 in San Francisco. It is further stated that the returns of the Chinese population in British Columbia show a reduction of 25 per cent. during the past year, 4,000 Chinamen having been smuggled thence into the United States.

It is not my desire to make invidious comparison between political parties on this subject, but it is a fact well known to the people of my State that the first importation of Chinese coolies to this country was cotemporaneous with the building of the continental railroads. They were brought here under Republican auspices because they could be hired for less than a dollar a day to take the place of white men in building those roads, and to-day the greatest, if not the only obstacle in the way of the enforcement of the restriction laws in San Francisco grows out of the fact that the rulings of two distinguished Republican Federal judges of that city have nullified the intent and spirit of the law to such a degree as to destroy its effect and to cause the people of that city, with the voice of a united public press, to demand of this Congress the impeachment of those judges.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I quote from President Cleveland's letter of acceptance four years ago, and as a Democrat point with pride to the treaty of exclusion which the bill now pending before this House is designed to enforce—an evidence of the President's fidelity to principle and the faithful performance of every promise made to the people:

THE DIGNITY OF LABOR.

A true American sentiment recognizes the dignity of labor and the fact that honor lies in honest toil.

Contented labor is an element of material prosperity. Ability to work constitutes the capital of the wage laborer, the income of a vast number of our population; and this interest should be jealously protected.

Our workingmen are not asking unreasonable terms, but as intelligent citizens they seek the same consideration which those demand who have other interests at stake. They should receive their full share of the care and attention of those who make and execute the laws, to the end that the wants and needs of employers and employés should alike be subserved and the prosperity of the country—the common heritage of both—be advanced.

As related to this subject, while we should not discourage the immigration of those who come to acknowledge allegiance to our Government and add to our citizenship protection, yet, as a measure of protection to our workingmen, a different rule should prevail concerning those who, if they come or are brought to our land, do not intend to become Americans, but will injuriously compete with those who are entitled to our labor.

The laboring classes constitute the main part of our population. They should be protected in their efforts peaceably to assert their rights when endangered by capital, and all statutes on this subject should recognize the care of the state for honest toil and be framed with a view of improving the condition of the workingmen.

Mr. HITT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER].

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration appears to meet the approbation of both sides of this House. The subject-matter of the bill is not new. It has been before the country for years, and has evoked much discussion in and out of Congress. It may be truthfully said that public sentiment has been conducted to a general approval of the purposes of this bill. In the beginning of the consideration of the subject of Chinese immigration into this country wide differences of opinion prevailed. California and the whole Pacific Slope was then as now chiefly affected by the question. California, in common with the whole country, approved the Burlingame treaty, chiefly because it was thought desirable to establish commercial relations with this heretofore secluded country, and to open in China a market for our products in exchange for her teas. But when at length the incidental effect of reciprocal trade with China began to manifest itself by an inundation of undesirable immigrants from that country, who sought our shores not because they loved our civilization, our institutions, and the religious views and precepts upon which they were founded, nor because they desired to become assimilated to these, nor to remain in the country and assume any part in promoting the welfare of the land and the virtue of the people, but that their advent among us was prompted by purely selfish and mercenary motives and purposes; that they one and all rejected the idea of renouncing allegiance to their native soil; that they persistently adhered to the ancient manners and customs of their people, and almost without exception set at defiance many of the rules of morality and decency observed in Christian communities, buying and selling their own flesh, and indulging with impunity in the most revolting vices and heathenish practices; and that they seemed to be practically without moral sense or conscience; that the solemnity of an oath from their lips was in their estimation idle breath without obligation. And beside these offensive characteristics, they here enter into competition in many branches of industry with the wage-earners who constitute the basis of our own prosperity as a people, and upon whom we rely to defend the country in time of peril.

The evils of Chinese immigration, so manifest and overpowering in California and other exposed parts of the Pacific coast, were a long time in becoming apparent to the eastern parts of the country, but now at last these evils have come to be generally admitted, and to-day we consider in Congress as a non-partisan measure the law under consideration for the exclusion of Chinese, a law offered in pursuance of a recently negotiated treaty with China. Both governments agreeing to the exclusion, both the great political parties of this country agreeing to the exclusion, and there appearing no opposition from any quarter, the passage of the law is assured.

Why, then, it may be asked, this extended controversy, which has lasted two full legislative days, regarding this law. The law originated and was passed in the Senate; it came to the House and was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; that committee has unanimously reported it back to this House, recommending its passage. Why then discuss the measure? As a fact, the measure has not been discussed; it has been explained by members of the committee that reported it, and we are all agreed that the bill shall be passed into law. But some members of the other side of the House have seized upon this, as they have on other occasions, whether opportune or not, to promulgate and defend the dogmas of the Democratic national platform as the ruling purpose of their minds, to be thrust into every debate and to be put above every public interest.

Half admitting the untenable and delusive character of the policy of the Democratic party and of its leading measure, framed at the dictation of the head of that party for the suppression of American enterprise and prosperity, they thrust the subject forward at all times and on all occasions, showing by this course that doubts exist in their own minds as to whether their theories of revenue are worthy the adoption by the people. They have but one leading idea, and that embodied in the Mills bill is tariff for revenue, tending to free trade.

I wish to say in regard to the charges made by the gentleman from Indiana against General Harrison on the Chinese question, and this is proved by the record, that General Harrison never favored nor advocated Chinese immigration into this country. He stood by a treaty stipulation, and opposed a willful and violent infraction of it. He advocated a stipulation for suppressing Chinese immigration into this country and voted for such a proposition in the Senate, as has been shown; and I say without fear of contradiction that General Harrison is a more reliable friend of California and its products, and better disposed to protect its industries from Chinese or other competition than the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] or any other member of his party. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The tariff bill supported by the Democratic party as the leading measure upon which it bids for support puts upon the free-list the leading products of the Pacific coast—its lumber and its wool; and when the free-lumber clause of the Mills bill was under consideration in the House and a proviso was offered to the effect that lumber coming from British Columbia or elsewhere, the product of Chinese labor, should be made dutiable as under the present law, every Democrat in the House, with possibly one or two exceptions, voted against it.

Of the products of California placed on the free-list by the Democratic Mills bill we find olive-oil, one of our rising productions, which if moderately protected would in a few years run the spurious foreign article out of the market, and supply a pure American article at a moderate price. Quicksilver, borax, chrome iron, beans, figs, and a variety of other products of California they propose to transfer to the free-list.

On fruits coming in direct and successful competition with the foreign product the Mills bill proposes a reduced rate of duty. Raisins that within the past few years have come to be successfully produced in Fresno and other counties of Southern California of a quality fully equal if not superior to the foreign article is struck at by the Democratic tariff, and that, too, in compliance with the demand of the foreign producers upon recommendation of a Democratic Secretary of State. California in the production of fruits and olive-oil will soon come to be justly regarded as the Italy of America.

Does any one suppose that such a screed of misstatements as is made in Democratic prints and by Democratic orators, relating to General Harrison's record on the Chinese question, will drive California from the support of Harrison and Morton to the support of Cleveland and Thurman and of the tariff policy of the Democratic party, that aims deadly blows at her industries, to the sorrow of thousands of homes in our State? November will tell a tale to make the ears of Mr. Cleveland and his free-trade allies to tingle.

The evil effect resulting from Chinese immigration into our Western ports, and the abuses of our hospitality in admitting through Eastern ports any who may come or be sent to us from Europe, brings us face to face with the necessity of scrutinizing the character of those who seek our shores from abroad, the means by which they are induced to come, and the purposes for which they come. And it shows, that as a measure of public safety, only those should be received who are capable of becoming good citizens and useful members of society, who are of good moral character and well dispose to the peace and good order of society.

A committee of this House is now sitting in New York, charged with the duty of investigating infractions and evasions of the emigration laws, and violations of the contract-labor statutes. Enough has already been elicited to show that European governments are fast falling into the practice of making our shores a dumping ground for their refuse pauper and dangerous criminal classes, and that steam-ship lines plying between New York and various European countries, moved by cupidity, connive in this nefarious work; that by false representations of their agents, thousands of poor and deluded victims are induced to leave their native shores, where they have always lived in squalor and poverty, and come to our seaport cities in search of work of a more remunerative kind than their own country affords. Having no means of subsistence when they arrive, not finding employment, and being unable to return whence they came, they are cast upon us to be supported by charity or at the public expense.

It has ever been the policy of our laws to invite and cordially welcome to our shores from foreign lands those who are attracted by love of our free institutions, who are well disposed to the peace and good order of society, and are capable of assuming the duties of citizenship. Especially we invite and welcome those who have the mind and the ability to earn a living by honest toil of whatever nationality or form of Christian faith, and who do not claim the right to become our rulers too soon after landing; but we reserve the right and hold it to be our duty to reject the vicious and the bad, and those who are sent to us to become a public charge.

The influx of a countless horde of semi-civilized Mongolians upon the western shore of this continent has grown into a greater and more menacing evil to the welfare and good order of society on the Pacific coast than even the refuse and in many instances enforced emigration to this country of indigent or dangerous classes from Europe. Those coming into our eastern ports are at least from Christian and civilized communities, and may in time become assimilated with our people, but those coming to our western ports from over the sea are heathen; they despise us as a people; they practice with impunity the grossest vices, and they demoralize communities where they locate in any considerable numbers; they cultivate no family relations; they buy and sell their women for immoral purposes; they are to-day substantially as they have been for the past thirty centuries; they are not fit for citizenship in a civilized country; they contribute nothing to our national strength or renown; they all expect to return whence they came, and consider it a calamity and an eternal disgrace if, when they die, their dust is left to mingle with our soil; they take the morsel from the mouth of honest American toil, are a curse to the rising generation and a menace to the moral purity of society; they should be rejected and sent back whence they came.

True we invited them here, and many who from philanthropic impulses hailed the Burlingame treaty as an achievement to be thankful for now deplore that concession as an unfortunate blunder and give their assent to a total revocation of the treaty. Even the Government of China manifests its willingness to abrogate and annul all treaty stipulations for the further admission of Chinese to our shores. The two Governments, China and the United States, having agreed to stop further Chinese immigration into the United States, and the people demanding that this desire and intention be carried out, what possible objection can there be on the part of Congress to the passage of this bill?

The welfare of the community, the dignity and interest of labor, and dictates of humanity all concur in demanding the exclusion of Chinese from the hospitality of our shores and the abrogation of treaties that have heretofore admitted them. Good men, who have felt that a moral obligation rested upon us to observe treaty obligations with China, now see the necessity of erecting barriers against the overflowing tide of emigration from that country. The Chinese Government consents to the exclusion by treaty stipulation. It assents to the terms of restriction and exclusion proposed by this bill. No objection comes from any quarter to the passage of this law. Why, then, not pass it without further delay and waste no more time in making excuses for the blunders of the Democratic party that the country may be relieved from a further influx of this offensive class of immigrants. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

[Mr. HERMANN withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

During the delivery of Mr. HERMANN'S remarks the following proceedings took place:

The CHAIRMAN (at the expiration of five minutes). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to oppose the extension of the gentleman's time, but it is known to members that we desire to take a vote upon this bill this evening, and I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] that he give the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] some of his remaining time. He has fifteen minutes left.

Mr. HITT. That time has been promised to another gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon that his time be extended three minutes?

Mr. MACDONALD. I object. I have had to object to another similar request already.

Mr. HITT. I yield the remainder of my time, eighteen minutes, to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I should not have detained the House a single moment in any remarks upon this bill, but should have contented myself with simply voting for it, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] upon Saturday had not digressed from the immediate subject before us for the purpose of assailing the Republican candidate for the Presidency and the Republican party. In the course of the gentleman's remarks, as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I find him saying:

> Dump all the paupers and criminals of Europe and all the Mongolians of Asia here. What cared the manufacturers? Labor was made more dependent and wages cheaper. This was and is the policy of the Republican party to-day. Open wide the doors for the importation of cheap labor, but close them tight against the importation of cheap clothing and cheap food.

It is possible, Mr. Speaker, that the exigencies of the Indiana campaign, from the standpoint of so strong a partisan as that gentleman, may furnish some excuse for so flagrant a misrepresentation of the Republican party. Certainly nothing else can. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] is one of the Democratic majority of the Committee on Ways and Means who have just secured the passage through this House by a nearly solid Democratic vote of a bill imposing a duty of 68 per cent. on imported raw sugar and 100 per cent. on imported cleaned rice, almost the only articles of food imported, and as necessary as flour in every poor man's family, and moreover articles produced here to so comparatively small an extent that home production affects the price so little that the duty is nearly all added to the cost.

Yet the Republican members of this House as solidly voted against the 68 per cent. duty on sugar and the 100 per cent. duty on rice, and to reduce the duty on each to about 41 per cent.

And in the face of these facts the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] has the hardihood to charge that the Republican party desires to "close the doors tight against the importation of cheap food," and to claim that the Democratic party proposes to open the doors to such importation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And the same bill, nearly solidly supported by the Democratic majority of this House, proposes to "close the doors" against "cheap clothing" to the extent of giving the manufacturer of clothing 45 per cent. protective duty and the manufacturer of woolen cloth 40 per cent. protective duty, precisely the same average duty as is imposed by the present tariff, outside of the compensatory wool duty, while the only reduction in duty that is made in woolen clothing is in the farmers' wool.

And yet in the face of the fact that the manufacturer of woolen cloth and clothing has "the door closed" against the competition of the "cheap clothing" of Europe to the extent of 40 per cent. by the bill which the gentleman from Indiana assisted in framing, and the Democrats of this House in passing, while, so far as woolen goods are concerned, only the farmer is compelled by his bill to compete with the cheap labor and cheap land of South America, the gentleman has the assurance to charge that the Republicans, who have simply voted to give the farmers' wool the same proportionate protection that the Mills bill gives the manufacturers' woolen cloth, are endeavoring to look out for the manufacturers alone. [Applause.]

Before commenting on the charge that the Republicans favor "opening wide the doors to cheap imported labor," I desire to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Indiana now acknowledges, what he and the gentleman from Texas and other gentlemen on the other side steadily denied all through the tariff debate, to wit, that there is in other countries cheaper labor than ours. The gentleman from Texas based his whole argument on the assumption that the cost of labor, measured by results, is less in this country than in any country in the world; and I remember that when he made this declaration gentlemen on the other side applauded him to the echo. It is refreshing even at this late day to have gentlemen on the other side confessing that there is much cheaper labor than ours, and that to bring such labor into competition with ours at the wages it is accustomed to receive abroad would do great harm.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana offers only one fact to sustain his charge that the Republican party favors the importation of cheap labor, and that is the fact that in midst of the war when five hundred thousand citizens were in the field fighting to preserve the Government, and when it was found that there was insufficient labor to produce the food and furnish the supplies needed by our Army and our population, on recommendation of President Lincoln an act was passed to encourage immigration by authorizing immigrants to make agreements to pay for their passage out of their earnings after arrival.

It is the judgment of eminent military men that this act materially aided to strengthen the Union cause, without reducing the wages of a single workman.

If our blockade of the Southern coast had not prevented the South from receiving substantially the same aid, the contest for the preservation of the Government might have been greatly prolonged.

The gentleman from Indiana complains that this act was not repealed as soon as the war closed. It should be borne in mind that immediately after the war there was such an increased demand for labor in consequence of the revival of suspended industries, particularly railroad building, and such a desire to recuperate our resources by filling up the far West with settlers, that many States took measures on their own account to encourage immigration, and it is not surprising that these facts led the General Government to delay the repeal of the act passed during the war. It is not surprising also that the Democratic party, which controlled both Senate and House from March 4, 1879, to March 4, 1881, should not have thought it necessary to repeal the law.

When, however, it became evident that the act of 1864 was being used to import laborers under contracts made abroad at lower wages than prevailed here, the Forty-eighth Congress, composed of a Democratic House and a Republican Senate, united in repealing it and in unanimously enacting a new law prohibiting the importation of contract labor, paupers, convicts, and other undesirable immigrants. This act was approved by a Republican President.

Why the gentleman from Indiana should take all the credit to the Democrats for an act passed under such circumstances, can be explained only on the ground that "drowning men," even in a political sense, "catch at straws." [Applause.]

Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in all this, nothing in the fact that all parties are united in excluding Chinese laborers since the treaty permitted this, to justify the charge of the gentleman from Indiana that the Republican party favors "opening wide the doors for the importation of cheap labor."

Since the act prohibiting such importation was unanimously passed by Congress and approved by a Republican President, its ultimate enforcement has been in the charge of President Cleveland, who has never indicated to Congress that it needed any modification or strengthening. Whatever failure of enforcement there may have been, therefore, lies at the door of the Democratic and not the Republican party.

Yet confessedly, during the three and a half years in which the act has been in force, the importation of cheap contract labor has increased, until, if we may believe the evidence gathered by the House committee who are now investigating the subject, it has grown to grave proportions, although but few instances have been made known in which this was done by manufacturers, and in those cases reported wages nearly as high as those prevailing here have been paid. I know that during this period hundreds of cheap Italian laborers, landed at New York in defiance of the law, as I believe, have been sent to my own State, like squads of coolies, to work on railroads, contrary to the wishes of our own people, and contrary to the public interests. [Cries of "That is so!"]

Still, I can not ascertain that these wholesale importations have engaged the attention of the Cabinet, or that any order has been issued by the President to district attorneys or other United States officials to better enforce the law. I wish, however, to make one exception. A newspaper reported that a few Canadian fishermen had come to Gloucester under an engagement to go on a fishing trip, whereupon the President immediately directed that the district attorney should prosecute the offenders to the extent of the law.

But, so far as I can learn, the fact that thousands of Italian padrones, practically bound by contract to serve at the beck of an overseer, and not intending to become American citizens, have landed at New York since the act of 1885 was passed, has not elicited even a passing notice from the President.

The gentleman from Indiana may find in this fact reasons for implicating the Republican party, but the public sentiment of the country will hold another party responsible. [Applause on Republican side.]

I notice by the published testimony taken by the House Immigration Committee in New York that many vessels registered or enrolled as vessels of the United States, and yet either owned by foreign capitalists or commanded by foreigners, who have been imported to serve at cheaper wages than American citizens would serve, are engaged in our coastwise and lake trade in defiance of a law which has been on our statute-books nearly a hundred years, and which provides that only American vessels shall participate in this trade, and that no vessel shall be registered or enrolled as an American vessel unless it is wholly owned by American citizens and commanded by a citizen of the United States.

Would not it be well for the gentleman from Indiana to admonish the officials of the Administration to enforce the laws before he mounts an Indiana stump to tell the people that the Republican party favors the importation of cheap labor.

Mr. Speaker, it is not difficult to discover in the manner in which the gentleman from Indiana couples the importation of contract labor with a protective tariff, and the shrewd manner in which he appeals to workingmen to vote for free trade, that there may be the same reason for laxity in enforcing the contract labor importation act, and neglect to recommend amendments, as for the refusal for many months to purchase bonds with the surplus—to wit, a desire to use labor importations in defiance of law, as the surplus has been used, as a lever to overthrow protection.

It will not be surprising during the present campaign to hear the same orators who have been using the fact of a large surplus in the Treasury, kept there by a refusal of the Administration for many months to use it in purchasing the bonded debt and stopping interest, as a lever to overthrow protection, using the facts gathered by the Immigration Committee as evidence that the Republican party is trying to restrict the importation of the products of cheap labor and at the same time to promote the importation of the cheap labor itself; while the impression will be given that the Democratic party proposes to reverse the plan.

I desire here and now, Mr. Speaker, to repeat what the platform of the Republican party declares, what the votes of the Republican members of this House have so often emphasized, that the Republican party stands for protection to home industries, not only through the imposition of duties on imported competing products of cheaper labor abroad, but also by the prohibition of the importation of contract labor, paupers, and criminals, or any other immigration that does not come here on its own motion to become American citizens, adopt American civilization, and demand American wages. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I believe that I speak for this side of the House when I say that we have always been ready, that we are ready now, to amend or strengthen the present law prohibiting contract labor, if the President shall inform Congress that it needs amendment in order to accomplish the end sought; and that we further ask that it shall be faithfully enforced. [Applause.]

In view of the intense competition which exists in the various industries in this country, there will here and there always be found men who seek to obtain an advantage by importations of contract labor if they find no obstacle, just as here and there have been found selfish woolen manufacturers who favor the Mills bill because it gives them protection and at the same time furnishes them free wool by depriving the farmer of the same kind of protection that they have.

The logic of protection requires that it should be applied not only to the imported products of cheap labor, but also to imported labor under contract made abroad to work at foreign cheap wages. The sober, industrious, voluntary immigrant who comes here to improve his situation and become an American in every sense of the term, and who has entire freedom of choice after his arrival, demands and soon receives American wages, and their coming in such numbers as they are likely to voluntarily leave old homes will not reduce the wages of labor.

On the other hand, the logic of free trade in the products of foreign labor inevitably calls for free trade in imported labor; for if the American producer is to be compelled to compete freely with the foreign producer, he must be given the privilege of getting his labor in the cheapest market. The latter is the correlative of the former, as Henry George has so clearly shown in an article pointing out that the Democratic leaders, in professing to desire to restrict the incoming of foreign labor, are simply convicting themselves of inconsistency. Every argument presented in the late tariff debate in favor of free trade or the removal of restrictions on importations, applies with equal force to the free importation of labor.

Indeed, the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana, and made the keystone of his argument by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], that our labor measured by results accomplished is the cheapest in the world, is as decisive an argument against restricting the importation of contract labor as it was claimed to be against restriction of importations of products.

It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that the appeal of gentlemen on the other side to the workingmen to vote to remove restrictions on the importation of the products of cheap labor, in order to punish a few men who, in defiance of law and largely because the Democratic Administration has not properly enforced the law, have imported cheap labor under contracts made abroad to work at foreign wages, is only a shrewd device of free-traders to obtain assistance in tearing down that system of protection which makes it possible to maintain more than 50 per cent. higher wages on the average in the United States than in Great Britain.

Mr. Speaker, this transparent device will fail. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McCREARY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take up the thread of this discussion where my distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has just left it. He says that Henry George has written a very true and logical article on the subject of the importation of the products of labor and the importation of the labor itself; and the gentleman has just announced gravely to the House that the same logic which asks for the bringing in the products of labor free would also require the bringing in of the laborer free.

If my distinguished friend from Maine will give me his attention I will suggest to him that if his proposition be true the converse of the proposition would also be true, and the logic is just as sound that those who proclaim in favor of allowing the importation of free labor must also favor the importation free of the articles produced by labor. According to his own reasoning I propose to convict the gentleman of having been a free-trader. Because, Mr. Speaker, as much as it will astound the House, when the question was up for consideration to restrict Chinese immigration in the past the gentleman from Maine on more than one occasion held the ground that it was wrong to do so and improper to keep out the Mongolian race, and voted to allow them to come in. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. McMILLIN. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. DINGLEY. That the gentleman from Maine said nothing of the kind.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman was not paying attention to me. I did not say he "said it." I said he held and voted it. It was his own act, and it has even more force than the mere saying it.

Mr. DINGLEY. I declined to vote for a bill that I believed was in contravention of an existing treaty.

Mr. McMILLIN. Ah! my friend says it contravened the treaty. Let me state his predicament for him: Whenever you hold that where there is a treaty once established which can never be broken, except with the consent of both the parties making it, you make it everlasting, if it is to the interest of your opposing power to keep it in force. And a state of facts might arise where the Government could never escape from a treaty.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, sir, before you get up here and criticise the Democratic party, saying it is for free labor, because it wants a remission of excessive duties, see to it that your own skirts are clear, and that you are free from blame before you proceed very far to criticise others.

Mr. HERBERT. And the gentleman should also remember that that was a Republican treaty, and the Republicans did not want it broken.

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly; a treaty made by the gentleman's own party, and he voted against excluding the Chinese. That is the whole of it. And now he tries to correct that record.

> Oh, what a tangled web we weave;
> When first we practice to deceive!

[Applause.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I have three times voted for the exclusion of the Chinese.

Mr. McMILLIN. And the treaty remained just the same all the time! How does the gentleman reconcile his logic? Why did he vote against the act restricting Chinese immigration at all?

Mr. DINGLEY. The act itself will tell.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman has himself simply done what his candidate for the Presidency has done and is doing; he has heard from the people on that question. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. The act itself was so modified as to conform to the treaty, and in my judgment the objections were removed.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, I do not want this fought out on any improper line, nor shall it be if I can prevent it. We are to have the tariff fight fought over on this subject, it seems. The gentleman would have been deeply interested in getting up a tariff fight, or a chicken fight, or a bull fight, or any other fight that would obscure his own record from the public gaze. He was not content with voting it once, but he voted over and over again against bills to exclude Chinese for all time, and then voted against excluding them for even ten years! That is the consistency that has characterized him. If I am to be criticised and my party is to be hounded down, at least give us the delectable pleasure of being criticised and hounded down by those who have consistent records on the question themselves. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, I observed a little article in the San Francisco Chronicle to which I wish to call attention, commenting upon the fact that this bill was not considered on the day it was brought in (the wisdom of which action has been demonstrated in the fact that it was found necessary to amend the bill in committee before it commended itself to its most ardent friends, and all confess that). This paper contains the following in speaking of this bill:

> It was taken up in the Senate and discussed for six hours and passed unanimously. In the face of this remarkable and almost unprecedented unanimity of approval, for BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, McMILLIN, HOOKER, and SPRINGER, all Democrats, to object to its consideration because they stated that there should be more time for its consideration is absurd.

This is utterly false as to me.

I have always opposed Chinese immigration and voted against it, as I do now and always will. I have held that our people have a right to protect themselves against the Chinese. After the consideration of the bill then was impossible, it was I who got the order made by which it could be reported at any time, as will be seen from the following, copied from the RECORD of that day:

> Mr. McMILLIN. And I ask unanimous consent that the committee have leave to report the bill back at any time.
> Mr. FARQUHAR. Have they not that authority under the rules?
> Mr. McMILLIN. No, sir.
> The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs have leave to report the bill back at any time for consideration.
> Mr. SPRINGER. The bill will then be privileged?
> The SPEAKER. It will be. Is there objection to the proposition that the bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with leave to report it back at any time for consideration?
> Mr. HOOKER. If in order, I would like to include in the proposition a designation of Tuesday next as the time for the consideration of the bill.
> Mr. McMILLIN. The proposition I have made will allow the committee to report it before Tuesday, if they are ready.
> The SPEAKER. The committee can report the bill at any time. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition; and in the absence of objection, an order will also be made for the printing of the bill.
> A MEMBER. Let the bill be made a special order for Tuesday next.
> The SPEAKER. It will be a special order whenever reported—on Monday, if reported then.
> Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, my request, as I understand, is agreed to?
> The SPEAKER. The Chair heard no objection, and the order is that the bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with leave to report it back at any time for consideration.
> Mr. McMILLIN. That makes it privileged.
> The SPEAKER. It does.
> Mr. McMILLIN. I am in favor of the bill, and desire its early consideration.

The truth thus appears that it was on my motion that this bill became privileged; and upon my motion, therefore, that it is up before the House for action to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCREARY. I now yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, much in the way of denunciation of the Republican party was said on Saturday last by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] on account of the act of July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to encourage immigration." This act provided for the appointment of a commissioner of immigration and three clerks to assist him, whose duty it was to promote and encourage immigration from Europe, and assist and protect the immigrants.

It also authorized that contracts made by immigrants from foreign countries to the United States to repay the expenses of their immigration should be valid in law when made in pursuance of regulations prescribed by the commissioner of immigration and should be a lien on their wages for twelve months; with other provisions beneficial to the immigrant.

This legislation was had in pursuance of the repeated and urgent recommendations of President Lincoln, who in his annual message to Congress in December, 1863, recommended as follows:

> I again submit to your consideration the expediency of establishing a system for the encouragement of immigration. Although this source of national wealth and strength is again flowing with greater freedom than for several years before the insurrection occurred, there is still a great deficiency of laborers in every field of industry, especially in agriculture and in our mines, as well of iron and coal as of the precious metals.
> While the demand for labor is thus increased here, tens of thousands of persons, destitute of remunerative occupations, are thronging our foreign consulates and offering to emigrate to the United States if essential but very cheap assistance can be afforded them.
> It is easy to see that under the sharp discipline of civil war the nation is beginning a new life. This noble effort demands the aid and ought to receive the attention and support of the Government.

A special committee of the House was appointed to consider this clause of the message, consisting of Elihu B. Washburne, Mr. Grinnell, Mr. Baldwin, Republicans; Mr. Law, of Indiana, and Mr. Rollins, of Missouri, Democrats. On the 16th day of April, 1864, the committee, through Mr. Washburne, its chairman, unanimously reported the bill, which was enacted into law, setting out in the report the great necessity for promoting immigration, so that the emigrants could work in the field, on the farm, in the mine and factory, to assist in sustaining the million and a quarter of citizens who were in the field fighting the battles of the Republic.

The record shows that the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was given to the measure, and the gentleman now occupying the chair from New York [Mr. COX] said: "This is an important bill and properly guarded. I am in favor of it, but I hope the gentleman will not undertake to call the previous question upon it without reasonable discussion upon it." This was on the 20th of April, 1864. The consideration of the bill went over until the next day, and on the 21st of April, 1864, Mr. Washburne called it up, and without amendment or opposition it was unanimously passed by the House.

On the 27th day of June, 1864, it was called up in the Senate by Mr. SHERMAN, and after explanation was unanimously passed by the Senate and approved by Lincoln. This is the bill the passage of which is so roundly denounced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM]. Now, sir, it was passed during the very white heat of the war, and did much to carry it to a successful conclusion. It was passed at a time when the gentleman's party, with whom I believe he has always been in harmony, was meeting in national convention, declaring the war a failure and demanding a cessation of hostilities.

It was passed at a time when General Harrison, whom the gentleman so viciously denounces, was at the front fighting the battles of the Republic. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] then proceeds to denounce the Republican party for not repealing this act when the war closed.

The truth is that Congress did repeal the act when it was ascertained that the interests of the Republic required it. But the gentleman complains it was not repealed soon enough. Sir, there is no body on earth that more quicky responds to the public sentiment which creates it than the Congress of the United States.

But if it was not repealed soon enough, claims the gentleman, whose fault was it? The Democrats had a majority of almost two-thirds in the House of Representatives from the 4th of March, 1875, to the 4th of March, 1881, and two years of that time a majority of eight in the Senate of the United States. Mr. COX, of New York, Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, Messrs. MCDONALD and VOORHEES, of Indiana, and Judge Thurman, were all in Congress, yet no move was made to repeal this act of 1864. Finally, in 1884–'85, it became patent that its repeal was demanded by the best interests of all the people, so in the Forty-eighth Congress it was repealed and a severe penalty affixed for promoting immigration by contract.

The House was Democratic and passed this act without a division, both Democrats and Republicans voting for it. It went to a Republican Senate, and on the 18th day of February, 1885, it passed the Senate by a vote of 50 yeas and 9 nays.

Amongst those voting for it was General then Senator Harrison. Those voting against it were all Democratic Senators but one, and listen while I read their names: BUTLER of South Carolina, Groome of Maryland, HAMPTON of South Carolina, Maxey of Texas, MORGAN of Alabama, SAULSBURY of Delaware, VANCE of North Carolina, and Williams of Kentucky.

Several Republican MEMBERS. And all Democrats.

Mr. CANNON. I believe they are Democrats. [Laughter.] And yet within the last ten days men in another place, some of them, have gotten up in their places and denounced and misrepresented ex-Senator Harrison, after steeping their tongues in gall, for his record touching immigration. They are a pretty set of ducks to talk about immigration. [Laughter.]

A Republican President, Chester A. Arthur, approved this bill prohibiting contract immigration, and it became a law on the 26th of February, 1885.

President Cleveland was inaugurated on the 4th of March, 1885, and although the law was very stringent the abuse still continued, largely from a failure to enforce the law by this Administration. An amendatory act was passed and approved by the Forty-ninth Congress on the 23d February, 1887.

The bill was reported by Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, in the House. I had something to do in helping to shape it and perfect it.

I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, showing its consideration in the House.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest an amendment to strike out "without compensation," in line 40, and insert "and shall be entitled to reasonable compensation therefor, to be fixed by regulation prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I accept the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has no power to accept the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am aware of that. The gentleman, of course, understands what I mean—that I have no objection to its adoption.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not see the motive of making this change. I take it for granted the Committee on Labor has reached the conclusion that this service will be performed by these organizations without charge to the Federal Government; and the service is a matter of as much moment to the State and local authorities as to the General Government, in some instances of more moment.

On this account, it seems to me, the matter may well be left in a large degree under the charge of the State authorities, subject to regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, otherwise you bring together much more directly the exercise of power by the local authorities and by the Federal Government than you would by the provision as it stands.

Under the provision in its present form the local authorities will exercise power permissively, so to speak, as regards the General Government. Under the provision as proposed to be amended those local authorities will become, in a certain sense, officers of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana I desire to say that section 8 without this amendment will make it the duty of certain boards or persons to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to perform certain duties without compensation. Now, to my mind that is pure trifling, because everybody understands that when you devolve a duty upon any persons and for this purpose make them officers of the General Government, while at the same time you say the duty shall be performed without compensation, the provision is in effect—I speak without disrespect—a cheat and a fraud, because everybody knows that something can not and will not be done for nothing.

Now, if this legislation means anything, it is designed to prohibit the importation of this class of labor and to provide the money necessary to make this prohibition effectual; otherwise it is a mere empty enactment abounding in words only, and without practical strength or force.

This act of 1887 makes it the duty of the Administration to see to the enforcement of the law. It has the power to use all the customs force for that purpose, with a permanent annual appropriation of $5,000,000. It has the power to use the State boards and local authorities and all other necessary persons and pay them from the Treasury of the United States. The Administration has never asked for a dollar or provision for the purpose of enforcing this law but Congress has promptly and fully complied with its request. What is the result? The law has been a dead letter upon the statute-book, as shown by the evidence now being taken by a committee of this House in New York. The President and his Secretary of the Treasury, with ample means at hand, have made no considerable effort to enforce this law.

But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] complains that the Republican party and General Harrison have not favored legislation to prevent Chinese immigration. I have not the time to go into the detail of legislation touching the Chinese. That has been ably and fully covered by my colleagues, Mr. HITT, Mr. MORROW, Mr. MCKENNA, and others; suffice it to say that the most complete, stringent, and effective bill ever proposed in either branch of Congress was the bill proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] in connection with the judges of the courts in California.

This bill was introduced in the Republican Senate by Senator Fair, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate, of which General Harrison was a member, favorably and unanimously reported by that committee to the Senate, and unanimously passed by the Senate. It came to the Democratic House and was never considered by the House, although the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] week after week and month after month, in season out of season, used every parliamentary effort known to the rules to secure its consideration. But the Democratic House would not, and the bill "sleeps the sleep that knows no waking."

And yet, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana in his speech on Saturday, amongst other things, in substance, states that the Republican party was opposed to the repeal of the contract immigration law, opposed to the passage of laws restricting the immigration of the Chinese, and that General Harrison was opposed to the restriction of Chinese immigration, and desired to confer the right of citizenship upon the Chinese.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] denounces General Harrison as an enemy of labor. In reply I say General Harrison risked his life for years in the Army in defense of labor. It does not lie in the mouth of the gentleman to denounce him as the gentleman from Indiana did denounce him; and while I listened to the misrepresentations of the gentleman from Indiana touching the Republican party and its candidate for the Presidency, I thought then that if the gentleman had lived at the beginning of the Christian era, and that if misrepresentation and garbling the records of public men and of a great party had been a crime, as it was to keep money from the common treasury, and he had been there, Ananias would have had a surname, and it would have been Bynum. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, a word in conclusion. I am satisfied that the great mass of the people in this country now, as heretofore, are ready to welcome all people who will voluntarily come to the United States, and in good faith cast in their lot with us, and become good citizens of the Republic, support the Constitution, and render an equivalent for that which they receive, assimilating with our people, and none others need apply. This is the position of the Republican party and its candidates.

Mr. MCCREARY. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

[Mr. BYNUM withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, at the time I addressed the House when this bill was first reported, I did not expect to say anything more; but during the debate statements have been made which make it necessary for me to briefly address the House again.

It has been said the bill should not have been submitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but should have been acted on as soon as it came to the House from the Senate. Why should there be such haste? What necessity is there for undue haste in action on this bill? The Senate ratified the treaty with two amendments. Those amendments were sent to China for ratification. It will be months before they can be ratified, and there is no necessity for undue haste in our action on this bill.

The proper course for the bill to take was to go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and that course was adopted. The bill was sent to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House, and was reported back to the House in less than one week from the date of its reference to the committee. It was very important that this bill should be sent to the committee, because there was in the bill a provision repealing the act of 1882, and the amendment thereto passed in 1884, to enforce certain treaty stipulations prohibiting Chinese laborers from coming to the United States; and if we had agreed to the Senate bill as it came to the House and adopted it, when the President approved the bill all the ports of the country would have been thrown open to the importation of Chinese laborers without restriction until the exchange of ratifications of the pending treaty between United States and China.

Mr. MORROW. There would have been no danger of that, because I had the amendment drawn at the time the Senate bill was under consideration.

Mr. McCREARY. Well, if the gentleman had, he did not say anything about it.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I presented that amendment to the committee, and also to the gentleman from Kentucky when he returned.

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, but that was after you had tried to get the Senate bill through the House without referring it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. MORROW. But as soon as the gentleman from Kentucky returned I presented it.

Mr. McCREARY. But not until after the bill was attempted to be passed.

Again, sir, it is alleged that the legislation of the Forty-ninth Congress was not as prompt as it should have been on the Chinese question. The gentleman from California [Mr. McKENNA] tried to make capital to-day on the ground that we had not been as expeditious as we ought to have been in that Congress, and as prompt to stop the incoming of the Chinese laborers to this country as we ought to have been. But what are the facts? The gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] introduced a bill in the Forty-ninth Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, on the 21st day of December, 1885.

That bill was promptly considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, favorably reported to the House, and put upon the Calendar on the 1st day of May, 1886, three months before the adjournment of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. MORROW. Nearly five months having elapsed.

Mr. McCREARY. But at that very time, as has been said here this evening, the treaty which the President and Secretary of State have so successfully negotiated, and which was sent by the President for constitutional approval on the 12th day of March, 1888, to the Senate, was under consideration.

I want to say in this connection that I believe the treaty-making power of this country is subordinate to the legislative power, and this position, as all know, is in accordance with the legislative history of the country, and is sustained by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, but as there were negotiations looking to a treaty absolutely prohibitory, no action was taken by the House on the bill reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs May 1, 1886.

The Foreign Affairs Committee has always promptly, expeditiously, and as soon as possible, considered every bill that has been referred to them looking to the stopping, restraining, or suspending the immigration of Chinese labor.

It has been asserted, also, that we did not report the Felton bill. Mr. Speaker, it was not proper to report the Felton bill after we had favorably reported the Morrow bill. These bills were substantially the same, but neither of them changed existing law much, and neither of them were as full and comprehensive as the situation on the Pacific coast demanded. The report of the committee on the Morrow bill declares:

> The main features of this bill, which differ from those which have preceded it, are as follows: It provides, first, that no Chinese laborer shall have the right to emigrate to the United States for the term of ten years from and after its passage; second, it provides for the means of identification by photographic representations of any Chinaman who shall seek to go abroad; third, it prescribes and limits the number of Chinese according to tonnage that may be brought over in any one ship or vessel.

Now, at that very time the treaty of Pekin, concluded in 1880, was in force. At that very time the act of 1882 and the amendment of 1884 suspending Chinese immigration to the United States for ten years were in force.

Mr. Speaker, it is very late and I desire to be brief. In closing I wish to remind the members of this House that an examination of all the treaties negotiated between the United States and China shows that the Burlingame treaty, which was ratified in 1869, allowed Chinese of every description to come to this country for the purpose of pleasure, or trade, or for permanent residence, and this treaty was negotiated by a Republican administration. The next treaty was that of 1880, known as the Pekin treaty. This treaty is still in force and provides that the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States, but not absolutely prohibit it. This treaty also was negotiated by a Republican administration.

What is the record of the Democratic Administration on this subject since it came into power in 1885? A treaty has been negotiated absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States.

The bill under consideration is to carry that treaty into effect. After many years we have at last reached a position where we may with confidence believe that we have an effective remedy for the evils so long complained of, and that the treaty and the bill now under consideration will when they take effect furnish the relief so long desired.

The Democratic party is entitled to the credit of taking every step that can be taken to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into this country. Mr. Speaker, I now ask that a vote be taken on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has already been ordered. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out section 15 and insert:
> "That the act entitled 'An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese,' approved May 6, 1882, and the act amending said act approved July 5, 1884, are hereby repealed, to take effect upon the ratification of the pending treaty, as provided in section 1 of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCREARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. As this is the completion of the special order, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McCREARY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. FARQUHAR: A bill (H. R. 11222) granting a pension to Elizabeth Heckler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 11223) to increase the pension of George A. Glover—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 11224) for the relief of the legal representatives of C. H. Stibolt—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HEARD: A bill (H. R. 11225) granting a pension to Robert C. Thomas—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11226) for the relief of William R. King—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. J. S. HENDERSON: A bill (H. R. 11227) for the relief of Henry Setzer—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: A bill (H. R. 11228) granting a pension to Emily Onderdonk—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11229) granting a pension to Fletcher Galloway—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11230) granting a pension to George Thornton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11231) granting a pension to Stilson A. Shepard—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11232) granting a pension to Julia Phelan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11233) increasing the pension of Nelson Rich—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11234) for the relief of Charles Potter—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POST: A bill (H. R. 11235) granting a pension to John W. Shields—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SIMMONS: A bill (H. R. 11236) granting a pension to Bloomfield Foreman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRUBLE: A bill (H. R. 11237) to remove the charge of desertion against James W. Armor—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. YOST: A bill (H. R. 11238) for the relief of George W. Skelton—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11239) for the relief of Jacob H. Lindsey—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOUND (by request): Petition of Charlotte Smith, President of the Woman's National Industrial League of America, praying for the passage of a law by Congress to punish the sending of women and girls to houses of ill fame, and detaining them therein for purposes of prostitution—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. BUTLER: Petition of Wade H. Smith, of Hawkins County, Tennessee, and of A. T. Smith, heir of Thomas Smith, of Hawkins County, Tennessee, for reference of their claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claim.

By Mr. CARUTH: Petition of retail druggists, of Kentucky, favoring repeal of the license tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FORNEY: Petition of Giles N. Elam, administrator estate Elisha Farrow, deceased, of Cherokee County, Alabama, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LYNCH: Petition of William Hancock and others, citizens of Wyoming, Pa., praying for the passage of the Mills bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Petition of 30 citizens of Dimondale, Eaton County, Michigan, asking for the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of Charles Potter, late a member of Company L, Fifth Michigan Cavalry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PETERS: Petition of Grand Army of the Republic, No. 319, Raymond, Kans., favoring pension to Francis M. Gibson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petition of W. B. Graves and 43 citizens of Amesville, and of Z. R. Evans and 85 citizens of Royal, N. Y., in favor of per diem pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY: Petition of citizens of Elkhart, Ind., for amendments to the interstate-commerce act—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. T. L. THOMPSON: Memorial of General George Stoneman, praying the passage by Congress of special act authorizing the appointment of the memorialist on the retired-list of the Army with the rank and pay of a colonel of infantry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILKINSON (by request): Petition of Marie Hill, widow, and heirs of Alexander Hill, deceased, of Orleans Parish, Louisiana, for the reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. W. L. WILSON: Petition of Jonathan W. Thatcher, of Berkeley County, West Virginia, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 21, 1888.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature of the enrolled bill (H. R. 8662) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannack Indians for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, for the purposes of a town site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes; which had yesterday been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that yesterday, by unanimous consent, it was agreed that at the close of the reading of the Journal this morning the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the fisheries treaty in open executive session. As the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who, as the Chair is informed, was upon the floor and is entitled to resume it this morning, is not present, it may suit the convenience of the Senate to postpone informally the execution of that order for the reception of formal morning business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be that some other Senator would like to speak.

Mr. HALE. The understanding is that when the Senator from Alabama shall come into the Chamber the regular business will be resumed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests, that some other Senator is ready to proceed at this moment upon the fisheries treaty.

Mr. BUTLER. My recollection of the understanding is that after the formal morning business it was agreed that the Senator from Alabama should take the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The RECORD reads "at the conclusion of the reading of the Journal."

Mr. HALE. That was the arrangement.

Mr. BUTLER. I was misinformed, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no Senator desires to proceed, the Chair will take it as the sense of the Senate that the formal routine morning business may be received, and that the order of the Senate shall be executed whenever the Senator from Alabama comes in.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a petition of the board of county commissioners of Yakima County, Washington Territory, praying for a modification of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, so that the cost and expenses of criminal prosecutions coming up for trial in the courts of that county for offenses committed by Indians on the Yakima Indian reservation may be charged to the General Government instead of the county of Yakima.

I will state in this connection that a bill in precise accordance with this petition has already passed the Senate at the present session, and has gone to the other House, where I hope it will be acted upon very soon.

I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of Oregon, praying that provision be made for the payment of claims of settlers on the frontier who have suffered from Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask for the following order:

Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of John Wightman.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be made subject to the rule.

REVENUE-CUTTER THOMAS CORWIN.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would a conference report be in order now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A conference report would be in order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I submit a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1761) entitled "A bill for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, for money advanced the Oregon Iron Works, the contractor in building the United States revenue-cutter Thomas Corwin," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and, with the following amendment, agree to the same: Insert, after the word "iron," in line 15, page 2, of the Senate amendment, the following:

"To Coffin & Hendry, of San Francisco, the sum of $1,575 for furnishing sails and rigging."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN H. MITCHELL,
WM. M. STEWART,
E. K. WILSON,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
W. P. TAULBEE,
BINGER HERMANN,
THOS. L. THOMPSON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the amendment read and the House proceedings, and see how the bill will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 26, 1888.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1761) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, for money advanced the Oregon Iron Works, the contractor in building the United States revenue-cutter Thomas Corwin, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoint Mr. TAULBEE, Mr. HERMANN, and Mr. BIGGS managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to hear the other proceedings of the House read so as to see what the amendment is.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair observes the arrival of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. The Senate in pursuance of the order of yesterday proceeds in open executive session to the consideration of the fisheries treaty. The reading of the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday's open executive session will be dispensed with, if there be no objection. The Secretary will report the treaty by its title.

The EXECUTIVE CLERK. A treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, before proceeding further with the argument for the treaty this morning I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a resolution that was forwarded to me to-day by a friend from Philadelphia, which has some bearing on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] to recommit the treaty under instructions. In the letter addressed to me, dated Philadelphia, August 20, 1888, the writer says:

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

RESPECTED FRIEND: I am just home from the twenty-second anniversary of the Universal Peace Union, at Mystic, Conn. Four thousand to six thousand persons present. The following resolution, after being discussed, passed unanimously:

"Resolved, That the fisheries treaty should be speedily adopted, with power to amend as experience may prove it advisable, in the common interests of the United States, Canada, and Great Britain."

Yours, respectfully.

I am very much gratified to know that the people of the United States are getting hold of this question and looking narrowly into it, and that although the efforts which we have been making here to lay the facts before the country have been protracted, sometimes almost exasperating in their prolongation, still the debate has called this subject to the attention of the people, and I think that they are taking a very reasonable view of the situation.

Yesterday when my remarks were broken in upon by the occurrence of the hour of 6 o'clock, which terminated my right to hold the floor, I had passed through the discussion of the various articles of this treaty down to and including the twelfth article.

The discussion which has taken place upon Article XIII of the treaty has rather abated in its zeal. When we first started out, and in the report of the majority of this committee, very especial care was taken to bring prominently forward the insult that was alleged to have been offered to our fishermen by the requirement that the numbers of the fishing vessels should be upon the bow of the vessel. It always occurred to me that that was a very unnecessary quarrel with this treaty, for it certainly is to our interest and also the interest of the people of Canada and the government of the provinces of the Dominion that those of our fishermen who are accredited to those waters should be so designated as that they should be entitled to receive all of the protection and all of the benefits of this treaty, whatever they may be, and should also be entitled to the protection of our own Government in the event that any of the treaty stipulations respecting our fishing vessels were violated. Unless they are numbered in some distinctive way, there might be serious difficulty in applying to them the advantages and liabilities fixed by this treaty.

Mr. President, an examination of our statutes in connection with the complaints made against the Canadian legislation, as I have already presented them, will show that they have been pursuing in a general way almost exactly the policy we pursue in respect of vessels of any kind or character coming into our ports. I do not deny that there have been abuses of authority in Canada, and that they have been aggravated and serious; neither do I deny that they have been put upon us for the purpose of vexing and harassing us. Nevertheless, when we come to argue upon the authority that was left to them by the treaty of 1818, as local legislators to enact laws of this kind, we are bound to concede to them what we claim for ourselves, the right and privilege of passing statutes like those upon our statute-books for the protection, as they may think, of their commerce or their ports or their people along their shores.

I neither mitigate nor excuse in any sense at all Canadian interference with our commerce and with our fishing vessels, nor do I seek to palliate the gravity of the offenses which have been committed against us; but here has stood our parallel systems, having respect in a large part to the treaty of 1818, enacted in its most vigorous and offensive form in 1819 by the British Parliament, and afterwards re-enacted in various forms by the provincial governments. Here they have stood during all these administrations since 1814, and there has not been a demand made in solemn form by the Government of the United States upon the Government of Great Britain that their statutes should be repealed.

The first direct effort that was made in that direction was made in the treaty of 1888, now pending, not by demanding that they should repeal their statutes, but by putting into the treaty provisions which remove and restrain the effect of those laws, which should stand as the supreme law of both countries, which should stand above the power of legislative tribunals to repeal, alter, or amend them. The provisions are found displayed in this treaty in such a way that the Committee on Foreign Relations has been compelled to admit in their report that privileges have been granted to us, especially under the eleventh article of the treaty, which, if understood in the light that the President understands them, would meet the various complaints almost entirely that we have been making in respect of the denial to us of commercial privileges in that quarter.

So it must be admitted by every candid mind that the provisions of the fourteenth article of this treaty do dispense with almost every possibility of abuse that can arise under the administration of the local laws of the provinces in respect of our fishermen. I submit that fourteenth article in my remarks without taking the time to read it. Of course the Senate know what it is.

It is as follows:

ARTICLE XIV.

The penalties for unlawfully fishing in the waters, bays, creeks, and harbors, referred to in Article I of this treaty, may extend to forfeiture of the boat or vessel, and appurtenances, and also of the supplies and cargo aboard when the offense was committed; and for preparing in such waters to unlawfully fish therein, penalties shall be fixed by the court, not to exceed those for unlawfully fishing; and for other violation of the laws of Great Britain, Canada, or Newfoundland relating to the right of fishery in such waters, bays, creeks, or harbors, penalties shall be fixed by the court, not exceeding in all $3 for every ton of the boat or vessel concerned. The boat or vessel may be holden for such penalties and forfeitures.

The proceedings shall be summary and as inexpensive as practicable. The trial (except on appeal) shall be at the place of detention, unless the judge shall, on request of the defense, order it to be held at some other place adjudged by him more convenient. Security for cost shall not be required of the defense, except when bail is offered. Reasonable bail shall be accepted. There shall be proper appeals available to the defense only; and the evidence at the trial may be used on appeal.

Judgments of forfeiture shall be reviewed by the governor-general of Canada in council, or the governor in council of Newfoundland before the same are executed.

This article is a broad and comprehensive remedy, fixed the supreme law, and beyond the reach of legislative amendment or repeal, which covers the grievances of which we have so long complained.

The fifteenth article of the treaty is not really to be considered on its ratification as an article of the treaty until it is made so by an act of Congress. Mr. Bayard, as I have often observed in the course of this debate, declined all negotiation with these gentlemen on the subject of an interference in any form or shape with our revenue system. Mr. Bayard understands the Constitution of the United States in a Democratic sense, and that is, that the Senate, the treaty-making power, denies to itself all power that is not expressly granted in the Constitution to it, or that by a necessary implication arises in its favor out of some express grant. So he holds to the doctrine as tenaciously as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] does, that the Senate of the United States and the President combined, as the treaty-making power of this country, have no right to interfere with anything that affects the regulation of the revenues of this Government; that all matters of that kind when they are touched by a treaty in this country must be referred by the treaty itself to the Congress of the United States, in whose action under the Constitution the House of Representatives would have the origination of bills relating to the revenues which might be affected by such treaty.

So Mr. Bayard discarded absolutely this subject from the negotiation. But the proposition which Great Britain made through her negotiators to us was simply this: "We will make this proposition and become bound to it as a treaty obligation, if the Congress of the United States—not the President and the Senate—shall hereafter choose to adopt and to ratify that agreement." Senators get up here and descant upon the nature of that article as if they had any control of it. Article XV puts the control of this subject entirely in the hands of the Congress of the United States, and it is for these two bodies and the President, concurrently, acting in a legislative capacity, to determine whether the provisions of the fifteenth article will ever be admitted as an operative part of the treaty. If Congress should ever admit those provisions to vitality, then we should have the advantage of having a treaty obligation on the part of Great Britain to grant to us the privileges that are proposed to be conferred in the fifteenth article from which Great Britain could never withdraw until we released her from the treaty, and there is no provision, it must be remarked, in this treaty for any release. After such an arrangement should be made, if any should ever be made, we would stand related to Great Britain upon the footing of a treaty obligation for securing that which is now represented and is being claimed as a privilege only by the flimsy and uncertain comity that is said to exist and to have arisen out of the act of 1830.

The so-called reciprocity of 1830 has had a conspicuous bearing upon this debate, and yet when we look back over all that was done in the time of General Grant and from that time back through all the Republican administrations, I do not remember that any allusion, even, has been made to it as conferring upon us rights that we could claim from Great Britain—a mere question of grace and comity; precisely as our admission of their products into our ports and into our country is likewise a question of grace and comity. It would be very well, I think, in these neighboring countries that our relations in respect of the admission of productions into either country from the other should be regulated by positive and obligatory treaty stipulations, upon which the people could rely with absolute certainty and for all time to come. We could, by an arrangement of that kind, give a sedateness and a steadfastness to commercial operations that would be greatly beneficial not merely to the trade that exists between the two countries but largely beneficial to those operations of a commercial and mercantile character in which our people are jointly interested, in corporations and in copartnerships, with the people of Canada.

Our relations with that country are very intimate and they are very delicate. It has transpired during the course of this debate and in the experiences we have had since the effort of March, 1887, to compel retaliation, that there was a very subtile and sagacious purpose on the part of the Republican Senators, and especially those from New England, when they declined to allow the railroad intercourse between the United States and Canada to be interrupted by the proclamation of the President. Why did they reserve that interest from exposure to danger when the act of March 3, 1887, exposed the entire commerce with Canada, with that exception, to being embargoed or controlled and regulated by the proclamation of the President? It was because they had large amounts of money there, and it was because under the treaty of 1871 and the regulations following it the ports from which shipments might be made into Canada of goods in bond were designated ports, and every one of them was a New England port.

They got the trade and benefits of Article XXIX of the treaty of 1871, and when we came to legislate in March, 1887, they held on to it; and what has been the result? Canada has been cheating us day by day under the various provisions of the treaty of 1871. Our people, according to the spirit and the very letter of that treaty, are entitled to carry their commerce across their canals without the charge of any tolls; to carry it to United States ports or to carry it through the St. Lawrence River to British or foreign ports, wherever they chose to go. What has been the result? The Canadians are not only building more lines to get the complete control of all this matter of transportation into their own hands, but, while they would nominally charge their vessels tonnage dues for the passage through the canals so as to put them upon an apparently equal footing with our ships, when they came to the final arrangement of the matter they would give a rebate to their own people upon commerce that was destined to Canadian or British ports, thus abusing our treaty rights in a very serious way.

That is an abuse, and a glaring abuse. But what can the President do about this? It was a doubtful question, I say a very doubtful question, whether Article XXIX of that treaty is in force. Perhaps, sir, the judgment of the majority of this Senate would resolve it in the affirmative, that the twenty-ninth article of the Treaty of Washington was abrogated when we abrogated the fisheries clauses of that treaty, and that therefore the Canadian Government has never had the right since the termination of that treaty to have her goods carried in bond through the United States and over our railways into Canadian territory. There is no doubt, however, of one proposition, and that is that the privilege had been accorded to Canada before the treaty of 1871 was ratified—no doubt of that. Under what law this was permitted, I think no man can tell. These New England ports were open to goods shipped in bond free of duty across our territory prior to 1871 under Republican administrations when there was no law to justify it at all, and afterwards when by an enactment of Congress we carried the Treaty of Washington into effect, it being a treaty that did not execute itself without provision by act of Congress, it was expressly provided that this privilege should exist and should continue in favor of the Canadians only so long as the fisheries clauses of the treaty should stand.

This act of Congress is operative to maintain and continue this privilege under the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871, notwithstanding that article has been terminated by our act.

I submit it to the Senate of the United States whether or not that act of Congress ought not to be repealed, whether or not we should not have some authentic legislative determination in respect of the operation of the twenty-ninth article of the Treaty of Washington? We see how they are practicing abuses continually against us under this treaty, and yet the action of Congress, after its ratification and promulgation, in the provisions of law enacted for the execution of the treaty of 1871 stands across the pathway to full redress of these wrongs until Congress removes them. Not merely is this unrepealed law an instruction to the President of the United States as to the will of Congress, but it is a prohibition upon him to do anything for the ratification of these matters that are claimed to exist rightfully in favor of Canada under the treaty of 1871.

Now, sir, when we reject this treaty we are plunged again into darkness and chaos. After this treaty is rejected there is nothing under our feet but the treaty of 1818; and the dark shadow of the declaration of the Committee on Foreign Relations overclouds the subject, and proclaims to the American people and to the British people that this is not a fit subject of negotiation, and that the time for negotiation and remonstrance has passed. Then, Mr. President, we shall have need to survey the ground with a good deal of circumspection. We are not confronted with a weak and pusillanimous or a cowardly party in Great Britain, however it may suit the tastes and feelings of Senators on the other side of this Chamber thus to decry, to disparage, to outrage and slander the American name and fame as presented in its Executive. We are not confronting a cowardly or pusillanimous people. We go back deliberately with this declaration of the Committee on Foreign Relations; we go back into this period of doubt and difficulty and distrust. More than that, we do not turn our faces in this direction until we have threatened the President of the United States with impeachment if he does not dare to carry our will into effect. It is so threatened in the following language in that report:

> These "plenipotentiaries" came to a conclusion of their labors on the 15th of February, 1888, and the offices of "plenipotentiaries" terminated, and the result was reached without the advice and consent of the Senate having been asked or taken concerning the selection of these public ministers, and without any communication to either House of Congress concerning this most important subject.
> It is not difficult to see that, in evil times, when the President of the United States may be under influence of foreign and adverse interests, such a course of procedure might result in great disaster to the interests and even the safety of our Government and people.
> It is no answer to this suggestion to say that an arrangement thus concluded can not be valid or effectual without the advice and consent of the Senate, for the rights and interests of the people of the United States might be so neglected, misunderstood, abandoned, or sold by President's "plenipotentiaries" as to greatly embarrass, if not defeat, their ultimate reassertion in better times and under better administrations, though it is hoped that such will not be the case in respect of these negotiations.
> The document submitted to the Senate by the President as the outcome of these negotiations may, it is thought, well illustrate the dangers of such methods.
> But holding in reserve, for the time being, these grave questions touching usurpations of unconstitutional powers, or the abuse of those that may be thought to exist on the part of the Executive, the committee thinks it sufficient for the present occasion to deal with the document itself.
> The subject with which, according to the message of the President transmitting it, this document professes to deal, is "the settlement of the questions growing out of the rights claimed by American fishermen in British North American waters."

That is what is threatened to be done in this majority report, and in no unmeaning terms. True, it is a little covered up, I suppose for the sake of the delicate sensibilities of the gentlemen who thus threaten the President of the United States, and after that, when concluding their report, they bowed themselves in humble submission before Queen Victoria and begged her to take care of our interests in the fisheries. We go into it with a threat of impeachment of the President of the United States. Why that was put there is only known to the gentlemen who framed that very peculiar statement in this report. It was referred to in the minority report; it has been referred to in speeches here. It has not produced, I think, very much impression on the country. The people who voluntarily met in convention in Connecticut, as they met on the day before yesterday, five or six thousand of them, and passed their resolutions without one dissenting voice supporting this treaty and applauding the President for having made it—these people and many millions of others stand behind him because they know that his attitude in regard to this treaty is just, upright, honest, true, and American in every sense.

So these vain fulminations of this eminent committee who think, as it appears from their utterances, that they have their grasp upon the President of the United States to compel him to do obedience to their will, and who think that by their supplications directed to the British throne they can mitigate and assuage the conduct of Queen Victoria with respect to our fisheries and our fishermen are harmless. These gentlemen can fulminate their idle bulls against the President and against the policy involved in this treaty, they can accept uncertainty and darkness in the place of light, insecurity in place of the firm rock upon which this treaty would place the rights of the American people, they can create agitation in the land, but, sir, the people of the United States are revolting against these high assumptions on the part of this committee. They are revolting against the idea that the Senate of the United States, that can not declare war of its own motion and by its own resolution, should put this country in a category where war is one of the dismal prospects of the near future in the contemplation of many men who are as firm in their integrity, as bold in their defense of right as any on that side, and who, perhaps, are just as fearless of the results of war as any who have declaimed against this treaty on that side. It does not shame us or alarm us to look the truth in the face, and to be willing to admit and act upon whatever we know to be true.

The Senate to-day forces the people of the United States into rough and immediate contact with the most dangerous question that can possibly be stated, and that under the depressing influence and shadow of a report which is brought in here by the Committee on Foreign Relations that is intended and well calculated to prevent the British Government from doing anything further in respect of negotiation with us, except merely to find out what we mean by these declarations. I repeat the remark I sometimes have had occasion to make in this debate, that if this were the action of the British Parliament, and if a treaty that we had approved or were willing to approve had been laid before that Parliament by the Queen, and if it had been debated as it has been debated here, and if a committee of the House of Commons had made the same report that we make here in respect of the American people, if they had charged us with outrageous, willful violations of a treaty, if they had declared that the time for negotiation with us in respect of this matter had passed and that this was not a fit subject of negotiation, I can not be so mistaken in American opinion as not to feel entirely warranted in saying before the Senate to-day we would accept that as a challenge to war.

Now, how they may accept it is not for me to say or even to conjecture, for I know not. I trust in God that the events which seem to lie before us, which will repeat those wrongs of the past as well as cause others of the same nature that are to come, about which we have had so much trouble, may not be of such an aggravated character as to force these two great and magnificent peoples into collision with each other about so small a matter as the duty on salt fish. I trust so.

Will that side of the Chamber pardon me for saying, however, that when you have gone to that extent, and when these calamities occur and these trials are pressing on our country, her interests, her feelings, her sensibilities shall all be ours and we will march breast to breast with you with the same alacrity as if we had never divided in opinion with you on this question or any other, and what the majority shall decree to be the will of the American people in respect to these controversies in the future shall be our will? With one united voice we will go into any contest that may arise, Mr. President, notwithstanding all the sneers and slurs, the contumely and contempt that have been thrown upon the gentlemen on this side of this Chamber because of their connection with the late rebellion and their advocacy of this treaty. We shall prove just as true as you are to the flag of the American Union. We will spend our money just as freely as you do and more freely than many of you have done. We have shed our blood where some of you have not dared to shed it in times that have passed, and you will find the old spirit animating the Southern Democracy. You will find that the man who can lead the American hosts to victory in the contests you may bring about and the wars you may provoke will receive from the united Democracy of the country that sort of support and love and affectionate reverence which our fathers bestowed upon Andrew Jackson, and which will cling to his memory in Democratic hearts in the South while time itself shall last, if this shall still be a nation.

Andrew Jackson had the Democratic and patriotic view of retaliation, and, in a controversy with France when he had been provoked almost beyond endurance by the action of the French Assembly towards him personally and as President of the United States, he stated to Congress the views I now present, as the true Democratic attitude on the policy of retaliation.

President Jackson thus advised Congress, in his sixth annual message (1834), as to the policy of such action:

> Our institutions are essentially pacific. Peace and friendly intercourse with all nations are as much the desire of our Government as they are the interest of our people. But these objects are not to be permanently secured by surrendering the rights of our citizens, or permitting solemn treaties for their indemnity in cases of flagrant wrong to be abrogated or set aside.

It is undoubtedly in the power of Congress seriously to affect the agricultural and manufacturing interests of France by the passage of laws relating to her trade with the United States. Her products, manufactures, and tonnage may be subjected to heavy duties in our ports, or all commercial intercourse with her may be suspended. But there are powerful and, to my mind, conclusive objections to this mode of proceeding. We can not embarrass or cut off the trade of France without at the same time in some degree embarrassing or cutting off our own trade. The injury of such a warfare must fall, though unequally, upon our own citizens, and could not but impair the means of the Government, and weaken that united sentiment in support of the rights and honor of the nation which must now pervade every bosom.

Nor is it impossible that such a course of legislation would introduce once more into our national councils these disturbing questions in relation to the tariff of duties which have been so recently put to rest; besides, by every measure adopted by the Government of the United States, with the view of injuring France, the clear perception of right which will induce our own people, and the rulers and people of all other nations, even of France herself, to pronounce our quarrel just, will be obscured, and the support rendered to us, in a final resort to more decisive measures, will be more limited and equivocal.

There is but one point in the controversy, and upon that the whole civilized world must pronounce France to be in the wrong. We insist that she shall pay us a sum of money which she has acknowledged to be due, and of the justice of this demand there can be but one opinion among mankind. True policy would seem to dictate that the question at issue should be kept thus disencumbered, and that not the slightest pretense should be given to France to persist in her refusal to make payment by any act on our part affecting the interests of her people. The question should be left as it is now, in such an attitude that when France fulfills her treaty stipulations all controversy will be at an end.

THE STATUES FROM NEW JERSEY.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I rise to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments on the motion I am about to make, which is that the pending order may be postponed for a few minutes only, in order that formal action may be taken upon the resolutions I introduced a few days ago and gave notice of my intention to call up this morning, for the formal acceptance of the statues of Richard Stockton and General Philip Kearny. Similar action will be taken in the other House to-day, and a committee of the Legislature of New Jersey are here to take part in the proceedings. I do not think it will take more than thirty minutes, as I wish to speak but a few minutes to the resolution and my colleague [Mr. BLODGETT] will take only three or four minutes of time. Therefore I ask that the pending order be laid aside informally in order to proceed to the consideration of the resolutions I have mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside to enable him to move to proceed to the consideration of a resolution, the title of which will be read by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. A concurrent resolution of Mr. McPHERSON tendering the thanks of Congress to the governor and through him to the people of New Jersey for marble statues of Richard Stockton and General Philip Kearny.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to the governor and through him to the people of New Jersey for the statues of Richard Stockton and Philip Kearny, whose names are so honorably identified with the history of the State and of the United States.

Resolved, That these works of art are accepted in the name of the nation, and assigned places in the old Hall of the House of Representatives already set aside by act of Congress for statues of eminent citizens, and that a copy of this resolution signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be transmitted to the governor of New Jersey.

Mr. BECK. Let the second resolution be read again. I want to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the second resolution.

Mr. BECK. I think the words ought to be "Congress of the United States." I have no objection to calling this a nation with a big N, but I think the Congress of the United States ought to accept the statues in the name of the United States and not in the name of "the nation." I make that suggestion.

Mr. McPHERSON. I was about to move the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, and I was on my feet for that purpose. In the first line of the second resolution, I move to strike out the word "nation" and insert the words "United States."

Mr. SHERMAN. If that is a departure from the usual words in such resolutions, I shall object to it. I think this is a nation with a great big N, and I shall not vote to strike that word out.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know that there is any difference, but this is an acceptance by the United States. We admit the fact, I believe, that we are the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Similar resolutions have been adopted over and over again. If this is according to the usual form it is all right, but I would not change the form of the resolutions which have been heretofore adopted, merely to satisfy a scruple about the word "nation." I believe this is a nation.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not press his amendment. I think the Senator will see that if the resolution had been originally proposed as the Senator from Kentucky suggests, nobody would have made any question, but as it has been offered in this way, to amend it by striking out the word "nation" will amount to a declaration by Congress apparently that that was not an appropriate description of the country.

Mr. McPHERSON. I only wish to say, in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts, that I have no particular choice myself as to the term to be used, but it will be seen that this is a contribution by the State of New Jersey to the United States in answer to a resolution of Congress asking each State to send statues of two of its distinguished citizens for the purpose of being placed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives. Therefore I think that the words "United States" would be far better and more appropriate under the circumstances. However, I shall not press that.

Mr. President, in selecting from the illustrious dead of the State of New Jersey the two most worthy to be represented by statues in the old hall of the House of Representatives, it seemed to the senate and general assembly of that State appropriate to choose the names of Richard Stockton and Philip Kearny—one the most accomplished and distinguished statesman, one of the few, the immortal names that signed the Declaration of American Independence; the other the patriot soldier and gallant leader, who gave first an arm and then his life in maintaining the principles of American liberty, to which cause our fathers pledged their lives and sacred honors.

Both of these distinguished men were prominent in their country's history in times of great public distress and danger.

The first lived and suffered amid the stormy scenes which ushered in the birth of the Republic. The second witnessed the full fruition of complete and glorious manhood, and when assailed by fratricidal foes into his brave heart received joyfully the death wound intended for her own. Little thought the one who rocked the cradle of Liberty and guarded that of Independence, and who went down into the grave rejoicing in the belief that the lives then shed were sacrifices enough, that during the lifetime of the other these dearly-bought liberties must needs be maintained by the lives of three hundred thousand of her sons, who with equal courage and devotion laid down their lives in its defense. Happy are they who died before that time and we who have survived it.

The great-grandfather of Richard Stockton came from England in the year 1670 and first settled upon Long Island, in the colony of New York; thence he came to New Jersey and purchased a large tract of land of which Princeton, N. J., is nearly the center. and commenced a settlement. His father inherited the family seat at Princeton. He was a man of great power and influence, and filled for many years the position of chief judge of the courts in the county in which he lived. Here Richard Stockton was born on the 1st day of October, 1730, was graduated at the New Jersey College, then located at Newark, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1754, in which he soon attained great reputation. He rose so rapidly in his profession that in 1763 he received the degree of sergeant at law, a high distinction in the English courts, and then recognized in the American colonies.

In 1766 he embarked for London and exerted himself especially to remove the prevailing ignorance regarding the American Colonies. While in Scotland his personal efforts induced Dr. John Witherspoon to reconsider his refusal to become the president of Princeton; the same Witherspoon who afterwards was elected to the Continental Congress and signed the Declaration of Independence. On the 1st day of July, 1776, when the subject of the Declaration of Independence was discussed, a distinguished member observed "that the people are not ripe for independence." Dr. Witherspoon replied, "In my judgment, sir, we are not only ripe but rotting." Mr. Stockton returned from England in September, 1767. In 1768 he was made a member of the executive council of the province. In 1774 he was raised to the supreme bench of New Jersey.

He strove at first to effect a reconciliation between the colonies and the mother country, and on the 12th of December, 1774, sent to Lord Dartmouth an expedient for the settlement of the American disputes, in which he proposed a plan of colonial self-government; but he soon became active in efforts to organize a prudent opposition, and on the 21st of June, 1776, was chosen by the provincial congress a member of the Continental Congress then in session in Philadelphia. His silence during the opening debates on the question of independence, which has been chronicled by Dr. Benjamin Rush, leads to the conclusion that at first he doubted the expediency of the declaration, but at the close of the discussion he expressed his concurrence in the final vote in a short but energetic address. He was re-elected to Congress, where he was an active member, and in September, 1776, at the first meeting of the State delegates under the new constitution, he was a candidate for governor, and on the first ballot received an equal number of votes with his opponent, Mr. Livingston, who was afterwards elected. Mr. Stockton was then chosen chief-justice by a unanimous vote, but declined.

On the 26th of September, 1776, Richard Stockton and George Clymer were appointed a committee to inspect the Northern army under General Schuyler. On the 30th of November, at night, he was captured by a party of loyalists at the house of John Covenhoven, in Monmouth, N. J., where, with his family, he had taken refuge to prevent their capture by the British army, then pursuing Washington and his little band across New Jersey. His host shared his fate. Mr. Stockton was thrown into a common prison in New York. He remained in prison some time, and on account of his position as one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence he was treated with great severity. Congress passed a resolution directing General Washington to inquire into the circumstance, remonstrate with General Howe, and ask whether he chooses this shall be the future rule for treating all such on both sides as the fortune of war may place in the hands of either party.

Mr. Stockton was shortly afterward exchanged, but the hardships he endured shattered his constitution, and when he found himself almost a beggar, through the vandalism of the British in destroying his estate and his library, and by the depreciation of the Continental paper currency, he was seized with a despondency from which he never recovered. He died on the 28th of February, 1781, in the fifty-first year of his age. Richard Stockton left a long line of descendants not less distinguished than himself in all that reflects honor and glory upon themselves, the State, and nation. His son Richard was also a lawyer of great eminence, who, besides serving his State in many high positions, represented the State of New Jersey in the lower House of Congress and also in the Senate of the United States. The second, Richard's son, Robert Field Stockton, studied at Princeton College, and before completing his course he entered the United States Navy as a midshipman.

His long and brilliant career as a naval officer is part of the history of the country. After the close of the Mexican war and the acquisition of California, in all of which he was a prominent actor, he resigned his commission in the Navy, and was elected to the United States Senate in 1851, but resigned in 1853 in order to retire to private life. Next in line of descent from Robert Field Stockton, better known as Commodore Stockton, comes John Potter Stockton, well known to many members of this Senate, having served long, ably, and faithfully as a member of this body. He has also filled with great credit to himself and satisfaction to the people of New Jersey almost every position of great trust and responsibility in the State, as well as representing the National Government in foreign lands.

It would be a delicate task to attempt to assign to General Kearny his exact rank, considering his opportunities, among those who have fought their country's battles in this and former centuries. There are laws of perspective in time as well as space, whereby a small eminence seems to outclimb the distant Alps, but history will inscribe in making up her final and impartial judgments to Philip Kearny a high place among the world's heroes, and differing only from them as one star differs from another star in glory. As a patriot, a public officer, and a soldier Philip Kearny was a grand example, worthy of study, imitation, and commemoration; as a general unsurpassed, wherever and whenever he was tried, for courage, fidelity, self-sacrificing energy, and ability. His glory is his country's glory, for which he fought and died. General Scott said of Kearny: "The bravest man I ever knew, and the most perfect soldier."

Though an American by birth, and intensely American in his sympathies, General Philip Kearny carried in his veins blood that distinguished the leading nations of Europe. On his father's side he was Irish, and thence he derived all the impulsive, danger-loving characteristics of that race. On his mother's side were two diverse elements not often combined in one person, the strong native sense of the Scot and the ardent soul and chivalric bearing of the Gaul. His very name in its original spelling in Celtic or Gælic signifies "soldier." Kearny was thus not only a soldier by name, but by nature, and a true inheritor not only of the designation but of the spirit of his race. In his veins the blood of the Cavalier predominated over that of the Puritan. His remote ancestry were distinguished in the military annals of the times in which they lived and served their country, and the career of Philip Kearny is even more glorious than theirs.

Philip Kearny was born on the 3d day of June, 1814, in the city of New York, but of New Jersey parentage and ancestry. In his early youth he evinced the military spirit which in after life crowned his career with such a halo of glory. He took high rank as a scholar and was beloved as a pupil. While still in college his grandfather, seeing his inclination for the Army, and not wishing him to be exposed to its vicissitudes, which had cost him the most brilliant of his sons, offered to secure to him $1,500 a year, a very handsome allowance in those days for a young man, if he would study for the ministry. Young Kearny declined his grandfather's liberal offer, preferring the saddle to the pulpit. As he was compelled, however, to choose a civil profession much against his will, he selected the law, taking the usual course in a law office.

The death of his grandfather in 1836 left young Kearny free at last to follow his own inclinations, and he applied for and obtained a commission as second lieutenant in the First United States Dragoons, then commanded by his uncle, General Steven Watts Kearny, an officer of high distinction.

Upon receipt of his commission, although by inheritance in possession of a splendid fortune, with all which that implies to a young man of his age and temperament, he abandoned all to join his command at Jefferson Barracks in Missouri, and applied himself with great ardor to mastering the details of his profession. His after life proved that with a man born with the genius to command experience is not so indispensable. Genius will always compensate for the want of experience. In proof of this witness the magnificent achievements of Frederick and Napoleon. In 1839 young Kearny, who had been promoted to be first lieutenant, was sent with two other officers to France, by the then Secretary of War, for the purpose of going through the regular course at the Royal School of Cavalry at Saumur, and who on their return were to compile a work on cavalry tactics, molded on that of the French system, but made suitable to the needs of our service. The result of their labors are the cavalry tactics now in use in the United States Army, which are considered superior to anything introduced.

While at Saumur, Kearny obtained a leave of absence and accompanied the Duke of Orleans on one or two of his campaigns in Africa. An old African trooper, speaking of Kearny, said, "He was a very brave man; I have often seen him charging the Arabs with his sword in one hand, his pistol in the other, and his reins in his teeth." In Algiers he learned the enormous capabilities of a well-trained force of light infantry. The lessons he there learned in practical warfare from the most advanced and accomplished soldiers of the age turned to his account in after years. Lieutenant Kearny returned from Europe in 1840, and served as aide-de-camp to General Macomb and Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott until April, 1844, when he joined his regiment at Fort Leavenworth, making an expedition against the Indians to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains. All this, however, to a real soldier like Kearny, was inactivity, and, chafing under the monotony of garrison-life after having tasted the excitement of actual service in Algiers, on the 2d day of April, 1846, he tendered his resignation, which was accepted on the 6th of that month. Had he dreamed that a war was upon us he would never have done so.

The war with Mexico, which soon after followed, aroused all the ardor of his patriotic soul. He sought to recall his resignation, applying to the Government to be restored to his former rank and position in the Army, and shortly afterward he was reinstated. He applied himself for a time to recruiting new material for his company, being determined that it should be a model troop in every respect, and to this end chose for his recruiting ground the city of Springfield, in the State of Illinois. Here he formed the acquaintance of Abraham Lincoln, afterward President Lincoln, then a resident lawyer of Springfield, who was touched by the enthusiasm of the young dragoon and entered heartily into his plans. The young lieutenant whom he assisted then was after Mr. Lincoln became President of the United States made a brigadier-general, one he always styled his general, and one whom he destined for the highest command had not an untimely shot put an end to the life of the man of his choice.

Kearny was not ordered into Mexican territory until after the capture of Monterey, and the fighting for the year was over. In the latter part of November, when General Scott determined to withdraw about five thousand troops from General Taylor for a new line of operations, his first selection was couched in the following words:

> You will * * * put in movement for the mouth of the Rio Grande the following troops. About five hundred regular cavalry of the first and second regiments of dragoons, including Lieutenant Kearny's troop.

In December following, Kearny was promoted to the captaincy of his company. He fought in all of the subsequent battles of that war, losing his left arm in the battle of Churubusco, and being the first to enter the city of Mexico.

In 1851 he was sent to subdue the Rogue River Indians, the most war-like of all of the Indian tribes of the Pacific coast. He awed the savages, pacified the district, and made the route safe between Oregon and California. Kearny was one of those restless spirits who could not brook repose, and whose only home was the field of battle. In October, 1851, he again tendered his resignation, and we next hear of him under the burning skies of Italy, acting as the aid of General Morris at the battle of Solferino, in which General Kearny so distinguished himself as to win a second time the cross of the Legion of Honor; the first American who had ever been thus honored for military services.

In 1859 and 1860 he resided in Paris, and was one of the efficient advocates of the union cause in Europe. In the spring of 1861, the crisis towards which all the great events of American history for many years had been tending broke in the roar of the cannon which opened on Fort Sumter, whose reverberations, like the hollow moan of an earthquake, stirred the very foundations of the iron and almost century-bound frame-work of our Government, till every thing heaved and rocked on its foundations. Our Declaration of Independence—the everlasting and immutable principles of human rights—were again to be battled for. No sooner had the tocsin of alarm resounded across the Atlantic than Kearny's patriotism, all aflame, responded to the appeal. "I am an American citizen" was his boast and his pride.

For his country he had braved death on every battle-field from Vera Cruz to Mexico, and at the hands of the hostile savages, and he again hastened to offer his sword and, if needs be, his life in defense of the cause of the unity of these States. Failing to secure immediate recognition from the General Government on his application for service and a command suited and due to his ability and experience, and acting under the advice of General Scott, he hastened back to his native State and applied for a major-general's commission, carrying with him a personal letter from General Scott to Governor Morgan, which reads as follows:

To his excellency Governor Morgan, of New York:

SIR: I beg leave to suggest Maj. Philip Kearny, of New York, late a distinguished officer of the Army, for a high commission in the New York Volunteers. Major Kearny's long and valuable experience in actual military service seems to commend him as a useful as well as a valuable commander and disciplinarian. He is among the bravest of the brave and of the highest military spirit and bearing.

With the highest respect, your excellency's most obedient servant,
WINFIELD SCOTT.

Refused a commission by Governor Morgan, rejected by the State where he was born and bred were reverses calculated to wound his proud and manly spirit. But his undying patriotism no longer stood upon rank or right, and he proclaimed his willingness to serve in any capacity, even offering himself as a private in the ranks—for which position he was disqualified by reason of the loss of an arm. Like a caged lion did the restless spirit of the patriot hero chafe at the delay, but his hour was soon to come. The battle of Bull Run satisfied the President that his one-armed applicant for a generalship was needed at the front. He was thereupon commissioned a brigadier-general on the 25th day of July, 1861, and assigned to the command of the First New Jersey Brigade, in Franklin's Division of the embryo Army of the Potomac.

This noble and gallant brigade, composed of the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Regiments, New Jersey Volunteers, asked that Kearny should command them. The history of the war shows that nothing was wanting in either men or leader. To recount the brilliant services of that famous brigade and its gallant commander during the year that followed would fill volumes. In March, 1862, General McClellan, then in command of the Army of the Potomac, tendered General Kearny the command of a division, a promotion to which he was long entitled. General Kearny was more than glad to accept, only desiring that his first New Jersey brigade, whose efficiency he had perfected with so much toil, expense, and zeal, a trust especially confided to him, and who loved and trusted their leader, should be permitted to follow him. This being denied, he generously declined the promotion and remained with his New Jersey brigade. The patriotic people of New Jersey exhibited their gratitude, admiration, and attachment for General Kearny's self-sacrificing devotion to them in the following manner.

On the 20th day of March, 1862, the Legislature passed a resolution declaring—

That New Jersey highly appreciates the distinguished fidelity of General Philip Kearny in declining proffered promotion rather than separate himself from the command of Jerseymen intrusted to him.

And on the 28th of the same month a set of resolutions were passed and forwarded to the honorable Secretary of War, asking that all the New Jersey troops on the Potomac be mobilized into one division and placed under the command of General Kearny.

Thus it was that General Kearny, born in New York and bound to her by all the ties of blood and parentage, became by adoption the child of New Jersey's love, and because of her appreciation and affectionate regard bound him to her with hooks of steel.

It is not my purpose here to speak of those great achievements which marked the footsteps of General Kearny from Alexandria to Williamsburgh, from Fair Oaks, including the seven days' battle, to Malvern Hill, and from thence to Chantilly, where he met his death on September 1, 1862, where passed from life to death one of the greatest military chieftains of the age. I need not speak of these events. Into the currents of our national history the heroic deeds of this great soldier have passed. His name history will never willingly permit to die.

The three distinguishing characteristics of General Philip Kearny were great personal bravery, coolness in the hour of peril, and an excellent judgment. It was his wonderful, almost marble-like calmness in the most sudden and extreme danger that struck even heroes with amazement. By the decision of an army of heroes he was called the "bravest of the brave." Such a distinction among the men and in the times he lived was not won by ordinary actions.

In the smoke and carnage of battle, when other men would become confused in the confusion around them, he remained cool and clear as ever, and was able frequently to redeem the day when everything seemed lost.

The overthrow of the enemy absorbed every thought within him and he had none to give to danger or to death.

Brave, restless, and daring, he roamed the world in search of adventure, and never seemed so much at home as when in danger.

His mind was always in a state of activity and he was lashed through the world by a nature to which repose seemed torture.

His career was bright and promising, and especially as the champion of liberty he seemed destined to one of the highest niches in the temple of fame. As the commander-in-chief of the Federal forces the war would have ended in a single year.

His death was in keeping with his life. One would expect him to die in the joyous frenzy of the fight, and that the spirit, which ever sought the whirlwind in life, should go out of the world in the smoke of battle. He died under fifty years of age. At an age when many of our generals began their careers he ended his.

New Jersey feels proud of her illustrious sons, and has caused statues in marble and bronze to be made representing as well as artists' skill can do the well-loved sons of that State, and asks Congress, in behalf of the American people, to accept them as theirs and place them with the immortal circle in the American pantheon, there to remain until they also turn to dust.

Mr. BLODGETT. Mr. President, it is obvious that I can add nothing to the careful and full historical sketch submitted by my colleague, whose long service in the Senate makes it his peculiar right and duty to demonstrate how well and faithfully the State of New Jersey has responded to the request of Congress for two statues of representative men in her history.

With such glorious names as Rev. Dr. John Witherspoon, president of Princeton College, who John Adams describes as a "son of liberty," and Bancroft "as a Scottish minister, a descendant of John Knox, a man of great ability, learning, and liberality," Jonah Dickinson Sergeant, William Patterson, Frederick Frelinghuysen, and many others, the selection was most difficult.

As New Jersey by reason of her location was the battle-ground of the Revolution, her citizens of necessity were tories or patriots; hence she could alone worthily fill every niche in the Temple of Fame set apart by Congress.

In the choice of Richard Stockton, the signer, and General Philip Kearny, the soldier, you have two patriots who gave up their lives to their country, the former from the effects of a cruel imprisonment endured to establish the Government, the other on the battle-field for its conservation.

This is far from the only claim that Richard Stockton has to live in marble in the national Capitol.

His patriotism and principles have in a remarkable degree descended to his family all through the generations to this day. His son Richard, the great lawyer, his grandson, Commodore Robert F. Stockton, and his great-grandson, John P. Stockton, have in turn served the country in the United States Senate. It may be added that the great-great-grandson of the signer and the son of John P. Stockton has lately discharged the duties of minister at The Hague.

Of Commodore Stockton it may be fairly said that his genius excelled any of the family. At Gibraltar, while in the Navy, he taught the British naval and military officers that American courage and honor could not be challenged with impunity. With a daring that was almost reckless he established the Republic of Liberia in the interest of the Colonization Society, and with an audacity that was his own he was the first to take possession of California.

There is probably no more notable example of what high and honorable service will contribute to the public weal than is displayed in the history of this family, nor a more marked reward and appreciation of such public service. It surely inculcates the lesson that he who best serves his country leaves the most valuable and enduring legacy to his descendants.

I make these few observations more than anything else to show my hearty concurrence in what has been so well said by my colleague.

I now move, Mr. President, the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. SHERMAN. To show that my objection to the modification of this resolution was not a captious one, I wish simply to refer to the precedents to show that the same form of resolution as the one introduced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is the one that has been adopted from the commencement of the acceptance of statues under the resolution of Congress. I have before me the Journal of January 5, 1886, in which the words are:

Resolved, That this work of art is accepted in the name of the nation, and assigned to a place in the old Hall of the House of Representatives.

I find among the very first of the resolutions of this character that were introduced one which was offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], which contains the same language:

Resolved, That this work of art is accepted in the name of the nation, etc.

I have no doubt that every resolution of acceptance is in the same form, and that that form is founded upon the express provision of the statute which provided for the accepting of two statues from each State, which is in these words:

The President is authorized to invite all the States to provide and furnish two statues * * * of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof, and illustrious for their historic renown, or for distinguished civic or military services, such as each State may deem to be worthy of this national commemoration.

I suppose the word "nation" has been carried into such resolutions from the statute.

I also find a still older precedent. I find that the words "nation" and "national" were constantly used by the early founders of the Government. I find a statute passed on the 29th of March, 1800, in honor of Captain Truxtun, in which the same word is used.

That the conduct of James Jarvis, a midshipman in said frigate, who gloriously preferred certain death to an abandonment of his post, is deserving of the highest praise, and that the loss of so promising an officer is a subject of national regret.

So the words "national" and "nation" in all documents, especially of this character, have been used from the beginning, and I hope will continue to the end.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, there is no doubt about these things being of a State character or of a national character and that could be expressed in various ways properly. The only criticism I made was that every act and every resolution that ever passed Congress, as far as I was aware—there may be some exceptions, for I do not know what has happened lately—is in this form, "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled," and when we pass a joint resolution the same language substantially is used, and I should think it very strange if the suggestion had been made, "Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the nation in Congress assembled." I suggested that it would be wise to follow the old form and not to throw a slur on the fact that this is still the United States. I care nothing about it, however.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to make an explanation. In draughting the resolution I followed what seemed to be the line of precedents. I did not notice at the time that the words "United States" would have been much better to use in that connection than the word employed in the resolution. But, as I say, having followed the line of precedents, though I am convinced a better term could have been employed, I withdraw the amendment I offered to the resolution, because I do not wish to raise any controversy on this occasion on the simple phraseology of the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no objection to the use of the word "nation" as expressed in the resolution under consideration. I take my constitutional law on that subject from a very great judge.

Mr. TELLER. We can not hear the Senator in this part of the Chamber.

Mr. GEORGE. I take my constitutional law on that subject from a great judge, Chief-Justice Taney, and I happen to have in my hand now a quotation from one of his great judgments which expresses my ideas exactly. He said, speaking of the scheme of the Constitution, that it was to make us "one people, with one common country, for all the great purposes for which it was established," (See Passenger Cases, 7 How., U. S. R., page 283.) So that, in my judgment, wherever the Constitution has granted any jurisdiction within that limit we are one people, with one country; and are, therefore, one nation. I stand upon this enunciation of constitutional law made by this illustrious judge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate agree to the resolutions which have been read.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, as in open executive session, resumes the consideration of the fisheries treaty, the question being on the motion to commit with instructions, offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GORMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BATE. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the pending treaty be committed to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with instructions either to frame and report such amendments thereto as shall appear meet to remove any ambiguities, and to remedy any defects of said treaty, if any there be; or

To frame and report a plan for arbitration by which all differences between the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain, in respect of the rights and liberties of the people of the United States, and of the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty respectively, in the North American fisheries under the treaty of 1818, shall be determined and settled, and by which it may be further determined and settled whether citizens of the United States engaged in the business of fishing on the eastern coast of British North America are or are not justly entitled to all the advantages and benefits of the mutual arrangements of 1830 and the mutual rights of transit under the treaty of 1871.

And by which it may be further determined and settled what, if any, damages, indemnity, or compensation may be due for the alleged unlawful treatment, detention, and seizures of the fishing vessels of citizens of the United States, and violation of rights and privileges of said citizens of the United States, under the treaties, arrangements, and conventions above recited.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the resolution to commit with instructions.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], but I understand an arrangement has been made whereby that pair is to be transferred. Therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER (when Mr. BOWEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea," and I understand he would vote "nay."

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FARWELL (when Mr. CULLOM'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CULLOM] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM. My pair has been transferred to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], who is absent.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If the Senator from Vermont were present, I should vote "yea," and I suppose he would vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON (when Mr. PADDOCK'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PADDOCK] is absent and is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I have been paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], who is sick, but that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. Therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], he being paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], and I being paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], that we transfer the pairs, and he and I can both record our votes, if agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. SABIN. Very well; I should be glad to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The votes of the Senators from Tennessee and Minnesota will be recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. I vote "yea."

Mr. SABIN. I vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY. I rise to announce that my colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Beck,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Vest,

So Mr. GIBSON'S resolution was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the treaty by articles will be continued.

The Secretary read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

The commission shall consist of two commissioners to be named by Her Britannic Majesty, and of two commissioners to be named by the President of the United States, without delay, after the exchange of ratifications of this treaty.

The commission shall meet and complete the delimitation as soon as possible thereafter.

In case of the death, absence, or incapacity of any commissioner, or in the event of any commissioner omitting or ceasing to act as such, the President of the United States or Her Britannic Majesty, respectively, shall forthwith name another person to act as commissioner instead of the commissioner originally named.

ARTICLE III.

The delimitation referred to in Article I of this treaty shall be marked upon British admiralty charts by a series of lines regularly numbered and duly described. The charts so marked shall, on the termination of the work of the commission, be signed by the commissioners in quadruplicate, one copy whereof shall be delivered to the Secretary of State of the United States and three copies to Her Majesty's Government. The delimitation shall be made in the following manner, and shall be accepted by both the high contracting parties as applicable for all purposes under Article I of the convention of October 20, 1818, between the United States and Great Britain.

The 3 marine miles mentioned in Article I of the convention of October 20, 1818, shall be measured seaward from low-water mark; but at every bay, creek, or harbor, not otherwise specially provided for in this treaty, such 3 marine miles shall be measured seaward from a straight line drawn across the bay, creek, or harbor, in the part nearest the entrance at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 marine miles.

ARTICLE IV.

At or near the following bays the limits of exclusion under Article I of the convention of October 20, 1818, at points more than 3 marine miles from low-water mark, shall be established by the following lines, namely:

At the Baie des Chaleurs the line from the light at Birch Point on Miscou Island to Macquereau Point light; at the Bay of Miramichi, the line from the light at Point Escuminac to the light on the eastern point of Tabisintac Gully; at Egmont Bay, in Prince Edward Island, the line from the light at Cape Egmont to the light at West Point; and off St. Ann's Bay, in the Province of Nova Scotia, the line from Cape Smoke to the light at Point Aconi.

At Fortune Bay, in Newfoundland, the line from Connaigre Head to the light on the southeasterly end of Brunet Island, thence to Fortune Head; at Sir Charles Hamilton Sound, the line from the southeast point of Cape Fogo to White Island, thence to the north end of Peckford Island, and from the south end of Peckford Island to the east headland of Ragged Harbor.

At or near the following bays the limits of exclusion shall be 3 marine miles seaward from the following lines, namely:

At or near Barrington Bay, in Nova Scotia, the line from the light on Stoddard Island to the light on the south point of Cape Sable, thence to the light at Baccaro Point; at Chedabucto and St. Peter's Bays, the line from Cranberry Island Light to Green Island Light, thence to Point Rouge; at Mira Bay, the line from the light on the east point of Scatari Island to the northeasterly point of Cape Morien; and at Placentia Bay, in Newfoundland, the line from Latine Point, on the eastern mainland shore, to the most southerly point of Red Island, thence by the most southerly point of Merasheen Island to the mainland.

Long Island and Bryer Island, at St. Mary's Bay, in Nova Scotia, shall, for the purpose of delimitation, be taken as the coasts of such bay.

ARTICLE V.

Nothing in this treaty shall be construed to include within the common waters any such interior portions of any bays, creeks, or harbors as can not be reached from the sea without passing within the 3 marine miles mentioned in Article I of the convention of October 20, 1818.

ARTICLE VI.

The commissioners shall from time to time report to each of the high contracting parties, such lines as they may have agreed upon, numbered, described, and marked as herein provided, with quadruplicate charts thereof; which lines so reported shall forthwith from time to time be simultaneously proclaimed by the high contracting parties, and be binding after two months from such proclamation.

ARTICLE VII.

Any disagreement of the commissioners shall forthwith be referred to an umpire selected by the Secretary of State of the United States and Her Britannic Majesty's minister at Washington; and his decision shall be final.

ARTICLE VIII.

Each of the high contracting parties shall pay its own commissioners and officers. All other expenses jointly incurred, in connection with the performance of the work, including compensation to the umpire, shall be paid by the high contracting parties in equal moieties.

ARTICLE IX.

Nothing in this treaty shall interrupt or effect the free navigation of the Strait of Canso by fishing vessels of the United States.

ARTICLE X.

United States fishing vessels entering the bays or harbors referred to in Article I of this treaty shall conform to harbor regulations common to them and to fishing vessels of Canada or of Newfoundland.

They need not report, enter, or clear, when putting into such bays or harbors for shelter or repairing damages, nor when putting into same, outside the limits of established ports of entry, for the purpose of purchasing wood or of obtaining water; except that any such vessel remaining more than twenty-four hours, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, within any such port, or communicating with the shore therein, may be required to report, enter, or clear; and no vessel shall be excused hereby from giving due information to boarding officers.

They shall not be liable in any such bays or harbors for compulsory pilotage, nor when therein for the purpose of shelter, of repairing damages, of purchasing wood, or of obtaining water shall they be liable for harbor dues, tonnage dues, buoy dues, light dues, or other similar dues; but this enumeration shall not permit other charges inconsistent with the enjoyment of the liberties reserved or secured by the convention of October 20, 1818.

ARTICLE XI.

United States fishing vessels entering the ports, bays, and harbors of the eastern and northeastern coasts of Canada, or of the coasts of Newfoundland, under stress of weather or other casualty may unload, reload, transship, or sell, subject to customs laws and regulations, all fish on board, when such unloading, transshipment, or sale is made necessary as incidental to repairs, and may replenish outfits, provisions, and supplies damaged or lost by disaster, and in case of death or sickness shall be allowed all needful facilities, including the shipping of crews.

Licenses to purchase in established ports of entry of the aforesaid coasts of Canada or of Newfoundland, for the homeward voyage, such provisions and supplies as are ordinarily sold to trading vessels, shall be granted to United States fishing vessels in such ports, promptly upon application and without charge; and such vessels, having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid, shall also be accorded upon all occasions such facilities for the purchase of casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to the trading vessels; but such provisions or supplies shall not be obtained by barter nor purchased for resale or traffic.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware proposes to amend the eleventh article of the treaty.

Mr. GRAY. I had indicated yesterday the general nature of the amendment which I proposed to offer to-day. Since then I have drawn out at length the amendment that I wish to offer. I do not propose at all to abuse the agreement which has been made in regard to debate on this subject, but merely to say that inasmuch as——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can proceed only by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAY. I wish to say three words, that my object in offering the amendment may be apparent. Inasmuch as there is what seems to be a sincere difference of opinion as to——

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to object to debate.

Mr. GRAY. I am not debating.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to object.

Mr. GRAY. I was proceeding to state——

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to anything in the nature of debate.

Mr. GRAY. As to what this Article XI really means.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware will pause one moment. Under the agreement and the rule of the Senate the Chair thinks that the Senator from Delaware would be strictly limited to the presentation of the amendment which he proposes. Any statement of the effect or object or purpose of the amendment would be in the nature of debate, and therefore excluded by the agreement.

The Chair asked whether there were objections to the Senator from Delaware proceeding, and the Senator from New Hampshire stated that he objected to anything in the nature of debate.

Mr. GRAY. Then I send the amendment to the Secretary's desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed to Article XI by the Senator from Delaware will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend Article XI, by striking out all after the word "charge," in line 159, down to and including the word "aforesaid," in line 160, and inserting in lieu thereof:

And all United States fishing vessels shall also be accorded upon all occasions such facilities for the purchase of casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to the trading vessels of the United States upon obtaining licenses for this purpose, which shall be granted to all United States fishing vessels upon application, promptly and without charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FARWELL (when Mr. CULLOM'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CULLOM] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I announce the pair of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I record my vote "yea."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], but I understand that my pair has been transferred to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY (when Mr. SAULSBURY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired, as I have heretofore announced, with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay," I understand.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bate,	Coke,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Ransom,
Berry,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Vest,
Blodgett,	George,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—30.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,
Allison,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Blair,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Chace,	Hale,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Plumb,	Teller,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Quay,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Hoar,	Sabin,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—18.

Bowen,	Davis,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Butler,	Eustis,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Call,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Vance.
Cameron,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Cullom,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,

So Mr. GRAY'S amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will continue the reading of the treaty by articles.

The Secretary read as follows:

ARTICLE XII.

Fishing vessels of Canada and Newfoundland shall have on the Atlantic coast of the United States all the privileges reserved and secured by this treaty to United States fishing vessels in the aforesaid waters of Canada and Newfoundland.

ARTICLE XIII.

The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall make regulations providing for the conspicuous exhibition, by every United States fishing vessel, of its official number on each bow; and any such vessel, required by law to have an official number, and failing to comply with such regulations, shall not be entitled to the licenses provided for in this treaty.

Such regulations shall be communicated to Her Majesty's Government previously to their taking effect.

ARTICLE XIV.

The penalties for unlawfully fishing in the waters, bays, creeks, and harbors, referred to in Article I of this treaty, may extend to forfeiture of the boat or vessel, and appurtenances, and also of the supplies and cargo aboard when the offense was committed; and for preparing in such waters to unlawfully fish therein, penalties shall be fixed by the court, not to exceed those for unlawfully fishing; and for any other violation of the laws of Great Britain, Canada, or Newfoundland relating to the right of fishery in such waters, bays, creeks, or harbors, penalties shall be fixed by the court, not exceeding in all $3 for every ton of the boat or vessel concerned. The boat or vessel may be holden for such penalties and forfeitures.

The proceedings shall be summary and as inexpensive as practicable. The trial (except on appeal) shall be at the place of detention, unless the judge shall, on request of the defense order, it to be held at some other place adjudged by him more convenient. Security for costs shall not be required of the defense, except when bail is offered. Reasonable bail shall be accepted. There shall be proper appeals available to the defense only; and the evidence at the trial may be used on appeal.

Judgments of forfeiture shall be reviewed by the governor-general of Canada in council, or the governor in council of Newfoundland, before the same are executed.

ARTICLE XV.

Whenever the United States shall remove the duty from fish-oil, whale-oil, seal-oil, and fish of all kinds (except fish preserved in oil), being the produce of fisheries carried on by the fishermen of Canada and Newfoundland, including Labrador, as well as from the usual and necessary casks, barrels, kegs, cans, and other usual and necessary coverings containing the products above mentioned, the like products, being the produce of fisheries carried on by the fishermen of the United States, as well as the usual and necessary coverings of the same, as above described, shall be admitted free of duty into the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland.

And upon such removal of duties, and while the aforesaid articles are allowed to be brought into the United States by British subjects, without duty being re-imposed thereon, the privilege of entering the ports, bays, and harbors of the aforesaid coasts of Canada and Newfoundland shall be accorded to United States fishing vessels by annual licenses, free of charge, for the following purposes, namely:

1. The purchase of provisions, bait, ice, seines, lines, and all other supplies and outfits.
2. Transshipment of catch, for transport by any means of conveyance.
3. Shipping of crews.

Supplies may not be obtained by barter, but bait may be so obtained.

The like privileges shall be continued or given to fishing vessels of Canada and of Newfoundland on the Atlantic coast of the United States.

ARTICLE XVI.

This treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and by Her Britannic Majesty, having received the assent of the Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of Newfoundland; and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.

In faith whereof, we, the respective plenipotentiaries, have signed this treaty, and have hereunto affixed our seals.

Done in duplicate, at Washington, this 15th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1888.

JAMES B. ANGELL.	[SEAL.]
J. CHAMBERLAIN.	[SEAL.]
L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.	[SEAL.]
CHARLES TUPPER.	[SEAL.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the treaty as in Committee of the Whole? If there are none, it will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the resolution of ratification be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The treaty is still open to amendment in the Senate. If there be no amendment in the Senate, the resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may now be acted upon.

Mr. FRYE. That was agreed to before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification was included, the Chair thinks, in the original agreement.

Mr. HARRIS. Under the rule it requires unanimous consent to consider it the same day on which it was reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the same day on which it is proposed. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification which has just been read.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays will be entered upon the Journal.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FARWELL (when Mr. CULLOM'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CULLOM] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Being paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], I have arranged with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] that I transfer that pair to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], with whom the Senator from Minnesota has been paired, and I therefore announce the pair. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] would vote "yea," if here, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] would vote "nay." I record my vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). As I stated before, I was paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and he would vote "nay" while I would vote "yea" as to this treaty, but my pair has been transferred to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], and I vote "yea."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], but the pair has been transferred to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and myself were paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] on the vote on the resolution of ratification. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], as the Senator from Tennessee has transferred his to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], and I vote "yea."

Mr. GRAY. I rise to announce that my colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. I announce the pair between my colleague [Mr. PADDOCK] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Bate,	Coke,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Ransom,

Cullom,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The requisite number not having voted therefor, the resolution of ratification is not agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the President of the United States be notified of the action of the Senate upon this treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered under the rules.

Mr. HOAR. It requires no order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair awaits the pleasure of the Senate about longer continuance in open executive session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose that order has exhausted itself.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senate will proceed to the consideration of legislative business. The Chair lays before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 12) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Pending that I desire to present morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will receive morning business.

Mr. MITCHELL. When the Senate went into open executive session it had under consideration the report of the committee of conference on House bill 1761. I ask that that be proceeded with now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the consideration of the conference report will be continued.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is in order, but the Chair will receive morning business, if there be no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield for morning business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3304) to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of the counsel of the Thomson Houston Electric Company, of Boston, Mass., in which they say they have a principal place of business at Boston, and a manufacturing establishment at Lynn, Mass., where they employ some fifteen hundred hands in addition to a large number of persons who are employed in construction all over the country; that they have recently contracted with the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, a street-railroad corporation in the District of Columbia, to furnish said company with electrical apparatus complete and necessary to furnish all needed motive power for the construction of its road; that the apparatus which is proposed to be furnished is absolutely safe and incapable of destroying human life or inflicting any serious injury on the human body; that the charge of electricity which it is to contain is not to exceed 400 volts or electric units; that the electrical apparatus and wires, including the wire for conducting the electricity, have been furnished by them to various corporations in various parts of the United States and other portions of the world; that the managers of the petitioning company and persons in their employ and other persons are in the habit of frequently handling such wires when fully charged without the slightest injury; that a much more powerful charge of electricity than is ever used in that apparatus would be absolutely harmless to human life or health; that the interference by the authority of the Senate with the execution of that contract would not only cause them damage and loss in the particular instance referred to, but if it is put on the ground that their apparatus is dangerous, it is likely to be a serious injury to their business elsewhere in the country and all over the world.

They state that they are ready to prove all the facts herein alleged to the satisfaction of the Senate. They therefore pray that your honorable body will cause the facts herein set forth and all other allegations which shall be made before them bearing upon the subject-matter of the petition to be promptly investigated by some committee. To these statements the young gentlemen, who are the creators and managers and principally interested in this matter and who are commended to me as citizens of high character and intelligence, make affidavit.

I move that this petition be committed to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to grant the petitioners the hearing they pray for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be received and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not know why every petition or every resolution that is to be sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia should be accompanied by instructions from the Senate. That committee will give, without being formally instructed by the Senate, a proper hearing to whatever interest is entitled to it.

Mr. HOAR. This is a prayer for a hearing, and therefore it is not an ordinary bill or resolution. It is the prayer of these gentlemen for a hearing, and therefore it seemed appropriate that this course should be taken without any disrespect to the committee, so that some committee should be designated with instructions to grant the hearing. Of course the Committee on the District of Columbia is the proper committee to take charge of this subject.

Mr. SPOONER. It properly goes to that committee, but that committee has always granted on proper occasions hearings without any instruction of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the instructions added to the motion to refer?

Mr. HOAR. I think that would be the proper way, if the Senate has no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5059) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Watertown, in the State of New York, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3389) to erect a public building at Yonkers, N. Y., reported it with amendments.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10017) granting a pension to Samuel Anderson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 78) appropriating $100,000 for the prevention and extirpation of yellow fever in the United States, reported adversely thereon; and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 102) appropriating $200,000 to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CALL. I ask the consent of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to consider at this time the joint resolution just reported by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the Senator from Florida that the conference report in my charge has been read and I think the Senate is ready to vote on it. It will take but a moment.

Mr. CALL. I give notice then that as soon as that is terminated, I shall ask the consent of the Senate for the consideration of the joint resolution reported by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. STEWART. I will state to the Senator from Florida that I desire to rise to a question of personal privilege as soon as the conference report is acted on.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 3466) granting a pension to Catharine Flicke; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3467) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. PLATT. I introduce a bill, and I wish to say in a word what the bill is. It is a bill simply to pension the widows of soldiers without reference to the cause of the death of the soldier provided they were married during the service of the soldier, and I commend it to the attention of the Committee on Pensions. It is a single feature relating to pensions, which, it seems to me, Congress ought to adopt. When we incorporate in a bill a number of features relating to pension legislation, and it goes over to the other wing of the Capitol, it sleeps the sleep of death in that legislative cemetery. It is possible that a single measure of this manifest justice, if passed here by itself, might be considered and become a law.

The bill (S. 3468) relating to the pensions of widows was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3469) granting a pension to Elizabeth T. McRitchie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 3470) to remove the political disabilities of Henry A. Ramsay; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3471) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville Southern Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3472) to authorize the Union Gas Company to lay conduit pipes across the Ohio River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3473) for the relief of the Thingvalla Line; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2962) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VANCE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL and Mr. MCPHERSON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the fortification appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF THE THINGVALLA LINE.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the claim of the Thingvalla Line, a bill to pay which is now pending for "head money" paid by said parties, for the sum of $1,177.50 be, and the same is hereby, referred to the United States Court of Claims, to be heard under section 14 of the act approved March 3, 1887.

PRINTING OF A MEMORIAL.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I move that the memorial of James R. Haskell, relating to armament of fortifications and the use of dynamite projectiles in multi-charge guns, referred to the Committee on Appropriations on the 1st of August, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

REVENUE-CUTTER THOMAS CORWIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 1761) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, for money advanced the Oregon Iron Works, the contractor in building the United States revenue-cutter Thomas Corwin, which has been read. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the report?

The report was concurred in.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEWART. I rise to a question of privilege, and send to the Secretary's desk a copy of the New York Herald of August 20, and ask the Secretary to read first what is marked on page 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the extract indicated, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

A DUTY FOR SENATOR STEWART.

Our Washington correspondent tells us that during a debate on the sundry civil bill Senator STEWART, of Nevada, offered an amendment, apparently formal, which was passed. Innocent on its face, it now appears from a statement of Land Commissioner Stockslager that it was in the interest of mining corporations—that its effect would be to invite a complete denudation of the public timber. The Land Commissioner has communicated these objections to Congressman BURNES, of Missouri, who will be expected to defeat the amendment in the House.

The Land Commissioner apparently has done a wise and proper thing. But he has either done Senator STEWART a great wrong or that Senator has deceived the Senate. To impose upon his fellow Senators, under the pretense that it was "formal" matter, an amendment of so grave an import, depriving the people of their rights and in the interest of a rapacious corporation, is the gravest possible violation of duty and honor. Senator STEWART should not rest under this imputation, but should meet it in the open Senate, and show that his amendment was as innocent as he claimed it to be.

Mr. STEWART. I will now ask the Secretary to read the telegraphic dispatch contained on the eighth page of that paper, which is the basis of the editorial.

The Secretary read as follows:

A NIGGER IN THE WOODPILE—PROPOSED LEGISLATION THAT THREATENS THE PUBLIC TIMBER LANDS.

[By telegraph to the Herald.]

HERALD BUREAU, CORNER FIFTEENTH AND G STREETS, N. W.,
Washington, August 19, 1888.

Senator STEWART offered an amendment to the sundry civil bill a few days ago, which the Senate adopted under the impression, apparently, that it was little more than formal. The amendment provided "that no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used in the investigation of any case, or the prosecution of any person in the mining regions of the United States for cutting for mining or domestic purposes dwarfed or scrubby timber unfit to be sawed into lumber of commercial value."

Land Commissioner Stockslager, who usually knows what he is talking about, said to-day to the Herald correspondent that in his judgment the amendment is extremely impolitic and prejudicial to the welfare of the residents of the Western country and to the interests of the country at large. If allowed to become a law it will, he says, open the way to a complete denudation of the public timber lands, and thereby result not only in depriving the settlers upon the public domain of the timber legitimately needed for their mining claims, farms, and ranches, but also in irretrievable injury to the soil and climate in all the mining sections of the public domain.

IN THE INTEREST OF RICH CORPORATIONS.

"The proposed legislation," says Mr. Stockslager, "is purely in the interest of large and wealthy mining corporations, foreign as well as native, and also in the interest of railroad corporations who have in many portions of the country monopolized the cord-wood cutting and charcoal industries. I am warranted in stating that it originated in the desire to prevent the prosecution of anticipated suits which have since been ordered, upon the recommendation of this office, against the Richmond Mining Company and the Eureka Consolidated Mining Company, owning mines in Nevada, for the recovery of $9,517,461. The total value of wood and charcoal derived from timber cut by and for these companies upon the public lands aggregate, 1,305,964 cords of wood, from a portion of which were derived 28,704,662 bushels of charcoal.

TIMBER LANDS DENUDED.

"These two companies alone have literally laid bare the hills, mountain ranges, and canyons within a radius of 35 miles from Eureka, not sparing the undergrowth, but taking everything from 3 inches and upward, not simply 'dwarfed and scrubby timbers,' but mahogany, cedar, and pine trees. Even the stumps of the trees have been removed. These depredations are rendered the more aggravating by the fact that the Richmond Mining Company is exclusively a foreign and British corporation, organized in London, England, having for its manager an alien, who is a British nobleman connected with the Duke of Northumberland.

"I am convinced that the effect of the proposed legislation will be inimical to the public interests involved in the preservation of the public lands and protection of the timber thereon in every State and Territory where there are mining lands and mines already opened, and will be a great injustice and hardship to the large class of honest, thrifty, and hard-working settlers endeavoring to make homes for themselves and posterity, and who, in order to enable them to remain and work out their laudable purpose, must have the timber, of however inferior character, saved to them for fuel and other domestic necessities."

Mr. Stockslager will send a letter embodying his views to Congressman BURNES, of Missouri, who has charge of the bill in the House, and the House will probably refuse to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the amendment to which reference is made in the extracts which have been read was offered by me in the Senate to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and reported by that committee. It reads as follows:

That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used in the investigation of any case or the prosecution of any person in the mining region of the United States for cutting, for mining or domestic purposes, dwarfed or scrubby timber unfit to be sawed or hewed into lumber of commercial value.

This was offered as a limitation upon the vast appropriation contained in the bill for lawsuits, spies, and detectives to harass and persecute all the people in the West who are endeavoring to make homes upon the public land, the innocent as well as the guilty. The following items are in the bill for that purpose:

Protecting public lands: For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $100,000.

Expenses of hearings in land entries: For expenses of hearings held by order of the General Land Office, to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law, $30,000.

Settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: For salaries and expenses of agents employed in adjusting claims for swamp-lands, and for indemnity for swamp lands, $20,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this and the appropriations for "Depredation on public timber" and "Protecting public lands," while traveling on duty, shall be allowed per diem, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual necessary expenses for transportation.

Then there is an appropriation of $100,000 for surveys, with a provision that $20,000 shall be used for various investigations, making with other items in this bill for investigating the wrong-doings of the people of the West about $350,000.

The system adopted, and which has grown up, I suppose, is more abominable in character—I speak of the system—than anything ever heretofore done in the United States. The idea of having a system costing $350,000 a year for the purpose of sending spies into the country and trying men without a hearing! The Western country is infested by innumerable spies. They make their investigations and they make their reports secretly. They are not called upon to make them in the open daylight, but they send them to the Department and their names are concealed, and there is plenty of time, and rarely a lack of opportunity, after they have made the investigation for those who are really guilty to buy their peace; and it is the universal testimony of all my correspondents that the rogues buy their peace and the innocent settlers are persecuted, so that no settlement can be made there.

The whole appropriation of this vast sum for this mode of persecuting the people of that country is abominable. I did not attack this system; but I thought I would save my people from special persecution. It is alleged in the article which has been read that I offered this amendment on account of some investigation started by the Department here against rich corporations. The statement is unqualifiedly false. That was not the motive; it did not come from that.

For nearly the last forty years the miners have been permitted to cut this scrub timber, and there was no other way to mine without this timber. Those crags and peaks from which they got it were not in the market, and could not be brought into market. There was no way of mining at all without it. It has been recognized as right and proper from the very beginning. Nobody ever regarded the scrub timber in these interior Territories as timber to be protected by law, and it was regarded as legitimate and proper for the miners to take it and develop that country; and in doing that on their account they have poured into the Treasury of this country hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars by their hard toil; and now it is proposed to go back and prosecute them as criminals.

There is not in my State east of the Sierra Nevada Mountains an acre of legitimate timber land but there are scattered pines, cedar, and manzanita bushes, sometimes called mahogany, in the clefts of the rocks that poor men get and sell to miners. It is all used, not wasted. It is stated that they dig up the stumps. Yes, they do, because it is absolutely essential to have timber to mine at all, and by it the mining companies have produced millions of dollars to the Treasury. It is true that one of the companies mentioned in the articles read is a foreign corporation; and Mr. Probert, its manager, is denounced, though not by name. Although he and I have not been on good relations—I have been employed as an attorney against his company—I must say of him that he has been an enterprising man and has been concerned in many new processes for the working of mines that have been of vast benefit to my State, and the attack on him is entirely unjustifiable.

In order that my motives in acting in this matter may be known, I will call attention to some correspondence that I had early in the session with regard to the question. I send to the Clerk's desk a letter to me from a gentleman who is highly respected in my State. He is a Democrat and I am only going to have Democratic evidence read. Democratic evidence is good enough for me. The Democrats are my constituents and my friends, the same as the Republicans, and as citizens I rely on them as much as I do on Republicans, and represent them all the same.

Although I have many letters from Republicans upon this subject, and although the Republican newspapers have commented upon it at length, I shall confine myself to Democratic evidence; but will print in my remarks a very able and pertinent letter from one Republican, Hon. Thomas Wren, to the Eureka Sentinel, an ex-member of Congress from Nevada. I send to the desk a letter to me from J. H. MacMillan, an attorney and counselor-at-law, of Winnemucca, Nev. Mr. MacMillan was the last Democratic candidate for Congress, and was beaten not because he was not a good man but because there were more Republican votes than there were Democratic votes in the State at that time. My attention was first called by the letter I send to the desk to the fact that there had been inaugurated a new policy and that a persecution had been commenced which had never been heard of or dreamed of before in that region.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The letter will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

WINNEMUCCA, NEV., February 28, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The United States attorney for Nevada has brought criminal actions against six Italians for cutting wood in Bullion mining district, Lander County, all of which wood was used for mining and milling purposes. I do not think any crime has been committed, and the mining companies are very indignant and say, very truly, all the mining industries of Eastern Nevada will be paralyzed if such a construction can be placed on the act of Congress of June 3, 1878.

What I desire of you is to send me decisions, instructions, and regulations of the General Land Office from Secretary Teller's time down to the present. Mr. Teller wrote a very able letter of instruction to Commissioner McFarland, interpreting the act in question, and which shows clearly that the defendants are guilty of no crime whatever.

You may hear further from me on this subject at an early day.

Yours, truly,

J. H. MACMILLAN.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEWART. I replied to that letter and commented upon the statute. I told Mr. MacMillan the uniform construction of the statute had been that the cutting of timber in the mining region of the character that these Italians were cutting was lawful. That the Senate may judge of the statute I shall read it again:

That all citizens of the United States and other persons, bona fide residents of the State of Colorado, or Nevada, or either of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, and all other mineral districts of the United States, shall be, and are hereby, authorized and permitted to fell and remove, for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, any timber or other trees growing or being on the public lands, said lands being mineral, and not subject to entry under existing laws of the United States, except for mineral entry, in either of said States, Territories, or districts of which such citizens or persons may be at the time bona fide residents, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of the timber and of the undergrowth growing upon such lands, and for other purposes: Provided, The provisions of this act shall not extend to railroad corporations.

This law has been uniformly regarded as a sufficient warrant for cutting what was necessary for mining purposes of this scrubby timber in the mining region. I wrote to Mr. MacMillan my view upon it, and shortly thereafter I received another letter from him, which I send to the desk and ask to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

WINNEMUCCA, NEV., April 11, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 3d instant received and noted, for which many thanks. The defendants in the wood chopping cases were tried before Judge Sabine on the 2d instant, and were acquitted on the grounds that the proof failed to show they had been guilty of cutting any timber under 8 inches in diameter.

The judge declared the law to be that no timber of less than 8 inches in diameter of any kind can be cut without committing a misdemeanor under the United States laws. This is going to work a great hardship to miners, as the scrub cedar, nut pine, and mountain mahogany which grow on our mountain tops, very seldom get to be of that diameter and are entirely useless except for fire-wood, and should be taken out of the provisions of the act of June 3, 1878.

Thanking you for your courtesy, I remain, yours, truly,

J. H. MACMILLAN.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
Washington D. C.

Mr. STEWART. In reply to that I stated to Mr. MacMillan that at the first opportunity I would offer an amendment making the law plain and prevent these vexatious prosecutions. To carry out my promise I offered and had adopted the amendment in question. After the amendment was adopted I received another letter from Mr. MacMillan, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

WINNEMUCCA, NEV., August 14, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Yours of 7th instant in relation to the "wood chopping" matter received and noted. I desire to thank you on my own account and on that of every miner and mill man in Eastern Nevada.

I can not let this opportunity pass without saying that the State of Nevada has in you a representative, of whom all her citizens, without distinction of party, can feel proud.

Yours, truly,

J. H. MACMILLAN.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEWART. The following is the letter of ex-Congressman Wren to which I referred, published in the Eureka Sentinel of August 11:

MR. WREN'S OPINION REGARDING THE ALLEGED UNLAWFUL CUTTING OF GOVERNMENT TIMBER.

EDITOR SENTINEL: For some weeks past our community has been somewhat exercised over the report of a timber agent sent out here to spy out timber depredations, and his ridiculously absurd report that our two principal mining companies had purchased and were liable for wood cut upon the public land valued at several millions of dollars. Many, no doubt, have been at a loss to understand how it happened that a timber agent was sent here at all.

A reference to section 4751 of the Revised Statutes of the United States reads as follows:

"All penalties and forfeitures under the provisions of sections 2461, 2462, and 2463, title 'The Public Lands,' shall be sued for, recovered, distributed, and accounted for under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, and shall be paid over, one-half to the informers, if any, or captors when seized," etc.

Sections 2461, 2462, and 2463 relate to cutting timber upon the public domain, fixing the penalties, etc. One-half of all these millions to be recovered from our mining companies goes to the informer or informers.

Who is the happy informer, or the happy informers? What lucky dog living amongst us is the prospective millionaire. Can any one guess? What fun it is to be the fortunate fellow, no doubt, but it will be rough on the companies to have to pay all of these millions.

But compelling the mining companies to pay all these millions is only the beginning of the end. Every one who has burned a cord of wood in Eureka is equally liable, if the Commissioner of the Land Office be correct in regard to the law. In fact, so far-reaching is this new departure that nearly every mining company that has operated in this State for the last thirty years is liable to the Government for the wood they have used, as well as most of the citizens of every town in the State.

There are partial exceptions along the east base of the Sierras, and not elsewhere. Why not go a step further and commence action against every company and individual who extracted gold and silver from the public domain prior to the passage of the law of 1866. They are equally liable. The original license to cut timber from the public mineral lands of the United States dates from the same period, 1848, that the license to extract the precious metals dates from and was coequal in every respect with it.

In 1866 the license to extract the precious metals from the public lands, and to appropriate water thereon, was crystallized into law. The license to take timber was not mentioned, but continued as theretofore until 1878, during the administration of President Hayes, when Carl Schurz, then Secretary of the Interior, seized through his timber agents, in the dead of winter, all of the wood in Helena, Mont., and peddled it out to the freezing citizens for a dollar a cord. For this act he was denounced in the Senate by one of the foremost of American statesmen, and a law was immediately passed to cover all such cases and prevent future troubles.

But notwithstanding, under some strained construction of the law, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, reversing the policy of the Government, a policy settled when Ewing was at the head of the Interior Department, and Clay, Webster, Calhoun and their cotemporaries were in Congress, after able and exhaustive discussion, now proposes to prosecute criminally as well as civilly all parties who have cut the scrubby pine and cedar from our mountain sides for domestic use. I am sure the Secretary has been misinformed in regard to the real facts or he never would have entertained the idea, and some one in our midst is responsible for the misinformation.

Senator STEWART has already taken steps to stop this something worse than folly, and with fair hopes of success.

Yours, etc.,

THOMAS WREN.

Mr. STEWART. I shall now read some extracts from the three leading Democratic papers in my State. The Silver State, published at Winnemucca, Nev., a Democratic paper, in commenting upon the act of June 3, 1878, says:

As milling is a necessary adjunct to mining, the act authorizes the felling and removal of wood from the public domain for fuel or reduction works, as well as for domestic purposes. As miners, millmen, and householders can not go into the mountains to cut such timber as they may need, the custom has been to purchase the wood of men who make a business of chopping and hauling it to mining camps and settlements. If this custom is a violation of the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior as provided in the act, it is somewhat remarkable that the Federal officials have not before now discovered it. Any other construction of the act than that given it by custom would stop mining in Central and Eastern Nevada and deprive the citizens of towns and villages of the means of cooking their food.

I have here an extract from the Elko Independent, a Democratic paper, of February 27, 1888. The heading shows what it is. I ask the Secretary to read the two extracts which I send to the desk.

Mr. BECK. I did not quite understand how this matter came up.

Mr. STEWART. As a question of privilege.

Mr. BECK. As a matter of personal privilege?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BECK. Upon the complaint made in regard to the letter written by Mr. Stockslager, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to the committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STEWART. I have not seen that. If you will look at the New York Herald you will see the article upon which I am speaking.

Mr. BECK. The House, I understand, has disagreed to the amendment of the Senate, and that is right.

Mr. STEWART. If you will wait a little until I get through with my statement, I should like to have the letter read.

Mr. BECK. I was about to read the letter now.

Mr. STEWART. Not right in the middle of my remarks. Let me have these extracts read.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon. Go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The extracts will be read as requested, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Elko Independent, a Democratic paper, of February 27, 1888.]

OUR TIMBER THIEVES.

"Were we to hear of 'timber thieves' being arrested in that part of Nevada which runs up on to the Sierra Nevada Mountains we might believe that the arrested persons had been stealing timber, but when we learn that men have been arrested for stealing timber in Lander we wonder where they found the timber. In this State it seems to be difficult to say where brush ends and timber begins. That which is called timber appears to be almost anything from a greasewood bush to a stately sugar pine. In Kansas, in the early days, three mullein stalks and a hazel bush constituted a grove, and it would seem that in Nevada all arboral growth of the length of a stick of cord-wood is called timber."

The above from the Virginia Enterprise is brief and to the point, as Nevada is practically destitute of timber as contemplated by the United States statutes which forbid the destruction of timber on Government lands. We have in the mountains, it is true, a limited amount of scrubby pine, groves of mahogany which at a little distance look like old apple orchards, and an occasional grove of stunted cedars which, with much labor and expense, serve to furnish fuel for the furnaces at the various mines and for general consumption, posts for fencing and "timbers" for numerous mining properties, all of which is taken from Government land which no one would ever think of purchasing as "timber lands" even at $1.25 per acre.

But suppose this "timber act" were construed as applying to the scraggy growth found upon the mountains of Eastern Nevada and persons prohibited from using it; the result would be that the furnaces at Tuscarora, at Bullion, and other places would have to shut down, mining would necessarily be suspended, ranchmen would have to abandon fencing, the people would be deprived of fuel, and the consequences would be disastrous to every industry in our State.

The law is intended to protect forests of valuable timber, and as such it is a good one and should be enforced; but the attempt to apply its provisions to the greasewood, sage-brush, etc., of Eastern Nevada is a farce, and we trust that the authorities will take a proper view of the matter and abandon the prosecution of "Nevada timber thieves," proceedings against whom were evidently instituted for selfish motives by persons who expected to be pecuniarily benefited by their arrest and conviction.

[From the Silver State of February 28, 1888.]

ALLEGED TIMBER THIEVES.

The United States marshal has arrested six wood-choppers on Bullion Mountain, Lander County, for alleged timber stealing. It is charged that they have been violating the laws of the United States by cutting timber on the public domain and selling it for mining and domestic purposes. If that is a crime everybody in the country who hauls a load of wood to town and disposes of it, is guilty and liable to be arrested. This is the second time the men have been arrested, Justice Parks, of Battle Mountain, having discharged them the first time. They will now be taken before Judge Sabin, of the United States district court, at Carson.

Mr. STEWART. I now call as a witness Mr. Cassidy, who represented the Democratic party in the other House for two terms and declined to run at the last election. He is now a candidate for re-election. He is a gentleman who may be known to a good many here. He certainly has the reputation in Nevada of being an honest man, devoted to his constituents, and he was a useful, active member. He is the editor also of the Eureka Sentinel, published at Eureka, where he resides, and these alleged enormous frauds occurred about that town. Both the Richmond and Eureka companies are located in Eureka. I send to the desk a letter on this same subject written by him since the adoption of the amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., August 12, 1888.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Yours of July 26, as to timber cutting in Nevada, reached me here. I was at home in Eureka when one Temple, a special agent, came there. He had no conversation with me. I heard after he left that he had told others that certain parties had cut about six millions' worth and converted it into charcoal for smelting purposes. Based on that information I wrote a humorous paragraph for my paper, the Sentinel, directing attention to the fact that the law permits the use of timber for mining and domestic purposes in certain of the Western States and Territories, and holding that charcoal for smelting the minerals from the ores was as essential to the business of mining as the timber used in the mine to prevent its caving, or the logs and boards which are used in the miner's cabin, or the sticks with which he cooks his pork and beans. I regard the alleged investigation of the special agent and his findings as nonsensical in the extreme, and that it could result in nothing more than to harass people who had been guilty of no infraction of law, fairly construed according to the spirit of the statute as we of the mining regions have always construed it. I do not know from whom this special agent drew his inspiration while in Eureka, but I have a suspicion that it may have been from persons who would likely be benefited by litigation with the leading mining companies there.

I think your idea a good one, to lodge with the courts the whole subject of investigating trespass on the timber lands of the West, especially in those cases where the statutory exception runs regarding the use of public timber for mining and domestic purposes. It is my recollection that this agent had visited Eureka before you made your speech on the question.

Am here on business and hope to get home in about ten days. If I can then supply you further information, command me.

Sincerely, your friend,

GEO. W. CASSIDY.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEWART. I now send to the desk the article from the Sentinel of which Mr. Cassidy writes in the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Eureka Sentinel, a Democratic paper, of July 6, 1888, written by George W. Cassidy.]

A STUMP DETECTIVE.

The Eureka Sentinel of the 14th instant says: "During the week George T. Temple, a timber inspector of the Government, has been investigating matters on the Base Range. We understand that he found that depredations had been committed on Government timber in this county by R. Sadler, John Torre, Pete Hansen, and other coal-burners, to the enormous amount of six millions and a half dollars. We knew the above-named gentlemen possessed large sacks, but we had not rated them quite so high. We had been sizing them at about a million each. This Government agent can hardly be familiar with the law. The use of timber for mining and domestic purposes is especially permitted in the United States Statutes. The charcoal for smelting the ores is as much an adjunct of mining as the cabin the miner lives in."

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator from Kentucky will read the letter from Mr. Stockslager now I will conclude my remarks after the letter is read.

Mr. BECK. I did not know at first what was the question pending, but it grows out of an amendment in the sundry civil appropriation bill in which the House of Representatives has refused to concur. A letter was written by Mr. Stockslager, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to Hon. JAMES N. BURNES, of the House of Representatives, and a copy was sent to me, I suppose because I was one of the conferees. It is well for the Senator from Nevada first to know the ground on which the House rejected the amendment, and next to be advised after the reading of the letter what steps to take to fortify the position that he thinks is right. Mr. Stockslager writes as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., August 18, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your verbal request for my views upon the advisability of retaining in the sundry civil bill (H. R. 10540) the amendment introduced in and passed by the Senate, to wit, "that no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used in the investigation of any case or the prosecution of any person in the mining region of the United States for cutting for mining or domestic purposes dwarfed or scrubby timber unfit to be sawed into lumber of commercial value," and desiring such information upon the subject as this office can furnish, I have the honor to state that the amendment is, in my judgment, extremely impolitic and prejudicial to the welfare of the residents of the western country and to the interests of the country at large. If allowed to become a law, it will open the way to a complete denudation of the public timber lands, and thereby result not only in depriving the settlers upon the public domain of the timber legitimately needed for their mining claims, farms, and ranches, but in irretrievable injury to the soil and climate in all the mining sections of the public domain.

The proposed legislation is purely in the interests of large and wealthy mining corporations, foreign as well as native, and also in the interest of railroad corporations who have in many portions of the country monopolized the cord-wood cutting and charcoal industries.

I am warranted in stating that it originated in the desire to prevent the prosecution of anticipated suits which have since been ordered upon the recommendation of this office against the Richmond Mining Company and the Eureka Consolidated Mining Company, owning mines in Nevada, for the recovery of $9,917,461, the total value of wood and charcoal derived from timber cut by and for these companies upon the public lands, aggregating 1,305,964 cords of wood, from a portion of which were derived 28,704,662 bushels of charcoal.

These two companies alone have literally laid bare the hills, mountain ranges, and cañons within a radius of 35 miles from Eureka, not sparing the undergrowth, but taking everything from 3 inches and upwards, not simply "dwarfed and scrubby timber," but mahogany, cedar, and pine trees. Even the stumps of the trees have been removed.

These depredations are rendered the more aggravating by the fact that the Richmond Mining Company is exclusively a foreign and British corporation, organized in London, England, having for its manager an alien who is a British nobleman connected with the Duke of Northumberland. Its stock is owned in London, where its dividends, amounting to many millions within the last seventeen years, are declared. The only citizen shareholders are among the employés of the company, to whom a few shares have been assigned to give the organization a show of legality. Thus do the profits of our American public domain go to enrich the already wealthy lords, noblemen, and gentry of foreign lands at the expense of our own citizens, actual settlers and their children, for whose benefit the public lands should be saved in all their richness of soil and wealth of timber, agricultural, and mineral products.

The Eureka Consolidated Mining Company is a corporation resident in California and reaps all the benefits of the timber in Nevada.

What these two companies have done is being done by other mining companies in Nevada and their attendant charcoal burners and smelters, who have been for the past ten years or more, and yet continue, felling the timber upon the public lands, sweeping clean large tracts of every vestige of timber, "small and scrubby" though it be.

Complaints against this class have frequently been sent to this office by the honest bona fide settlers, among them appeals from the most respectable and worthy citizens of that State; and upon these complaints and appeals for the aid of this office towards suppressing such complete havoc of their supply of timber, which, though small and inferior, is all they have to depend upon for fuel and other domestic needs, and its frugal use is therefore rendered all the more essential, I directed a special agent to look carefully into the matter and report thereon. What he found and reported has, in substance, been above stated, and fully justifies all the complaints which have been made; and is also corroborated by facts personally communicated to me by a reliable gentleman of high character and standing in Nevada, who reports that these depredations and others of like character are being daily perpetrated.

He refers also to the very same amendment that has been offered, and states that "it is occasioned by the contemplated action of the Government against these several companies" herein mentioned. He states further that "as a result of these and other depredations of a like character" in Nevada where "timber is very scarce," "and all is very inferior, the agricultural settler often finds it difficult to obtain the necessary quantity for fencing and other domestic purposes," and that "such legislation is manifestly in the interest of large corporations, including several railroad companies who have for many years made it a large portion of their business to purchase quantities of cord wood and charcoal and timbers along the lines of their roads and transports and sell the same in various places, and in some instances these railroad companies have monopolized this line of business."

"The country has been denuded in large tracts;" "the Government lands have become valueless," "and the settler either upon arable or mineral lands finds it devoid of one of the essentials to his occupancy. The timber, although described as 'dwarf and scrubby,' attracts moisture, and in many localities is followed by and lays the foundation for better soil, more rainfall, and a better and more valuable growth of larger timber."

With the communication above referred to was inclosed a clipping, which the writer states is from one of the most influential Republican newspapers in Nevada, which is a lament upon the destruction of the former "splendid growth of nut-pine trees" which once covered "the Palmyra Mountains, Como district," states that this species of pine "is native to the soil and flourishes without artificial irrigation." Reference is made to a "sparse growth of young pines now springing up all over these mountains," and urges that "this sort of growth should be encouraged in all parts of the country if the mountain tops are ever to be covered with rain-attracting foliage."

Official reports from the mining States and Territories show that timber for smelting purposes is not an absolute necessity, in view of the fact that coke and coal can be had, and that it is only a question of time before wood and charcoal for smelting purposes and reduction works will give way entirely to coke and coal.

I am convinced that the effect of the proposed legislation will be inimical to the public interests involved in the preservation of the public lands and protection of the timber thereon in every public land State and Territory where there are mining lands and mines already opened, and will be a great injustice and hardship to the large class of honest, thrifty, and hard-working settlers, endeavoring to make homes for themselves and posterity, and who, in order to enable them to remain and work out their laudable purpose, must have the timber, of however inferior character, saved to them for fuel and other domestic necessities, and for an aid in promoting the moisture and fertility of their lands.

I earnestly hope, therefore, in the interests of good government and for the general benefit of all classes of our citizens—miners as well as agriculturists—that earnest endeavor will be successfully made to defeat the amendment now proposed mainly in the interest of greedy wealth and aliens, and which, if agreed to by the House, will result in rendering unhabitable and valueless large portions of the public domain.

Very respectfully,

S. M. STOCKSLAGER, Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES N. BURNES,
House of Representatives.

Mr. STEWART. I am delighted that that letter has been read.

Mr. BECK. It is a very valuable letter, if it is true.

Mr. STEWART. It is only valuable for one purpose, to show what enormous cases can be made by ex parte spies. In the main the letter is entirely false from beginning to end. Of course a long statement would drop on facts occasionally, but as a rule it is false.

I denounce as willfully false any insinuation that my amendment had any reference whatever to the Eureka or Richmond companies. I have given the history of it. It came from what I regarded as a wicked attempt to persecute a lot of poor people who were cutting scraggy timber on the mountains. The Commissioner talks about mahogany and other kinds of timber, calling them by name. I do not suppose Mr. Stockslager ever saw any of the classes of timber that he describes.

Mr. PLATT. There is no mahogany in this country.

Mr. STEWART. It is sometimes called mahogany. It is a little scrubby thing, better known as manzanita. It is a bush, and not a tree. I do not think that the Commissioner has any means of information. No man under this system of spies can be possessed of any correct information. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars will buy a great deal of false information from spies and informers, enough to convict all the world. What Senator would like to be tried by these spies? The Commissioner attempts to convince me and my constituents by them.

I appeal to every citizen of Nevada, if a greater outrage could be conceived than a general prosecution of the persons who have cut timber for mining and domestic purposes from those hills. I appeal to the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST], if I am not right, and if it would not be a most unmitigated outrage to prosecute those poor people who have cut timber they could get in no other way, and who have done it to enrich this country; and to arrest them and take them a long way from their homes, as they have commenced to do here, is cruel persecution. Can anything more outrageous than that be conceived? With this $350,000 of spy-money you are destroying that country. The people are getting no titles. The evil ones are not exposed; they can buy all the land.

It is only the poor who suffer, who are arrested and dragged a long way from their homes for having done what was recognized as proper by the Government for forty years, without which no mining could be done. To show that they did not waste it they even dug out the stumps and used every particle of timber in that country where there is so little.

The pretense that rich railroad corporations are engaged in this business is preposterously false. Any man who has crossed the continent from Utah to the Sierra Nevada Mountains and looked on either side will know himself that the Central Pacific Railroad could get very little timber from the surrounding country. He will not see any timber at all back in the mountains, except a little scrub timber. The railroad uses timber from the Sierra Nevada Mountains or coal for fuel. It is absurd that all this raid is now made upon these two mining companies, and that the force of the Government is to be sent against them. They have paid out vast sums of money in Nevada. Their dividends are small compared with the vast amount of money they have paid out to laboring men.

They have built up that country and made it possible for settlers to go there and have farms. There is no news so joyful in that region as a new discovery in the mines. Every farmer, every settler is delighted with it, because it makes a market, and it would be utterly impossible for them to mine at all without cutting this timber.

Mr. Stockslager says they can get coal and coke. That might be possible now, but it was not possible in early days when most of this timber was cut. Those two companies have been cutting the timber for about twenty-five years—for over twenty years at all events. There were no railroads. They had to pay enormously for this timber, which the poor laborers went out on the hills and collected together and threw down from the crags of the mountains, and they have been pouring a constant stream of gold and silver in your Treasury. This foreign company have spent $10 in that country where they have one to England. It is wonderful that they have made dividends at all.

I submit that there are not ten men in Nevada who would not feel outraged by this prosecution; and if any man has written here for the purpose of advocating it, it is because he is either an enemy of mankind or expects to be employed as a lawyer or as a spy to prosecute these people. The statute never contemplated that those people should not cut this timber. In Arizona, New Mexico, Idaho, and Montana, and throughout the mining region they are situated in the same way.

If you prosecute all who have been guilty you will have to prosecute in the different States and Territories more than half a million men, and you will prosecute them for what has been practiced with the sanction of the Government for a generation. You would prosecute them for doing what was necessary in order to live in that country and build up the Territories. To say that they shall be dragged from their homes is monstrous. When Mr. MacMillan called my attention to the fact that they were actually arresting men for climbing the mountains and getting this timber for mining and domestic purposes, and that they were going to put a new construction upon the law, I wrote him that I would do all in my power to rectify it, and that was months ago.

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas will state his point of order.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know how much it may be proper to say as a matter of privilege in regard to every conceivable thing under the sun, but there ought to be some limit to it at all events. I appreciate fully the feeling which the Senator from Nevada has about the characterization which was read from the newspapers, especially coming from the source it did, but I hope he will spare the Senate from an infliction of the kind he is proceeding now to administer under the shelter of personal privilege.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that I may be allowed to proceed in order, and I shall call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to some legislation which might relieve the situation.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest that it is not in order. I have no doubt of the value of what is said, but I submit that on a question of personal privilege whatever is said should be in relation to that which is personal to the Senator making the explanation or replying to the insinuation or whatever it may be, and that it does not and can not embrace a discussion of every conceivable thing under the shining sun, things in being and things supposed to be, and so on, and thus under the shelter of a privilege allow a person to go generally into the discussion of questions which are not related to the personal aspect of the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. While it is undoubtedly true from the parliamentary standpoint that questions of privilege and personal explanation thereunder should be confined strictly to the subject-matter about which the complaint is made, yet it is equally true that there is no practical limit to debate in the Senate, and the Chair knows of no rule except the sense of propriety that can be applied in any such case.

Mr. STEWART. I shall now call attention to some legislation which treats those people as alien enemies who are now trying to make homes in the West for the information of the Senator from Kansas, who is chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. It is this provision:

In all cases where any person has contested, paid the land office fees, and procured the cancellation of any pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture entry, he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancellation, and shall be allowed thirty days from date of such notice to enter said lands: Provided, That said register shall be entitled to a fee of $1 for the giving of such notice, to be paid by the contestant, and not to be reported.

There is a bid to any person who will contest a homestead or a pre-emption entry that he can have the land if he can win it. He can own the land if he can win it, and complaints have constantly come to me of these special agents who are alleged to be instigating persons to contest honest claims of settlers for technical errors. I only state what comes to me in letters. Many of the special agents are suspected of engaging people to find flaws so as to divide with them and get the lands away from honest settlers. Heretofore when there was any defect in the entry the register and receiver always corrected it, from time immemorial. Now, we have here in 1880 a law on the statute-book which gives the man the land if he will get it away from settlers on a technicality.

I say that this legislation places the whole people there in jeopardy, and that the appropriation of $350,000 to be used for investigation will bring $350,000 worth of lies. If they did not make false representations they would not find business. The business will increase each year as long as you have this ex parte proceeding, and as long as you continue to investigate those people.

I tell you the time is coming, and now is, when the name of the Commissioner of the General Land Office has become a synonym for all that is oppressive, all that is crooked, all that deprives a man of getting a home. Under your system of spies and of ex parte statements I say that you are bringing reproach upon this Government.

I do not say that Mr. Stockslager is any more guilty than anybody else who attempts to administer any such absurd laws. It is no way to investigate the titles to land by ex parte examination. It is reported as official. The reports of the agents upon which the Commissioner basis his charges are against the testimony of all the press of Nevada, against the Democratic leaders of that State, against the leading citizens of the State. Here we have an ex parte agent who goes out there and brings these tales, and it is then given to us as official information for the action of a committee.

If these prosecutions are continued you would not get a dollar into the Treasury. Many of the companies have exhausted their mines. The men who cut the wood and sold it to them are scattered about. They are poor men, some of them, and they are all workingmen, and the idea of indicting a whole people after you have tolerated it for a generation is absurd; and so is the idea of the Commissioner of the General Land Office making a personal attack upon me and falsely asserting that I was actuated by any consideration for the mining or railroad companies.

The Commissioner has outraged himself and disgraced his office to rely on false information to attempt to brand me thus. If this is to proceed, the people of the Western States and Territories will know who are their friends, because in those mining States and Territories every man who has any regard for himself agrees with me. The names of the parties who have written these letters are not given, and they would not like to have their names known in that country. No respectable citizen in that State wants to be connected with the infamy of prosecuting every poor man who has cut timber to sell to the mining companies, or who has cut it to cook his provisions.

Now, with $350,000 appropriated in the sundry civil bill he does not want to confine himself to the timber region where lumber has been cut. He is not willing for the coming year to confine himself to that, although he says that is enough; he must go to the barren regions of the interior to expend this money, and, in regard to this bad legislation, if he can during the coming year prosecute the people of my State who live in that country where there is no timber, properly speaking, if he can have them dragged up before the courts and punished, and also the people of Idaho, Montana, and other sections over there, if he can do that, there will be a great deal of damage done.

I think the Land Commissioner might be ordered to call a halt and to have this matter investigated by somebody other than a wandering special agent. My amendment simply provides that the present appropriation shall not be used to prosecute miners, and it is for this that he has assaulted me in the Herald and in his official communication. He is in great haste; after thirty years of delay he can not wait a single year to learn the real facts, but insists upon prosecuting the people of my State and of all the Territories for what I know to be false and which all the people know to be false; and they will all bear witness that it is so. It is the mere assertion of a spy or a blackmailer upon which the Commissioner proceeds.

If the Commissioner of the General Land Office or if the Administration thinks it necessary to prosecute a whole community to get nothing, just to show its virtue, and if it will not discriminate between the just and the unjust, between those that have committed wrong and those that have not, it will do very great harm. I have had occasion already to protest against the prosecution of the people of California residing upon lands patented in the fifties when Thomas A. Hendricks was Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to protest against prosecuting the innocent because frauds have been committed. Can it be the policy of the Administration to refuse to discriminate between the innocent and the guilty, and prosecute a whole people upon ex parte statements of spies, informers, and blackmailers? I can not believe such is the case, but the system in vogue has led the officers of the Government into outrageous and unjustifiable proceedings.

The very name of the Interior Department is being brought into disrepute. It will be regarded as the enemy of the people. Why do they not make open charges, and let the Interior Department act upon information openly given, and not upon information from these spies? Spies will mislead it all the time, and make it odious.

I say to my Democratic friends that this is not a political question. The Democrats of my State take as much interest in it as the Republicans, and neither party wants the administration of the Interior Department to be regarded as the most criminal and wicked persecutor that was ever inflicted upon men. Why, I tell you, Senators, that in all the history of the persecution of these colonies by Great Britain, there never was such a system invented as is covered by this appropriation of $350,000 for compensation to spies in my country, there never was such an unjust, unfair proceeding so oppressive and dishonest as this is. I do not charge it upon any individual, because the system breeds it. Spies and informers in times of war are bad enough, but to adopt the principle of using spies and informers in time of peace is all wrong. They will corrupt every branch of the Government service, especially if they find that a high officer of the Government will rely upon them and call their ex parte stuff official information.

PACIFIC RAILROAD INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. MORGAN. I give notice that, after consultation with the chairman of the Select Committee on the Pacific Railways, he not feeling at liberty to make the motion I propose to make, to-morrow at the close of the routine business of the morning hour I will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3401, which has been unanimously reported from the committee on the President's message relating to the Pacific Railway companies.

Mr. STEWART. What has become of the Washington Territory bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to remark that our report is unanimous from the Select Committee on Pacific Railroads, and corresponds with what has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and the bill corresponds precisely with the bill reported unanimously in the other House.

This subject, Mr. President, is one of such magnitude and of such pressing demand, the Union Pacific Railway being in such real want of assistance by way of legislative action, that I feel warranted in asking, on behalf of the minority at least of the select committee, that to-morrow we take up that bill and proceed with its consideration.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask before the Senator takes his seat whether it is his purpose to simply address the Senate upon the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; I want to bring the bill up for action.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say, then, that, for reasons to which I will advert later, when that bill comes up before the Senate I shall have an amendment to offer to it. I had not thought that the bill would be pressed for passage at this session. I have an amendment to offer, and if it becomes necessary when the time comes, I shall ask the Senate to let the bill go over for that amendment alone. Besides, I shall desire to be heard upon the bill myself.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill will probably occupy a day or two, perhaps two or three days.

Mr. PLUMB. I rather think it will occupy a longer time, probably as long as the fisheries treaty did.

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps so.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say a word in reference to the matter about which the Senator from Alabama has given notice. The bill for the admission of Washington Territory has been upon the Calendar now for a long time as unfinished business. It has been crowded out of its course and place by the fisheries treaty; and that being over, I must insist that that business shall be proceeded with without delay, and also that the two bills following, which were made special orders for the 24th of May, namely, the bills to admit North Dakota and Montana as States into the Union, shall also be disposed of. I think they have the right of way. I should insist upon their being pressed to-morrow, except that I understand the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] have given notice that they desire to take up some matters for the purpose of addressing the Senate upon them. But as soon as that is over I must insist upon going forward with these measures to the exclusion of everything else.

RAILROAD THROUGH FORT LEAVENWORTH RESERVATION.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1992.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the consideration of the unfinished business, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves that it be informally laid aside so that he may move the consideration of the bill whose title will be read from the desk.

The SECRETARY. Order of Business 1992, the bill (S. 3226) granting the Leavenworth Rapid Transit Railway Company the right to construct and operate its railroad through a portion of the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 13 to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" and in line 23 to add:

And said company, its successors and assigns, shall occupy and use said right of way and depot grounds subject to removal therefrom, and the revocation of the license and authority herein given, whenever the public service, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may require such revocation and removal.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That license and authority are hereby granted to the Leavenworth Rapid Transit Railway Company to construct and operate its railroad from its present terminus at the south boundary of the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., into and through said military reservation to a point and terminus near the military prison, and at its said terminus near said military prison to construct a depot and such side-tracks, turn-tables, and other facilities as may be necessary for the convenient operation of its said railroad; and for the purpose aforesaid the use of a strip of land 50 feet wide for its right of way extending from the south boundary line of said military reservation to said terminal point near said military prison, and the use of a tract of land not exceeding 2 acres in area for said depot, side-tracks, and terminal facilities, are hereby granted to said railway company: Provided, That the route of said railroad through said military reservation and the location of the depot grounds and the plans of the depot and all other buildings to be erected by said railroad company on said military reservation shall be submitted to and shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and said company, its successors and assigns, shall occupy and use said right of way and depot grounds subject to removal therefrom, and the revocation of the license and authority herein given, whenever the public service, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may require such revocation and removal.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

COMING OF CHINESE LABORERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3304) to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, which was to strike out section 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 15. That the act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved May 6, 1882, and the act to amend said act, approved July 5, 1884, are hereby repealed, to take effect upon the ratification of the pending treaty, as provided in section 1 of this act.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. VEST. Let me inquire of the Chair if that is the anti-Chinese bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. VEST. I would ask the Senator from Oregon whether I am correct in understanding that the amendment made by the House of Representatives simply causes this act to be operative until the ratification of the treaty?

Mr. DOLPH. The amendment is simply formal. The bill itself as it passed the Senate provided that its provisions should not take effect until the treaty was ratified. By the last section of the bill, the fifteenth section, existing laws are repealed. I think myself that the amendment is unnecessary, but it does no harm. It simply says that the repeal of the present laws shall not take effect until the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. VEST. It continues existing laws until the treaty is ratified?

Mr. DOLPH. That is all. As the bill passed the Senate it would not take effect until the ratification of the treaty, but the House thought differently and has made the amendment, and I think it should be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

MACHINERY AND ARMS FOR NAVAL VESSELS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Navy; which was read:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, August 14, 1888.

SIR: By a resolution of the Senate adopted January 25, 1888, this Department was called upon for information on various matters connected with the construction and armament of naval vessels contracted for since March 4, 1880. The requirements of the resolution are stated therein as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate information concerning all naval vessels, and machinery and armor for the same, and all naval ordnance and gun metal for constructing or furnishing which contracts have been made by the Navy Department since March 4, 1885, as follows:

"1. Copies in the case of each contract of the advertisement and of the written or printed conditions and rules for tests and inspections upon which proposals were invited.

"2. A schedule of the proposals received and awards made.

"3. A copy of the contract made.

"4. A statement showing the time within which the contract was to be performed, and the present condition of the work, and the payments made thereon, with copies of the reports and correspondence upon which each payment was made. And that the Secretary be directed also to inform the Senate whether or not, since said contracts have been made, any of the terms or conditions of any of them have been altered, or any agreements have been made for changes in the quality of material or work, or any of the stipulations or rules for tests and inspections have been relaxed or varied; and, if so, to state the circumstances and causes of any such alteration, change, or variation."

In compliance with said requirements I have the honor to transmit herewith—

First. A copy of each advertisement inviting proposals for vessels, machinery, armor, naval ordnance, and gun-metal, for constructing or furnishing which contracts have been made by the Navy Department since March 4, 1880; also copies of the written and printed conditions and rules for the tests and inspections upon which proposals were invited.

Second. Schedules of the proposals received and awards made.

Third. Copies of the contracts made.

Fourth. A statement showing the time fixed for the completion of the contract in each case; the present condition of the work; and the payments made thereon, with copies of the reports and correspondence upon which each payment was made.

In reply to the requirements of the concluding paragraph of the resolution, namely: that the Senate be informed, whether or not, since said contracts have been made, any of the terms or conditions of any of them have been altered, or any agreements have been made for changes in the quality of material or work, or any of the stipulations or rules for tests and inspections have been relaxed or varied; and, if so, of the circumstances and causes of any such alteration, change, or variation, I have to state that the information requested is contained in the accompanying copies of correspondence relating to the construction or furnishing of vessels, machinery, armor, and armament contracted for since March 4, 1880, other than that transmitted with a letter dated July 31, 1888, in answer to a resolution of the Senate adopted February 1, 1888, concerning the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin, and that contained in Senate Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. J. INGALLS,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the communication and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy; which was read, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, August 14, 1888.

SIR: Referring to the resolution adopted by the Senate January 25, 1888, as follows, namely:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform the Senate what plans, designs, drawings, or specifications of ships or marine engines have been purchased or procured in foreign countries by or on behalf of the Navy Department, and from whom they have been obtained, and to state what plans, designs, drawings, or specifications so purchased or procured have been adopted, in whole or in part, for vessels or engines now under contract or construction; and also to transmit to the Senate a statement of the cost to the Government of each of such plans, designs, drawings, and specifications, and also an account of all expenditures made by the Navy Department since March 20, 1885, under the appropriations for information from abroad, and for emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising abroad"—

I have the honor to transmit herewith the information thus called for:

First. As to the plans, designs, drawings, and specifications, purchased or procured in foreign countries, which have been adopted, in whole or in part, for vessels or engines now under contract or construction, together with the names of the persons or firms from whom the same were obtained and the cost to the Government of each of such plans, designs, drawings, and specifications.

This information is contained in the accompanying schedule marked A.

Only three designs purchased abroad for hull and machinery of new vessels for the Navy have been adopted by the Department, namely: Design No. 5, which has been adopted in the construction of cruiser No. 2 (Charleston); design No. 27, which has been adopted in the construction of cruiser No. 3 (Baltimore); and the designs for the armored battle-ship Texas, which have been adopted in the construction of that vessel.

The facts connected with the purchase and adoption of "design No. 5" and "design No. 27" are stated in this Department's annual report for 1886 (page 7), as follows:

"The Department has, since March, 1885, accumulated a large amount of information in the way of plans, showing the latest advances in the art, which, it is believed, have been availed of to a very important extent by the technical officers of the Department in the work upon the new ships now about to be undertaken. I believe it to be the true policy of the Department to gather such information from every quarter and at the same time to depend entirely upon our own resources for the construction of our vessels. The Department, during this time, has kept itself in consultation with the leading ship-builders of the country, who feel themselves greatly concerned and interested in the success of the Department in these matters. The Department having in the course of its efforts purchased plans, including the detailed drawings of the motive power of the two most recent productions of Sir William Armstrong & Co., was strongly recommended by the several practical ship-builders who were consulted to reproduce the machinery in two of the new ships, and to construct the other three upon the designs of its bureaus. This course has been adopted. This intention has greatly stimulated the work of the Department, and it is hoped that the 4,000-ton ship designed by the bureaus will mark not only a very great advance over the last ships designed by them, but even over those built on the plans which have been obtained from abroad. All the time necessary for the preparation of the plans has been patiently permitted and every encouragement given to the successful solution of the problems involved."

The circumstances attending the award of a prize for the design of the Texas are stated in the annual reports of 1886 and 1887, as follows:

"ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1886.

"Congress at its recent session authorized the construction of two ironclads of about 6,000 tons each. The subject has been referred to the Bureaus of Construction, Steam Engineering, Equipment and Recruiting, and Ordnance to take the necessary steps to prepare plans for the letting. The Department has also deemed it wise to offer to all approved naval architects and ship-builders an opportunity to compete with the work of the Department in the designs for these new ships, and the sum of $15,000 has been offered as compensation for any accepted design for either of the vessels, the working drawings to be the subject of subsequent agreement. There are many distinguished architects who, of late years, have had much greater experience in new work than the liberality of our Government has made it possible for our own to enjoy, and in starting upon the creation of a new navy the Department has no embarrassment in desiring to avail of the best talent anywhere to be found in placing the new work upon a par with the best of other countries, from which point it is entirely safe to predict that the ingenuity and talent of our own countrymen will suffice to keep us in the front rank for future work.

"No time will thus be lost, even if no designs are submitted or accepted, for the process of preparing necessary plans is going on simultaneously in the Department.

"ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1887.

"As explained in the last annual report of the Department, it was decided to invite the submission of plans for these vessels by naval architects in civil life at home and abroad, and a prize of $15,000 was offered for any accepted design. Plans were received from various sources and much interest was elicited. A board of naval experts was appointed to consider the same and the award was unanimously made to the Barrow Ship-building Company, of England, for plans prepared by the eminent naval architect, Mr. William John. One of these vessels will therefore be built upon the plans of the Department and one upon those of the successful competitor."

In this connection it is proper to state that on the adoption of the plans, designs, etc., for the armored battle-ship Texas, and the award of the prize of $15,000 therefor, it was deemed for the advantage of the Department to have the working drawings prepared by the same parties whose design had been adopted. The amount to be paid for such drawings was, after mutual consideration, agreed upon at $6,900, and it was made a condition of the award that satisfactory drawings should be furnished at that price, payable on the completion and acceptance of the drawings. This sum yet remains to be paid, the delivery of the drawings, although in progress, not yet having been completed.

Referring to so much of said resolution as calls for information concerning plans, designs, etc., purchased or procured abroad by the Department, I have to state that, while it is the duty of this Department to advise itself fully as to the naval strength of other maritime powers and to be prepared to inform its own officers, in time of war, of the characteristics of every vessel which they shall chance to meet, such information being necessary to enable an officer to form a reliable judgment as to his own course, and while it is also the policy of the Department to advise itself of the improvements making from time to time in the plans of ships of war, for the information and use of the Department, and while all information on this subject possessed by the Department is made available to its own officers, it is largely received through confidential sources and it is not, in my judgment, compatible with the public interests that such information should be made public to the extent of designating all plans, designs, etc., purchased or procured in foreign countries, or the persons from whom they have been obtained; and the Department asks to be excused from making further answer to said resolution except as to the plans, designs, drawings, etc., which have been adopted by the Department, as before stated.

Secondly, referring to the remaining part of said resolution, which calls for "an account of all expenditures made by the Navy Department since March 20, 1885, under the appropriations for information from abroad, and for emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising abroad," I have the honor to transmit herewith an account, marked B, of expenditures under the appropriations for "information from abroad," since March 20, 1885, and to state that during the same period there were no expenditures under the appropriations for "emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising abroad."

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. J. INGALLS,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The exhibits accompanying these various communications are lying on the floor at the right hand of the desk, and the Chair thinks that perhaps before they are printed it might be well to have them referred to the Committee on Printing for examination.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Printing.

I desire to state that the answer of the Secretary of the Navy to the resolution in reference to the foreign plans, the plans procured abroad for vessels, is not long, and that was the communication which I supposed was being referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and was ordered to be printed. I make that motion now with reference to the communication which has just been read by the Secretary. The other two communications are those which are accompanied by the very bulky documents. I desire that this be referred to the Committee on Printing before the order to print is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communications all bear the same date, but refer to resolutions adopted at different times, and the Chair had them read in the order of the priority of the times at which the resolutions were offered. The first one read with the accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Printing. The one last read will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and printed. The one that is now submitted with the accompanying documents will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The communication was read and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, August 14, 1888.

SIR: In accordance with the following resolution of the Senate, adopted February 1, 1888, namely:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the changes made from the original plans of the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin in addition to those specified in a communication from the Navy Department to the House of Representatives of February 11, 1885 (constituting House Executive Document No. 220, Forty-eighth Congress, second session), and in a communication from said Department to the Senate of May 24, 1886 (constituting Senate Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, first session), together with the cost of such additional changes in each case; and that the Secretary be directed also to furnish the Senate with copies of all documents and correspondence on file in said Department written since March 5, 1886, in any way concerning the aforesaid vessels, which are not contained in the annual reports of said Department, including all reports of boards and of commanding officers and engineer officers, and all log-books kept while the vessels have been in motion since said date, and all the evidences of settlements and payments made since said date by the United States, and of any unsettled claims on account of said vessels; and that the Secretary be directed further to state the present condition of the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, and the reasons for the delay in their completion and reception into active service, together with the reasons of the action of the Department in each case reported under this resolution, and those passed by the Senate on ths 25th of January last; and also to state the presen, condition of the monitor Miantonomoh and her armament"—

I have the honor to transmit herewith the following information, arranged under the several heads of inquiry specified in the resolution, namely:

1. "A statement of the changes made from the original plans of the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin in addition to those specified in a communication from the Navy Department to the House of Representatives of February 11, 1885 (constituting House Executive Document No. 220, Forty-eighth Congress, second session), and in a communication from said Department to the Senate of May 24, 1886 (constituting Senate Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, first session), together with the cost of such additional changes in each case."

The answer to so much of this requirement as relates to "cost of such additional changes in each case" is included in the statement showing the actual cost of each additional change from the original plans of the Chicago, both hull and machinery, and from the original plans of the machinery of the Boston and Atlanta; also the aggregate cost of all the enumerated changes from the original plans of the hulls of the Boston and Atlanta, respectively, it being impracticable, in consequence of the destruction, by fire, of the detailed accounts of such expenditures, to furnish an itemized statement of the cost of each change from the original plans of the hulls of the two vessels last above named. There were no additional changes from the original plans, either of hull or machinery, for the construction of the United States steamer Dolphin.

2. "Copies of all documents and correspondence on file in said Department written since March 5, 1886, in any way concerning the aforesaid vessels which are not contained in the annual reports of said Department, including all reports of boards and of commanding officers and engineer officers, and all log-books kept while the vessels have been in motion since said date," and to and including April 30, 1888.

3. Copies of "all the evidences of settlements and payments made since said date (March 5, 1886) by the United States, and of any unsettled claims on account of said vessels" to and including April 30, 1888.

Referring to this requirement, I have to say that the statements of actual cost of changes, as herewith furnished, indicate two classes of expenditures connected with the construction of said vessels, namely:

1. Changes, the cost of which is properly chargeable to the Government.

2. Changes, the cost of which remains to be charged either against the Government or against the contractor, which question having, when the changes were made, been left open for further consideration, no final action has yet been had thereon. These cases constitute "unsettled claims," the "evidence" relating to which is embraced in the copies of correspondence herewith transmitted.

IV. "The present condition of the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, as shown by the reports," copies of which, marked A, B, C, D, and E, are herewith transmitted.

V. "The reasons for the delay in their completion and reception into active service, together with the reasons for the action of the Department in each case reported under this resolution and those passed by the Senate on the 25th of January last."

The reasons alluded to, so far as they relate to the three vessels last above-named, will be found in the several reports and correspondence transmitted herewith—and when not fully appearing will hereafter be communicated if, upon consideration of the whole matter, the same shall seem necessary. So far as the requirement relates to other vessels, the answer thereto will be embraced in a separate communication.

VI. "The present condition of the monitor Miantonomoh and her armament" is stated in reports from the chiefs of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair, Steam Engineering, and Ordnance, dated, respectively, June 29, July 3, and August 7, 1888, copies of which are herewith transmitted.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. J. INGALLS,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

EFFECT OF IRRIGATION ON LOWER VALLEYS.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to offer a resolution to be read and to lie on the table until to-morrow, when I will ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Kansas will be read for information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inquire and report to the Senate at its next session the extent to which the diversion of the waters of the Platte and Arkansas Rivers and their tributaries in Colorado, for irrigation or other purposes, affects the flow of the water of those streams in the lower valleys, and especially during the growing season; and whether the title conveyed by the Government to lands fronting on said streams covers the privilege of diverting water therefrom beyond that necessary for use thereon for irrigation and mining purposes, and to report what action is needed to protect the rights of riparian owners along the course of said streams in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table, and be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I present the report of the conference committee on the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it. Does the Senator from Maine desire to have the report acted upon now?

Mr. HALE. I so desire.

Mr. VEST. If that will lead to much debate will the Senator permit me to make a report from the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. HALE. This will be out of the way in five minutes, I have no doubt.

The Secretary read the report of the committee of conference, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10556) "making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 46, 47, 48, 55, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 14, 15, 18, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 49, 51, 57, 59, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72, 73, and 74, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "same" in line 9, page 4, of the bill the following: "and to enable the Naval War College to be conducted at said island up to January 1, 1889;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "after said date;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$625,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,367,156.47;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$67,325.53;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$825,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 20, page 26 of the bill, strike out "fifty-one" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-one;" and in lines 21 and 22, same page, strike out "one hundred and ninety-eight" and insert in lieu thereof "two hundred and eighteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,494.20;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$674,080.20;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$917,213.77;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 63 and 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted and stricken out by said amendments insert the following:

"One armored cruiser of about 7,500 tons displacement, to cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $3,500,000; and three gunboats, or cruisers, neither of which shall exceed 2,000 tons in displacement nor $700,000 in cost, excluding any premium that may be paid for increased speed and the cost of armament; said three gunboats, or cruisers, to be built either wholly of steel or with steel frames."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment numbered 69, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Substitute for said House amendments to said Senate amendment the following:

Page 33, line 26 of the bill, strike out the word "on" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Page 34, line 1 of the bill, strike out the word "on" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Page 34, line 3 of the bill, strike out the word "on" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "Vessel or vessels;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the Senate amendment numbered 75, and agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
C. B. FARWELL,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. A. HERBERT,
WM. McADOO,
JOHN R. THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would like to have the Secretary read once more the amendment which was agreed to in the conference committee to Senate amendments numbered 3 and 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read what is desired.

Mr. ALDRICH. Simply the amendments made to Senate amendments 3 and 4.

The amendment to Senate amendment No. 3 was read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would like to ask the Senator from Maine representing the Committee on Naval Affairs whether it is the intention by the language used in that amendment to limit the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy as to the location of the naval war college?

Mr. HALE. Not in any way, Mr. President. The Secretary of the Navy under the law has the power, without any command on the part of Congress, to consolidate the two. He has had that in his mind for some time. This amendment was suggested by the House conferees as a matter of precaution, so that nothing would be done that would touch the duties now being performed in connection with the war college, and that was agreed to, as was the next amendment in connection with that college, and it was not intended to affect it in any way.

Mr. ALDRICH. That explanation is satisfactory to me. The people of Newport are very much interested in the war college, and if it were intended to commit Congress to its removal I should desire to enter a protest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island desire to have the amendment to Senate amendment No. 4 read?

Mr. ALDRICH. No, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine whether there are any changes made in the appropriation for navy-yards and docks on the Pacific coast—whether the appropriation for that purpose remains the same?

Mr. HALE. The appropriation remains the same.

Mr. BECK. There is only one thing that I desire the chairman of the committee of conference to explain to the Senate, and that is in regard to the provisions that we in the Senate inserted and the provisions that were struck out in the Senate, and what changes have been made by reinserting? That is the only important question, I understand.

Mr. HALE. The only agreement which could be reached without a protracted conference was to adopt the propositions of both the House and the Senate and embody them both in the bill. They are both here. The House would not agree to the Senate proposition alone, the Senate would not agree to the House proposition alone, and, in the end, in the interest of the increase of the Navy, both propositions were adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

COURTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. VEST. I desire to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, if there be no objection.

Mr. VEST. I report favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary Senate bill No. 1604 with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I will ask the Senate to consider the bill now. It simply changes the terms of the Federal courts in Missouri, and there is only a very short time intervening now before the first of the terms will be held.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be reported by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the terms of the circuit court of the United States for the western division of the western district of Missouri shall begin and be held at Kansas City, in said State, on the first Mondays in March and September annually.

That the terms of the district court of the United States for the western division of the western district of Missouri shall begin and be held at Kansas City, in said State, on the first Mondays in May and October annually.

That the terms of both the circuit and district courts of the United States for the Saint Joseph division of the western district of Missouri shall begin and be held at Saint Joseph, in said State, on the first Mondays in April and November annually.

That the terms of both the circuit and district courts of the United States for the central division of the western district of Missouri shall begin and be held at Jefferson City, in said State, on the third Mondays in April and November annually.

That the terms of the district court of the United States for the southern division of the western district of Missouri shall be held at Springfield, in said State, on the third Mondays in May and October annually. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. All process issued from the clerk's office of said courts when the act takes effect shall be taken and considered as returnable to the term or terms hereby established in lieu of the term or terms existing at the time such process was issued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to change the times of the sessions of the circuit and district courts for the western division of the western district of Missouri."

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. VEST, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. COKE were appointed.

BRIDGE BETWEEN EL PASO AND PASO DEL NORTE.

Mr. COKE. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to call up Order of Business No. 2115, House bill No. 11118.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 11118) to authorize the construction and operation of a street-railway and wagon bridge across the Rio Grande between the city of El Paso, Tex., and Paso del Norte, Mexico, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY M. BRIGGS.

Mr. SAWYER. I desire to present a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received if there be no objection.

Mr. SAWYER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and agree to an amendment as follows, namely: Before the word "pension" where it last occurs insert the word "widow's;" and the Senate agree to the same.

PHILETUS SAWYER,
C. K. DAVIS,
D. TURPIE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
CARLOS FRENCH,
A. C. THOMPSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PRIVATE PENSION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills favorably reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside so that he may move the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar to which there is no objection.

Mr. BROWN. If all the private pension bills are to be taken up under that motion I ask the Senator from Minnesota to be kind enough to allow me to have one bill considered before he takes them up. It is a very short bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Without prejudice to my request?

Mr. BROWN. Without prejudicing the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not hear the request of the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Minnesota is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills favorably reported on the Calendar to which there is no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Favorably reported; very well.

Mr. CALL. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Minnesota to allow me to ask the Senate to take up the resolution reported by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, for the suppression of yellow fever.

Mr. BROWN. I think I addressed the Chair before the Senator from Florida did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. BROWN. I understood the Senator from Minnesota to consent that I have a short bill disposed of before the pension bills are taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senate has not yet given its unanimous consent for the consideration of the private pension bills.

The Chair was about asking whether there was objection to the consideration of the private pension bills on the Calendar to which there is no objection.

Mr. CALL. I do not like to object, but I will ask the Senator to withdraw his request in order that this yellow-fever matter may be taken up.

Mr. DAVIS. It will not take half an hour to go through the private pension Calendar of unobjected cases. I would a little rather proceed now.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

Mr. BROWN. The bill I desire taken up is Order of Business 2066, House bill 3480.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore The title of the bill will be reported from the desk.

The SECRETARY. Order of Business 2066, being the bill (H. R. 3480) for the relief of John D. Munnerlyn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

JOHN D. MUNNERLYN.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $1,496.21 for the payment of the salary of John D. Munnerlyn, of Georgia, for services as assistant assessor of internal revenue from December, 1865, to September, 1866, for which he has never received the pay allowed by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first private pension bill on the Calendar favorably reported.

Mr. DAVIS. On conference with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] I feel that I ought to yield to the urgency of his business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order is then revoked, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside for the purpose of considering the joint resolution reported this morning by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. CALL. It was reported from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in the hands of the Secretary, not yet having been sent back from the Printer.

Mr. COCKRELL. We had better go on with the pension bills, then.

Mr. CALL. Before that is done I desire to thank the chairman of the Committee on Pensions for his kindness and consideration in this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first private pension bill on the Calendar will be reported by its title.

ELIZA A. WILLIAMSON.

The bill (H. R. 9672) granting a pension to Eliza A. Williamson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Eliza A. Williamson, widow of Eustace Hunt, an ensign in the Fifth Regiment Virginia Militia, who served in the Army of the United States in the war of 1812, notwithstanding her marriage to George Williamson, now deceased about thirty-two years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report read in that case which has just been passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. SAWYER August 1, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9672) granting a pension to Eliza A. Williamson, have examined the same, and report:

The committee concur in the House report upon which the bill was passed, and which is as follows:

"Mrs. Eliza A. Williamson is an old lady, in greatly reduced circumstances. She has now been a widow about thirty-two years. Her first husband, Eustace Hunt, was an ensign in the Fifth Regiment Virginia Militia, who served in the war of 1812. But for her second marriage to her late husband, George Williamson, she would be entitled to a pension under the general law.

"Your committee think, under all the circumstances, that Mrs. Williamson's name should be placed upon the pension-roll; and therefore recommend the adoption of the accompanying substitute, and that the original bill (H. R. 6494) lie upon the table."

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to inquire if there is not quite a large number of such widows, and if this applicant does not come within a class of widows that ought to be provided for by general law and not by special legislation of this kind? Is there any difference between this widow and probably fifty or one hundred or five hundred other widows who married soldiers of the war of 1812, whose husbands died leaving them widows, and who afterwards married and their second husbands have died? Is there not a large number of that class?

Mr. SAWYER. If so I am not aware of it. The committee have universally made it the rule in cases of that kind to report a bill. I think there are very few such cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has passed.

MRS. CATHARINE REED.

The bill (H. R. 7717) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Reed was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Catharine Reed, the widow of Eben P. S. Reed, late of Company D, One hundred and second regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. CALL. I understand the joint resolution which I asked to be considered a moment since has been found, and I now ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions if he will allow it to be brought up for consideration?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. QUAY July 26, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3269) granting a pension to Theresia Fichter, widow of Paul Fichter, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report as follows:

The committee report that it appears said Paul Fichter was a private of Company E, Fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, from 1861 to 1864, and was honorably discharged; that while in said service and line of his duty he was badly wounded and injured by being struck by a shell, and also had his health and constitution destroyed, from the effects of which he became paralyzed, and died May 29, 1870; that his widow, the said Theresia Fichter, claimed a pension, and her claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground, as alleged, that the cause of said soldier's death was not due to his military service; that it appears the physician who attended him at the time of his death, a Dr. Smith (since deceased), not only made a mistake in returning the cause of his death as apoplexy, but also in his occupation, and even in his name.

The following is a synopsis of the evidence filed in the case, showing that said soldier's death resulted from his military service:

William Rosinsky testified that he was orderly sergeant of said soldier's company, and that about June or 1st of July, 1864, on the Weldon Railroad, Virginia, said soldier was badly wounded and injured by a shell which struck him in the right side, which carried away a portion of his clothes and made him, from his thigh to his waist, as black as a black felt hat, and by reason of which wound or injury he was disabled for further duty. Saw him a year or so after his discharge, and he was complaining of his wound.

William Friebold testified that he was a private in his company and corroborates the former witness as to said Fichter being out on the Weldon Railroad, Virginia, on a raid; and this witness saw him when he came into camp wounded in right leg, from his groin down, which was black and blue, and he had to be helped, and his clothes were shot away on that side, and he was totally disabled for any duty afterwards while in the service.

Isabella Sands testified that she saw him at about the time of his discharge from the Army in 1864, and he was then sick all over and complained of being sick and feeling bad, and of pains in his side from wound in his side and hip. She lived near neighbor and saw him from the time of his discharge to his death, and he complained of pains in his head, and in his shoulders, and in his hip; thinks he had rheumatism from his wound. Was not able to do but little work after he came from the Army, only a day or two, once in awhile; that soon after his discharge he was attended by a doctor who said his condition was caused by exposure in the Army and from his injury; that she is certain his death was caused by his army service, as he was never any good after he came from the Army; he was bed-fast for several weeks before he died, and was paralyzed on one side, and for two days before he died he could not speak, though conscious.

Robert Harris testified that he saw the soldier about the time he came from the Army at the time of his discharge in 1864, and he looked all broke up, and he got it in the Army; and his disability appeared to be greatly from a wound or injury of his side, but he was sick and all broken in health; and a Dr. Smith attended him soon after he came home, and continued to attend him more or less till he died; and he was not able to work but very little after he came home from the Army; only able to work a day once in a while, and was always complaining of his injured side, thigh, and hip, which made him lame; and was paralyzed on that side, as was stated by the doctor who attended him, who has since died.

Rachel Fichter testified that she saw him at discharge and return home in 1864, and he was then sick, and was lame from a wound of right side or leg, and he showed her his blouse and pants torn and blackened by the shell that struck him, and a piece of the leather of the saddle that was shot away when he was wounded; and he seemed to have a cold also when he came home, and he was greatly broken down and could not work and support his family on account of his wound and bad health he got in the Army. He was hearty and strong when he enlisted in 1861; he was always complaining and never had any good health after his discharge. She saw him every day for two weeks before he died, and from a Thursday to the following Saturday, when he died, he was helpless, and had a difficulty with his throat and chest.

Anna Gow, his daughter, testified that she lived at home when her father came home from the Army at his discharge in 1864, and afterwards to near the time he died; and when he was discharged he was crippled up from a wound in his right side near the groin, which made him lame; and he complained of his throat very much afterwards, and was weak in his chest and unable to work but very little; and his wound broke out a couple of weeks or so after his discharge, and broke out in sores every little while till he died. He got weaker, and for two weeks before he died he was sick in bed, and for four days before death was helpless.

Emma Grouse testified that she saw him at the time of his discharge, and he was suffering from wound in side and groin, and was kind of drawn up and stiff, and was sick and broken down, and he was well and hearty when he went away in 1861. Saw him two or three times a week after his discharge, and he was not able to work; do not think he worked six days during the six years he lived after his discharge on account of his wound and bad health; that for two weeks before his death she helped to nurse him; that about two weeks after his said discharge he was attended by a Dr. Smith (since deceased) for a trouble in his throat and for his wound, and again for a week before his death, and he could not move his right side and could not talk, and his death was caused by his army service, she is certain.

The committee believe, in view of the evidence recited, that the said soldier died from the effects of a lingering disability, the result of wound or injury incurred in the military service and line of duty, resulting, finally, in paralysis, of which he died.

We, therefore, report the bill favorably and recommend its passage.

CHARLES RITCHEY.

The bill (H. R. 5123) to increase the pension of Charles Ritchey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the invalid pension-roll the name of Charles Ritchey, late a sergeant of Company K, Thirty-ninth Indiana Infantry Volunteers, at the increased rate of $40 per month, for the loss of both lower limbs.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to hear that bill read once more.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. PLATT. The loss of both lower limbs brings $72 a month, does it not? I think there is some mistake about the language of the bill. I think it was intended to increase the pension perhaps $40 from what it now is. My recollection is that the rate for loss of both lower limbs is $72. I think the bill had better be passed over for the time being until we can investigate it.

Mr. BECK. Where is the soldier from?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From Indiana, the Chair is informed.

Mr. BECK. The bill was reported by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and I expect it is right. That is all I desire to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut requests that the bill be passed over. If there be no objection, that disposition will be made of it.

Mr. PLATT subsequently said: With reference to the bill which I spoke of a moment ago, I find by the report that the facts are—

That he is now drawing a pension of $16 per month for such disability, which is paralysis. He makes application now for an increase of his pension on the ground of total disability in the loss of both of his lower limbs, which occurred since he has been drawing his pension, by being run over by a railway engine while crossing the track, he being unable to get out of the way on account of the paralysis for which he was pensioned. His claim was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that he was drawing all the law would allow for paralysis.

The committee find from the testimony in this case that it is reasonably certain that if the soldier was not suffering from paralysis he would not be injured by the engine aforesaid.

I still think that the bill ought to have been at the rate of $72 a month; but under these circumstances, it being understood and reported by the Senator from Indiana, I make no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of the bill will be resumed, if there be no objection, and the question is on its passage.

The bill was passed.

NANCY BALDWIN.

The bill (H. R. 4504) granting a pension to Nancy Baldwin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Nancy Baldwin, widow of Reuben Baldwin, deceased, late of Company B, Fifty-eighth Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY NEWTON.

The bill (H. R. 9227) for the relief of Mary Newton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Mary Newton, the daughter and only surviving heir of John Jordan, of the Continental Line, in the war of the Revolution, at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAULKNER August 13, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9227) granting a pension to Mary Newton, have examined the same, and report:

Upon an examination of the evidence in this case the committee find that the facts are fairly presented in the report of the Committee on Pensions of the House of Representatives made the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, which facts, in the opinion of the committee, are sufficient to entitle the claimant to the relief granted by the bill.

The committee therefore adopt said report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The report is as follows:

"That the claimant, Mrs. Mary Newton, is the only surviving child of John Jordan, who was a soldier for three years in the war of the Revolution. She is now in her eighty-fifth year, having been born, as shown by the family record before your committee, on the 2d day of July, 1804, and in her old age applies to Congress for relief.

"It is shown by the records of the soldiers who served in the Virginia Continental line that John Jordan served as bombardier in Colonel Harrison's regiment of artillery (Virginia quota) for three years from and after the 20th of December, 1776. A land-warrant was issued to him by the State of Virginia in November, 1783. It appears that during his term of service he was captured by the British and confined on board a prison-ship for over three months.

"The identity of the soldier who rendered the above-mentioned service with the father of the applicant is fully established by the testimony of very estimable people, whose affidavits were filed in the pension claim of the widow of the soldier more than forty years ago. One of these witnesses, Jincey Riddle, testified that when she was a small child she well remembers John Jordan came to her father's house in Greenville County, Virginia, having just been released from a British prison-ship, and that there was a great stir among the women of the settlement to have some clothes made for the soldier before he went back again to join the Army.

"The death of the mother of the applicant occurred on the 6th day of July, 1847.

"Your committee return the bill to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass."

Mr. COCKRELL. This is going further, I think, than the Senate has ever gone in these cases. I simply desire to enter my protest against this principle of pensioning the grandchildren of Revolutionary soldiers, or of any other soldiers. There is neither justice, equity, nor right in it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 9227) for the relief of Mary Newton.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which House bill 9227 was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading will also be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is open to amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to hear from the Pension Committee in relation to that case.

Mr. DAVIS. I was not present at the meeting of the committee when that bill was considered and reported. I was not in the city at the time. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who reported it, is not in his seat. I ask that it be passed over.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that it should be recommitted to the committee. All that appears in the report of the committee is that the lady in question is the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier. She was born in 1804, and is an aged lady, undoubtedly entitled to respect and sympathy; but the naked statement of that fact certainly, it seems to me, suggests no reason for putting the person on the pension-roll. She was born long after the war, never a dependent child of a Revolutionary soldier; and if we extend the pension-roll to that degree it will involve adding enormously to the burden of the pension-roll in favor of persons who never had any claim of their own, making the right to a pension an inheritable matter. If there be any extraordinary circumstances connected with this lady, it seems to me that they should appear in the report, and not merely have the naked facts stated which I have narrated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move to recommit the bill?

Mr. HOAR. I make that suggestion, but I will not insist upon any disposition as to the mode of proceeding against the wish of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DAVIS. It not infrequently happens that the discretion of the committee is powerfully appealed to in cases of an exceptional character where, of course, it would be conceded that under any pension legislation now existing the beneficiary is not entitled to relief.

As I said, I was not in the city at the time this report was made and I knew nothing about it, not having been present at the meeting of the committee. The bill was reported by the Senator from West Virginia, who is not in his seat.

Mr. PLATT. He is here now.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not observe that he was here. I should prefer for my part that the bill be passed over instead of being recommitted to the committee as if it had not been properly considered.

Mr. HOAR. I do not question but that the case has been thoroughly considered, but I thought perhaps the grounds upon which the committee proceeded might be a little more fully stated in the report. The Senator from West Virginia, who made the report, is now here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote by which the bill was passed and also the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading have been reconsidered. The bill will remain on the Calendar without prejudice.

THOMPSON D. HATFIELD.

The bill (S. 3335) granting a pension to Thompson D. Hatfield was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "month," to add, "this sum to be paid only to the legally appointed guardian of said Thompson D. Hatfield, an insane person, for the purpose of his support and maintenance;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Thompson D. Hatfield, at the rate of $25 a month, this sum to be paid only to the legally appointed guardian of said Thompson D. Hatfield, an insane person, for the purpose of his support and maintenance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 751) for the relief of the estate of J. J. Pulliam, deceased, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STONE of Kentucky, Mr. WILKINSON, and Mr. THOMAS of Wisconsin managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also annouced that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate concerning the statues of Richard Stockton and Philip Kearny, presented by the State of New Jersey.

WAR CLAIMS OF CALIFORNIA, OREGON, AND NEVADA.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) authorizing the Secretary of War to ascertain what amount of money has been expended by the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for military purposes in aid of the Government of the United States during the war of the rebellion. It is a bill unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, merely authorizing an inquiry into the claims of certain States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the pending business may be informally laid aside to enable him to move the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Senator from Oregon to allow me to have a little bill passed for the relief of a postmaster, proposing to pay him $53 on account of loss of postage-stamps by his house being burned up, and which is favorably reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DOLPH. I think this bill will lead to no discussion whatever. It is a short bill, and the Senate will concur in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Texas afterwards.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well.

The bill (S. 3420) authorizing the Secretary of War to ascertain what amount of money has been expended by the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for military purposes in aid of the Government of the United States during the war of the rebellion was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add:

And the Secretary of War shall also report the circumstances and exigencies under which, and the authority by which, such expenditures were made, and what payments have been made on account thereof by the United States; and the money necessary to enable the Secretary of War to comply with the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire how much the last clause of the amendment covers?

Mr. DOLPH. Simply the expenses of the examination. There is a board already appointed who have these accounts under consideration. The circumstances were peculiar.

Mr. DAWES. It covers nothing more than the expense of the inquiry?

Mr. DOLPH. Nothing more.

Mr. DAWES. It does not appropriate money to pay what may be found due?

Mr. DOLPH. Oh, no; nothing of that kind.

Mr. STEWART. It only proposes to pay the expenses which may be incurred in the inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEWART. I move to recommit to the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (S. 2918) to reimburse the State of Nevada for moneys expended on obligations incurred by said State and the Territory of Nevada, and afterwards assumed and paid by said State, in the suppression of the war of the rebellion, and for guarding the overland mail and emigrant route. I will state that the subject-matter is to be investigated under the provisions of the bill just passed, but which does not provide for the payment of the amount found due. I desire to have the bill in the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs. It may be considered at the next session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

M. M. GIBSON.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the bill (H. R. 8012) for the relief of M. M. Gibson.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Postmaster-General to adjust and settle the claim of M. M. Gibson, postmaster at Clio, Tex., for $53.75, on account of loss sustained in the destruction of postage-stamps and stamped paper by fire on the 9th of November, 1884.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM COLLINS.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 793) for the relief of William Collins.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to William Collins $167.80, for a fishery bounty due him as master of the fishing schooner Sarah Franklin, hailing from Castine, Me.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. WEEKS.

Mr. BECK. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 5516) for the relief of John H. Weeks.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to John H. Weeks, of Fayette County, Kentucky, $2,880, being the value of quartermaster's stores taken from him by the United States forces during the late war and appropriated to their use, as found by the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOPHIA B. MOORE.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 3902) for the relief of Sophia B. Moore.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Court of Claims to grant a rehearing in the case of Sophia B. Moore vs. The United States, with full power and jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment for the proceeds of the rosin and turpentine claimed to have been seized by the United States officers at the capture of New Berne, in March, 1862, and belonging to William P. Moore, jr., which rosin and turpentine are claimed to have been taken to Philadelphia, libeled, and sold by the marshal of the eastern district of Pennsylvania, under the direction of the Federal court, and the proceeds thereof deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. C. MARKHAM.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 165) for the relief of H. C. Markham.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 6, to strike out "issue to" and insert "accept the resignation of;" and, in line 7, to strike out "an honorable discharge from the service of the United States" and insert "tendered on March 27, 1863, as of date April 23, 1863;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion resting upon the military record of H. C. Markham, late assistant surgeon Nineteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, and to accept the resignation of said H. C. Markham, tendered on March 27, 1863, as of date April 23, 1863.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

JAMES H. BACON.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1959) for the relief of James H. Bacon.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to suspend and declare null and void the proceedings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Private James H. Bacon, late of Company A, Second Maine Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge from the service, all pay and allowances forfeited by the proceedings of the court-martial to be paid him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to say in reference to that bill that I did not want to object to its passage, but I dissent from the view in regard to the power of Congress to set aside and annul the proceedings of courts-martial.

Mr. HAWLEY subsequently moved to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed; and the motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD THROUGH HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2110) granting the right of way for the construction of a railroad through the Hot Springs reservation, State of Arkansas. I will state that the bill was read on a former occasion when an objection was made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in regard to it. I should like to have the amendments reported from the Committee on Public Lands concurred in and the bill passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator state that the bill was objected to when reached on the Calendar?

Mr. BERRY. Several weeks ago the bill was reached on the Calendar, and after it was read the Senator from Maine asked that the bill might be passed over at that time, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported from the Committee on Public Lands will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 6, line 6, after the word "way," to insert:

And no blasting shall be done on Hot Springs Mountain except as authorized by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 6 the following proviso:

Provided, That this grant shall not be construed to abridge the authority of the Secretary of the Interior over the portion of the reservation included in the right of way.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 7, in the following words:

SEC. 7. That the alignment and profile of the proposed route shall first be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 8, in the following words:

SEC. 8. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add a new section as section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That said company shall cause a map showing the proposed route of its line through the reservation to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and said location shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior before any grading or construction on any part of the line shall be begun, and the right of way shall be lost and forfeited unless the road is completed and in running order within two years after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add a new section as section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That the company or its assignees to whom this right of way is granted shall annually pay to the Government of the United States for the improvement of the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., 3 per cent. of its gross earnings. And Congress hereby reserves the right to at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Public Lands report to strike out the preamble. The preamble will be disagreed to, if there be no objection.

LANDS OF UNITED PEORIAS AND MIAMIES.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8074) to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the provisions of chapter 119 of the acts of 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," are hereby declared to extend to and are made applicable to the Confederated Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw tribes of Indians, and the Western Miami tribe of Indians, now located in the northeastern part of the Indian Territory and to their reservation, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said tribes had not been excepted from the provisions of said act, except as to section 6 of said act, and as otherwise hereinafter provided.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, within ninety days from and after the passage of this act, to cause to be allotted to each and every member of the said Confederated Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw tribes of Indians, and the Western Miami tribe of Indians, upon lists to be furnished him by the chiefs of said tribes, duly approved by them, and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, an allotment of land equal to 200 acres, out of their common reserve, to each person entitled thereto by reason of there being members of said tribes by birth or adoption; all allotments to be selected by the Indians, heads of families selecting for their minor children, and the chiefs of their respective tribes for each orphan child. All differences arising between members of said tribes in making said allotments shall be settled by the chiefs of the respective tribes.

The land so allotted shall not be subject to alienation for twenty-five years from the date of the issuance of patent therefor, and said land so allotted and patented shall be exempt from levy, sale, taxation, or forfeiture for a like period of years. As soon as all the allotments or selections shall have been made as herein provided, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a patent to issue to each and every person so entitled, for his or her allotment, and such patent shall recite in the body thereof, that the land therein described and conveyed shall not be alienated for twenty-five years from the date of said patent, and shall also recite, that such land so allotted and patented is not subject to levy, sale, taxation, or forfeiture for a like period of years, and that any contract or agreement to sell or convey such land or allotments so patented entered into before the expiration of said term of years shall be absolutely null and void.

SEC. 2. That in making allotments under this act no more in the aggregate than 17,083 acres of said reservation shall be allotted to the Miami Indians, nor more than 33,218 acres in the aggregate to the United Peoria Indians; and said amounts shall be treated in making said allotments in all respects as the extent of the reservation of each of said tribes respectively. If, in making said allotments, any difference shall arise between said tribes, all such matters of difference shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. After the allotments therein provided for shall have been completed, the residue of the lands, if any, not allotted, shall be held in common under present title by said United Peorias and Miamies in the proportion that the residue, if any, of each of the said allotments shall bear to the other. And said United Peorias and Miamies shall have power, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to lease for grazing, agricultural, or other purposes from time to time and for any period not exceeding ten years at any one time, all of said residue, or any part thereof, the proceeds or rental to be divided between said tribes in proportion to their respective interests in said residue.

At the expiration of twenty-five years from the date of the passage of this act, all of said remaining or unallotted lands may be equally divided among the members of said tribes, according to their respective interests, or the same may be sold on such terms and conditions as the President and the adult members of said tribe may hereafter mutually agree upon, and the proceeds thereof divided according to ownership as hereinbefore set forth: Provided, That before any division of the land is made, or sale had, that three-fourths of the bona fide adult members of said tribes shall petition the Secretary of the Interior for such division or sale of said land: Provided further, That sections 1 and 2 of this act shall not take effect until the consent thereto of each of said tribes separately shall have been signified by three-fourths of the adult male members thereof, in manner and form satisfactory to the President of the United States.

SEC. 3. That any act or part of acts of Congress heretofore passed that may conflict with the provisions of this act, either as to land or money, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That full jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine what are the just rights at law, or in equity, of those Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw Indians, and of their children, or heirs at law, or legal representatives, who became citizens of the United States, under the provisions of article 28 of the treaty of February 23, 1867, made with the confederated tribes of Peorias, Kaskaskias, Weas, and Piankeshaws in the invested funds and other common property of the said confederated tribes. And the exercise of such jurisdiction shall not be barred by any lapse of time heretofore, nor shall the rights of said Indians be impaired by any ruling or determination upon such rights heretofore made in the Interior Department. Suit may be instituted against the United States in said Court of Claims within twelve months after the passage of this act, but not later, on behalf of said Indians who so became citizens of the United States, their heirs and legal representatives, in the name and style of "The Citizen Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw Indians," in accordance with the practice of said court, for the hearing and determination of such rights at law and in equity as are claimed for said citizen Indians, or any of them, in such suit, which rights or equities arise out of the provisions of said treaty, or any law of the United States relating to the invested funds and common property of said confederated tribes. Said "confederated tribes of Peorias, Kaskaskias, Weas, and Piankeshaws" may be made a party defendant in said suit, on petition in that name to be made such party defendant, to be filed within three months from the date of the bringing of such suit, but the United States, through its proper officers, shall defend said suit on behalf of said Indians, whether or not they shall become parties to the same. Said court shall determine what are the legal and equitable rights and interests of the Indians who separated from the tribes to which they belonged, removed to the Indian Territory, and became citizens of the United States under said treaty, and of the heirs and legal representatives of such of them as are dead, and shall ascertain the value thereof after deducting what has been paid to each of said Indians on account of such invested funds and common property. And such sums shall be paid to the persons who are respectively entitled to the same out of any money or funds held in trust by the United States for and on account of said confederated tribes of Peoria, Kaskaskia, Wea, and Piankeshaw Indians. Out of the funds so found due to said citizen Indians, said Court of Claims may allow a reasonable compensation to the counsel or attorneys of such Indians, to be ratably apportioned upon and paid out of the sums due them respectively; and a like compensation may be made, in the discretion of the court, to the counsel or attorneys of the said confederated tribes, to be paid out of any sums to their credit in the Treasury of the United States, if said confederated tribes become a party defendant to said suit.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to said Court of Claims, upon its request, certified copies of any records, documents, or papers that relate to the rights of any of said Indians involved in such suit.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out, in section 1, line 15, the words "as to section 6 of said act, and;" so as to read:

Except as otherwise hereinafter provided.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. After the word "land," in line 24 of section 1, I move to insert the words "by legal subdivisions;" so as to read:

An allotment of land, by legal subdivisions, equal to 200 acres.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In section 1, line 29, after the word "tribes," I move to insert "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

And the chiefs of their respective tribes, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for each orphan child.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In section 1, line 32, after the word "tribes" I move to insert "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

Shall be settled by the chiefs of the respective tribes, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. After the amendment just adopted I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That before any of the allotments herein provided for shall be made there shall be set apart not to exceed 20 acres in all for school, church, and cemetery purposes, the location of the same to be selected by the chiefs of said tribes, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, in such quantities and at such points as they shall deem best, which together with all improvements now existing or which may hereafter be made by the tribes thereon shall be held as the common property of the respective tribes. If in making the selections as herein provided for the sites of present school buildings should not be retained, then all improvements thereon may be removed. If not removed, then they shall be sold after appraisement by the chiefs of the tribes, the sale to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the proceeds placed to the credit of the proper tribe. If any religious denomination, with the consent of either or both of said tribes, should erect a building for church purposes upon any of the land selected for church use, the said building shall be held as the property of such religious denomination so long as they shall occupy the same for religious or school purposes.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In section 1 of the amendment, line 46, after the word "sell," I move to strike out the word "or" and insert after "convey" the words "or create any lien upon;" so as to read:

And that any contract or agreement to sell, convey, or create any lien upon such land or allotments so patented, entered into before the expiration of said term of years, shall be absolutely null and void.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out the third section of the amendment in the following words:

SEC. 3. That any act or part of acts of Congress heretofore passed that may conflict with the provisions of this act, either as to land or money, are hereby repealed.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Let the subsequent sections be numbered 3 and 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerical change will be made by the clerks. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies, in Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. MORGAN were appointed.

MATHEW H. FULTON.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2710) for the relief of Mathew H. Fulton.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $337.02 to Mathew H. Fulton, postmaster at Bucyrus, Ohio, being the amount of money stolen from the safe and from registered letters in the post-office at Bucyrus on the night of May 9, 1883, and which sum he made good to the claimants from his own means.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator would withhold that motion for one moment. I have been waiting to call up a bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. A short bill?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. MANDERSON. Very well; I shall withhold the motion.

M. S. HELLMAN.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3358) for the relief of M. S. Hellman, of Canyon City, Oregon.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to M. S. Hellman, of Canyon City, Oregon, $5,542.55, the balance due him on a contract of May 23, 1871, with the Quartermaster's Department, for the delivery of grain at Camp Harney; and also $550.72, currency, due him for flour furnished at Camp Harney, under a contract with the Commissary Department, of date of July 5, 1871. All claims for damages held by the Commissary Department against Hellman, by reason of his failure to deliver flour at Camp Warner, as per contract of date of July 5, 1871, are canceled, he having been prevented from complying with such contract by reason of unforeseen and unavoidable accident.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHURCH OF ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to proceed at this time to the consideration of Order of Business 2093, being House bill 1073.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1073) for the relief of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Chattanooga, Tenn. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Rev. Joseph Rademacher, Roman Catholic bishop of Nashville, or his successors in office, in trust for the use and benefit of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Peter and St. Paul of Chattanooga, Tenn., $18,729.09, in full for all the damages claimed by the church, or any person heretofore or hereafter claiming or to claim to represent it, for stone and all other building materials taken and used during the war between the States of 1861 to 1865, by and under the military authority of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Does that come from a committee?

Mr. HARRIS. It is a precise copy of a Senate bill. While the House bill was being read I noticed the reading and compared it with the Senate bill, which was reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and I hold the report in my hand.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the bill (S. 78) for the relief of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Chattanooga, Tenn., which is a copy of the House bill which has just been passed, may be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL subsequently said: There was a House bill passed a moment ago at the instance of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. A Senate bill on the same subject was reported by me from the Committee on Claims. My attention has been called by some other members of the Committee on Claims to some phraseology of the House bill that they think objectionable. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be laid over for the present until we can look into it.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope it will not be laid over. The House bill and the Senate bill are literally the same, the one copied from the other. I have just compared them. Indeed, I compared them when the Secretary was reading the House bill at the desk.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are the bills precisely alike?

Mr. HARRIS. The same precisely with the exception of the name of the bishop, which was amended in the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon can accomplish his purpose by entering a motion to reconsider.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I promise the Senator that I will call it up at an early day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1073) for the relief of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Chattanooga, Tenn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill, the title of which has been just read, was passed. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

LIFE-SAVING STATION ON NANTUCKET ISLAND, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senate to proceed to take up two bills, both relating to the same subject. The first is Order of Business 1968, House bill 8752.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8752) providing for the establishment of an additional life-saving station on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts.

The Committee on Commerce reported an amendment, in line 6, after the word "recommend," to strike out "at a cost not to exceed $5,000;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish an additional life-saving station at such point on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts, as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The anendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-SHIP OFF GREAT ROUND SHOAL, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. HOAR. Now I ask to take up Order of Business 1976, being House bill 10183.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10183) to establish a light-ship off Great Round Shoal, near Nantucket, Mass.

The Committee on Commerce reported the bill with amendments, in line 5, after the name "Nantucket," to strike out the words "the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $60,000," and in line 9, after the word "ship-yards," to insert "and the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated therefor out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be constructed and established a first-class light-ship, with a steam fog-signal, off Great Round Shoal, seacoast of Massachusetts, near Nantucket: Provided, That the construction of said light-ship shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement, and that said light-ship shall be built in American ship-yards, and the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated therefor out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. I move in regard to that bill, and also in regard to the previous one, that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on both bills.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PALMER, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SMYRNA, DEL.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar number 1896, being the bill (S. 2863) to provide for the erection of a public building in the town of Smyrna, Del. The bill was reached at another time, read, considered in Committee of the Whole, and amended, so that I think the question now is on its engrossment and third reading.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2863) to provide for the erection of a public building in the town of Smyrna, Del.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read at length as in Committee of the Whole, and the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE IN PAMLICO SOUND.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will waive that for one moment while I secure the passage of a little bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator from North Carolina feels it important, I will give way to him; but I think we ought to have an executive session.

Mr. RANSOM. I shall be very much obliged to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. MANDERSON. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask to take up Order of Business 1977, House bill 7604.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7604) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at or near Gull Shoal, Pamlico Sound, North Carolina.

The Committee on Commerce reported an amendment, in line 4, after the name "North Carolina," to strike out "at a cost not to exceed $30,000" and to insert "and the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house and fog-signal be established at or near Gull Shoal, Pamlico Sound, North Carolina, and the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT OFF PAMLICO POINT, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. RANSOM. Now I ask for the consideration of Order of Business 1976, House bill 7421, which is of the same character as the other.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7421) for establishing a light off Pamlico Point, North Carolina, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Commerce reported the bill with amendments, in line 5, after the name "North Carolina," to strike out "at a cost not exceeding $25,000;" and at the end of the bill to add "And the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated therefor out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a screw-pile light-house be established on the shoal at or near Pamlico Point, entrance to Pamlico River, Pamlico Sound, in North Carolina, to replace the present light on the shore at Pamlico Point. And the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated therefor out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANSOM. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the two bills just passed, and ask for a conference on each of them.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I suggest that the same conferees be appointed as were appointed on the bills of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will appoint on the two bills last passed as the conferees on the part of the Senate the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. MANDERSON. I now renew my motion.

EXTIRPATION OF YELLOW FEVER.

Mr. CALL. Before that motion is put I will ask the Senator from Nebraska to withdraw it for a moment in order that I may ask unanimous consent to place on the Calendar the joint resolution adversely reported by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, so that it may be considered to-morrow morning with the joint resolution which was reported favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution reported by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, being the joint resolution (S. R. 78) appropriating $100,000 for the prevention and extirpation of yellow fever in the United States, having been indefinitely postponed, that order will be reconsidered, and the resolution will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eleven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 22, 1888, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 21, 1888.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 21, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

UNITED STATES PRISONERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a letter from the United States marshal for the district of Kentucky, inclosing a statement of the amounts due jailors for the support of United States prisoners; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'DONNELL, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, for this day, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MILLIKEN, indefinitely.

To Mr. OWEN, indefinitely.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In regard to the leaves of absence. Can the leaves of absence that are being granted now be revoked at any time?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The House has the power to do it.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. Yesterday my colleague, Mr. THOMPSON, during my temporary absence from the Hall, in addressing the House, made use of the following language, which I will ask the Clerk to read from the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill reported to this House by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, through its chairman, Mr. BELMONT, which, as has been stated by the acting chairman of that committee, Governor McCREARY, was substantially the same as the bill now under consideration, yet was repudiated through the press of San Francisco by my worthy colleague, Mr. MORROW, who was so anxious a few days ago to rush the pending bill through this House without reference or debate, the passage of which, without amendment, as has transpired, would have repealed immediately the restrictive laws now in operation, and opened our ports indefinitely to an influx of Chinese coolies. This was of course an oversight on the part of my esteemed but in that instance overzealous colleague, and I congratulate him as well as our constituency upon the happy escape made from such a public calamity.

Mr. MORROW. I do not believe that my colleague intended to do me an injustice in these remarks, but he did not state my position correctly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that his colleague is not present.

The SPEAKER. He is present; but this is not a matter of privilege. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to make a personal explanation.

Mr. MORROW. The remarks of my colleague misrepresented my position on this question. It is true that some months ago I did state to a correspondent that what was called the Belmont bill was not sufficient to prevent Chinese immigration. That bill has not been reported to this House. There was introduced into this House in April a bill by Mr. BELMONT, but a few days later I introduced one myself, and a few days after that a bill (S. 2854) was introduced in the Senate by Senator STEWART. We had several conferences and compared the three bills and took such provisions from each as we supposed to be necessary to execute the provisions of the treaty, and that bill was the result. The same bill was referred to the Senate committee, and was by myself presented to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House and was adopted, but the bill which was adopted is not the bill introduced by Mr. BELMONT. His bill is H. R. 9534; the substitute bill which we brought to this House is H. R. 10605; and the Senate bill is still another bill.

Now, one word in reference to the matter of this amendment that has been suggested as an important addition to the bill. I think the history of that amendment ought to be placed upon the record of this House. When the Senate bill came over from the Senate I applied to you, Mr. Speaker, for permission to ask to take the bill up and have it passed. I then went to one of the young gentlemen at the desk, Mr. Phillips, and we took the Senate bill and compared it word by word with the House bill. When we reached the final amendment, in reading it over I discovered, as I supposed, a peculiar wording in the amendment. We did not compare this bill with the expectation of finding anything in that particular amendment, but it was with a view of seeing whether or not the Senate bill was identical with the House bill, and was done simply in the line of following the ordinary precaution which lawyers take in the comparison of papers. When we came to the last section I found this peculiar phraseology, and I was led to propose this amendment which is now deemed to be of so much importance.

I did not see my colleague, Mr. McKENNA, before calling up the bill, but I did immediately afterwards see him, and it was agreed to present this amendment. I saw the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Governor McCREARY, on his return from his home. I presented it to him, and if the gentleman were present in the House I should be glad to have his confirmation of a statement of what occurred respecting this amendment; but he is not present, and I deem it improper to attempt to recite what occurred in reference to this amendment. It is sufficient for me to say that upon the meeting of the committee I offered this amendment and it was adopted.

This is the history of it from the beginning to the end. Whatever merit there is in the matter of proposing this amendment, I desire to say that it does not come from the Democratic side of the House. The first section and one or two others were taken from the Belmont bill, as prepared by the State Department.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. I would like to ask the gentleman if Mr. BELMONT'S bill that he refers to does not contain the same features contained in this bill.

Mr. MORROW. The first section and one or two others were taken from the Belmont bill as prepared by the State Department.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. I send to the Clerk's desk an extract from the San Francisco Chronicle, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BELMONT'S BILL—CONGRESSMAN MORROW PICKS IT TO PIECES—A LOOPHOLE FOR THE CHINESE TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF—AMENDMENTS TO THE NEW TREATY UNDER CONSIDERATION BY THE SENATE—THE PRIOR RESIDENCE CLAIM.

[Copyright, 1888, by the California Associated Press.]

WASHINGTON, April 20.

"I would prefer not to express my views concerning Belmont's bill relating to Chinese immigration," said Representative MORROW to a California Associated Press correspondent to-day. "Mr. BELMONT'S effort illustrates very forcibly the vague notions prevailing here as to the proper methods of restriction. I am disposed to think that BELMONT is in favor of doing something to remedy the evils prevailing under the present treaty and law, but he does not wish to go to the extent of absolute exclusion, and hence he has draughted a bill that would be much worse than the present law.

"Take, for instance, his provision relating to return certificates. He requires that a Chinaman shall apply for a return certificate to the collector of the port at the place of his departure at least a month prior to the time when he wishes to leave. The collector is required to investigate the circumstances of the case, and, if the collector decides to issue a permit to return, he shall sign and give to the person applying a certificate containing the number and description which the collector has made of the Chinaman to be returned.

A CHANCE FOR FRAUD.

"This takes place a month before the Chinaman's proposed departure, and of course the practical working of such a law would be that dummies would go to the collector's office and get certificates for their friends in China, and with the certificates would send a description that with care the incoming Chinaman would be made to fit the certificate.

"Under the present law the return certificate is not delivered to the departing Chinaman until he is aboard the ship, so that unless the custom-house officials are dishonest, a Chinaman leaves the country for every certificate issued, but under Belmont's bill a Chinaman may or may not go after he gets his certificate. If he does not go no provision is made for ascertaining the fact, and the Chinaman may go again and again and get certificates, which he can then send to his friends in China, and as Chinamen are nearly all alike a certificate will fit one about as well as another."

Mr. MORROW. That criticism is correct. I moved to amend that by providing as follows: "And if the collector, after hearing proof and investigating all the circumstances of the case, shall decide to issue a certificate of return, he shall at such time and place sign and give to the person applying a certificate containing the number and description last aforesaid." Every error that is pointed out in that article I called attention to, and the amendments were adopted and are now in the Senate bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. Mr. Speaker, I repeat that there has never been an anti-Chinese measure that came before this House from a Democratic source since this Congress met that the gentleman has not criticised.

Mr. MORROW. Yes; and offered amendments to the bills in good faith.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to make a short statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. BYNUM. When the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] asked consent of the House for the consideration of this bill when it first came from the Senate, he took occasion to speak of the importance of the legislation, and during the two or three minutes that he occupied he never once called the attention of the House to the fact that the bill needed amendment. It is certainly a very singular thing that he would urge upon this House the immediate consideration of a measure which he had found faulty, and should assume to himself the exclusive wisdom of amending it, instead of allowing it to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is very strange, I say, that he should ask to have the bill taken up and passed at once when he knew that it was faulty and inadequate for the purpose for which it was designed, and that its passage would leave us without any law at all upon this subject, and at the mercy of the Chinese Government, and that instead of having the bill referred to a committee to be carefully considered and amended, he should assume to be the embodiment of wisdom upon this subject and undertake to make the amendments himself.

Mr. MORROW. When I asked that the Senate bill should be taken up for consideration, if I had attempted to explain the provisions of the bill the Chair would have informed me that the question before the House was not as to the merits of the bill, but as to whether it should be considered or not. With reference to the confidence that I had in my own wisdom on this subject, permit me to say that that confidence is not shaken at all now, because the amendments which I then proposed have all been adopted.

Mr. BYNUM. The gentleman did not propose any amendment until after this bill had been referred to the committee.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. Mr. Speaker, as probably affording some explanation of the great interest taken in this question, I ask the reading of the marked newspaper article which I send to the desk.

Mr. HERMANN. What is the paper?

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, It is a high-tariff paper, and supported General Butler, I believe, in the last Presidential election.

A MEMBER. What is the name of the paper?

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. It is the New York Sun.

The Clerk read as follows:

John hurrahs for Harrison. A great Republican boom overwhelms the laundrymen of San Francisco.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, that has nothing to do with the matter which I have presented to the House, and I object. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Regular order.

J. J. PULLIAM.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill (S. 751) for the relief of the estate of J. J. Pulliam, deceased, with amendments of the Senate thereto. The Senate has disagreed to the House amendments and asked for a conference, and if there be no objection the House will agree to the conference requested.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as the managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. STONE of Kentucky, Mr. WILKINSON, and Mr. THOMAS of Wisconsin.

MARY M. BRIGGS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I desire to present a conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and agree to an amendment as follows: Before the word "pension," where it last occurs, insert the word "widow's;" and the Senate agree to the same.

CARLOS FRENCH,
A. C. THOMPSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
PHILETUS SAWYER,
C. K. DAVIS,
D. TURPIE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. This report was presented two or three days ago and withdrawn, and I wish to make a brief statement with reference to it for the benefit of gentlemen who may not have heard what was said at that time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have read the statement accompanying this report.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. No statement has been prepared.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why not?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, This is the bill which was up the other morning, when the gentleman waived the demand for a written statement; and I at that time made a short explanation, which I desire to repeat now.

Mr. McMILLIN. In view of the gentleman's explanation I shall not insist upon the accompanying statement in this case; but I think that the rule which requires a written explanatory statement to accompany a conference report is so well founded that in the future I shall insist on the enforcement of that rule. The written statement is frequently important in order to explain the action of the two Houses.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. This is a bill granting a pension to Mary M. Briggs. As it came from the Senate, it proposed a pension of $25 a month. The House committee amended it by striking out "$25" and inserting "$12." The claimant was an army nurse; and we sought to put her on an equality with other army nurses whose claims have been before the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It now appears (the fact not having been known at the time to our committee) that this lady is already drawing a pension of $12 a month as the widow of a soldier. But she served as an army nurse during four years—through almost the entire war.

Mr. COX. What is her age?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. She is now sixty-seven years of age.

Mr. COX. Her name is Mary—what?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Mary M. Briggs.

Mr. COX. We will all vote for the bill, if her name is Mary.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. The bill as agreed upon by the committee of conference gives her a pension of $25 a month—$12 as the widow of a soldier and $13 in view of her services during four years as an army nurse. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HERMANN. Has the regular order been demanded?

The SPEAKER. It has been by two gentlemen.

Mr. BURNES. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees; and I ask unanimous consent that reports may be filed with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make be allowed to present them at the Clerk's desk for appropriate reference. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is now on the motion to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

PORT OF DELIVERY AT PORT ANGELES, WASH.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 28) to create a port of delivery at Port Angeles, in the district of Puget Sound, Washington Territory; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES MILLINGER.

ELIJAH W. PENNY.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2261) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM E. PRINCE.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 3608) to grant an increase of pension to William E. Prince; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 11008) granting a pension to John Smith; and

A bill (H. R. 11009) granting a pension to James Calnon.

A. B. CARTER.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11094) granting a pension to A. B. Carter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM FISHER.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11164) for the relief of William Fisher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF A. J. BEALE, DECEASED.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 9098) for the relief of the legal representatives of A. J. Beale, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH WELSH.

Mr. LYNCH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 9975) granting a pension to Joseph Welsh; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ALMIRA J. TOWNER.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10908) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira J. Towner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JENNY BUELL.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10159) granting a pension to Jenny Buell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLARA M. OWEN.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11052) granting a pension to Clara M. Owen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY MURPHY.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3198) granting a pension to Mary Murphy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ABBIE L. HAM.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3197) granting a pension to Abbie L. Ham; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN R. HARRINGTON.

Mr. WEAVER, from the Committee on Patents, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2660) for the relief of John R. Harrington; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10556) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1760) for the relief of the First National Bank, of Portland, Oregon, for money advanced the Oregon Iron Works, the contractor in building the United States revenue cutter Thomas Corwin.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3304) "to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States."

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. 11118) to authorize the construction and operation of a street railway and wagon bridge across the Rio Grande, between the city of El Paso, Tex., and Paso del Norte, Mexico.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 3226) granting the Leavenworth Rapid Transit Railway Company the right to construct and operate its railroad through a portion of the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills; but before that question is put I will yield for a moment to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], who, I understand, wishes to introduce a bill.

MEETINGS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to introduce the bill which I send to the desk; and I ask that a day may be fixed for its consideration.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, yes. It is a bill to change the time of the assemblage of the Congress of the United States, a very important measure, and one which I suppose the House will be willing to consider, whether it be desirable to amend it or not. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to the bill being introduced for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri to yield only for the purpose of having the bill presented for reference.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to ask that a day be fixed for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks also the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object. I do not think we ought to put anything in the way of the more important business of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. Then let the bill be read and referred.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

A bill to change the time of the assemblage of the Congress of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Congress of the United States shall assemble on the first Monday in March in each and every year instead of the first Monday in December in each and every year, as provided for in paragraph 2 of section 4 of the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 2. That this change in the time of the assemblage of the Congress of the United States shall apply to and begin with the Fifty-first Congress of the United States.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take affect from and after its passage.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask the reference of this bill to the Judiciary Committee; and I hope that committee will make an early report upon it.

The bill (H. R. 11240) was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask that the Committee on the Judiciary may have leave to report this bill at any time.

The SPEAKER. That has been objected to, as the Chair understands, by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. HOOKER (to Mr. BLOUNT). Do you object?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly, I do; why not?

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURNES. Pending the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] be allowed to make an explanation. I trust there will be no objection to this request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? The Chair hears none.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Speaker, for four years I was a Union soldier. I have the honor to represent upon this floor many thousands of Union soldiers. It has been my effort throughout the course that I have seen proper to pursue on this floor for the last few days to secure shamefully neglected pension legislation. That has been the object which has actuated me, and that has been the sole purpose of the course that I have taken here. From almost the first day of the present session of Congress the various friends of ex-soldiers of the Union army have been endeavoring to get legislation that was needed, and that was just, in behalf of the Union soldiers. Early in the session resolutions were introduced into this House and referred to the Committee on Rules, fixing a time for the consideration of legislation of this class. We have had no report from that committee upon these resolutions up to this hour. After the introduction of the resolutions in question every Republican member of this House signed a petition addressed to the Committee on Rules, asking that a meeting of that committee should be had and these resolutions considered and reported. No attention whatever has been paid to that petition. I am informed that the Committee on Rules has had no meeting since the month of April last. I am also informed that the Republican members of that committee have time and again requested that a meeting of the committee should be called; but no action has been taken looking to acquiescence in their request.

Mr. Speaker, that committee has failed to report to this House any resolution which provides for the fixing of a time for the consideration of legislation of any class, because, forsooth, and we have the right to presume that is the reason, they dared not do it, for so soon as a report shall be made here fixing a time for the consideration of any legislation an amendment will be at once offered fixing a time for the consideration of pension legislation. Hence there has been no relief, notwithstanding the efforts which have been made, to be obtained from the Committee on Rules.

A few days ago the Committee on Invalid Pensions was called in the regular course of the business of the House. A resolution was reported from that Committee fixing a time for the consideration of this pension legislation, which I am so anxious in behalf of my constituents and the Union soldiers generally of the country to have brought up and considered; but what was the result? By dilatory tactics, by demands for a quorum, insisted upon not on this side of the House but upon the other side, the hour allotted to the committee was frittered away and nothing done. The other side of the House sat in their seats and refused to vote in order that a quorum might not appear. The second day came and the second hour for the consideration of this legislation, and the same tactics were pursued; refusals to vote, no quorum appearing, and then, the hour having expired, the resolution dies and goes upon the Calendar of unfinished business, where it can never be again reached by any possibility during this session of Congress.

On last Friday the other side of the House by an adjournment prevented the evening session fixed for that day in order that the Union soldiers might have the poor benefits that are to be derived from one evening in the week set apart for the consideration of private pension bills.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LYMAN. By this course the responsibility for this shameful failure of pension legislation has been fixed. It is now fixed and emphasized upon the shoulders of those who sit here on the other side of the House by reason of the victories of the Union Army and by the magnanimity of Union soldiers and patriots.

Now, it was thought that a quorum was necessary in order that that simple resolution fixing a day for the consideration of this legislation might pass, and if that were true, I thought it not at all unreasonable that a quorum should be present for the consideration and adoption of such matters as appropriation bills, carrying millions of dollars of the public moneys, and that if a quorum was necessary in the one case it was equally necessary in the other. But, Mr. Speaker, the bill which I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] now desires to bring to the attention of the House, the deficiency appropriation bill, is in line with the class of legislation that I have been seeking to secure action upon in the House. Very many items in that bill are for the benefit of ex-soldiers of the Union, and I am loath, exceedingly loath, to further obstruct the passage of that bill; for so many of these men are to be benefited by its provisions that I might be counted as unfaithful to them, and to their interests, if by any act of mine I should prevent or delay its passage. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, and for this reason alone, I shall not now raise the point of no quorum upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement, simply with a view of answering one point suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, as I think it is unfair to endeavor to shift the responsibility for the failure of the evening session of last Friday for pension bills from that side of the House to this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Iowa says that on Friday last the evening session was lost——

Mr. LYMAN. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa to object to my making a statement?

Mr. LYMAN. I demand the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. A more ungracious thing was never done by a Representative upon this floor.

Mr. LYMAN. All right, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman knows that he himself forced the House to adjourn on pension night.

Mr. LYMAN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill merely for reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER], the Chair understands, also desires to introduce a bill, but the regular order has been demanded. Does the gentleman from Iowa insist upon the demand?

Mr. LYMAN. I have no objection to withdrawing it to enable the gentleman to introduce a bill for reference.

COMMUNICATION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES BETWEEN STATES.

Mr. CRISP, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11241) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MISSISSIPPI CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BUTLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11242) for the relief of the Mississippi Central Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

The motion of Mr. BURNES, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of appropriation bills, was adopted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of appropriation bills, and the Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is before the committee for debate on the fourth section, the time for which has not yet been exhausted.

Mr. BURNES. I will ask how much time remains to each side?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour and thirty-four minutes remain to those having the affirmative of the question and forty-seven minutes to those having the negative.

Mr. BURNES. Then I will suggest to my friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] that he proceed with the consumption of all his time, except that which he proposes to retain for himself.

Mr. DIBBLE. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] charged me to give time to several members of the House out of this one hour and thirty-four minutes, but the members are not present and I do not wish to occupy that time; therefore I will reserve it for one person only.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY].

Mr. SENEY. I would like the House to permit me to continue my remarks for ten minutes beyond the time yielded me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that he may continue his remarks ten minutes beyond the time yielded him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SENEY. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to discuss the question as to the validity or invalidity of French spoliation claims. This has been done ably and learnedly and, perhaps, sufficiently by the gentlemen who have preceded me in this debate, and to follow them in the same line of argument would be of no profit to the House. I prefer to use the time at my disposal in stating some of the reasons why I am unwilling to vote money out of the Treasury to pay the demands which these claimants make against the Government of the United States.

It is not necessary to be learned in the law to understand the nature of these demands. The average mind, having no legal education, will be sufficiently informed as to their nature when it is stated that ninety years ago some American vessels peacefully pursuing legitimate voyages upon the high seas were detained, seized, condemned, and confiscated by authority of the Government of France. The owners of these vessels and those who had cargoes on board and those who held insurance risks on vessel or cargo, or both, when living, claimed that the Government of the United States was, on account of these wrongs upon the part of the French Government, liable to them for their losses, and these claims are still pressed for payment by parties who claim under the original claimants. More than this need not be stated in speaking of the nature of these demands.

From this statement it will be seen that the French spoliation claims are of very long standing. They are not only old, but very old. All law books say that such claims are stale, and if not barred by the lapse of time the obligation to pay is more equitable than legal. It is true, sir, that the Government of the United States has been asked to pay these claims year after year for many years, but instead of paying them or acknowledging in any way the liability, it has always and ever denied it. The claimants have insisted that the Government of the United States is obligated for a consideration received from France to pay these claims. This the United States has always denied. The claimants aver that France has admitted the justice of their claims, and that this admission makes the United States liable for their payment.

The United States Government denies this. We have, then, a plain, square, and well-defined issue between these claimants and the Government, and until this issue is determined against the Government by high judicial authority no money ought to come out of the Treasury for these claimants. It is to be observed that the questions presented in this controversy are of no ordinary character. I would remind the House that the proper solution of these questions depends largely, if not altogether, upon the construction of treaties made with France, the treaty of 1795 with Great Britain, and the proclamation of neutrality by President Washington in 1793.

In addition to these papers we have, bearing more or less upon the question of this liability, several acts of Congress; also the action of the French Government respecting those alleged wrongs. And more than all this, the controversy is seriously complicated by grave questions of maritime and international law. When thinking upon this subject we must bear in mind that the French spoliation claims aggregate many millions of dollars. The report of the Committee on Appropriations, now before me, states that these claims exceed $40,000,000; and it states, also, that the number of vessels seized was 2,300.

In support of this statement the Attorney-General, in his late annual report, tells us that the petitions filed in the Court of Claims in the French spoliation cases number 5,560, representing 2,386 vessels and about $30,000,000.

The House will also bear in mind that the bill now before it proposes to pay $741,606.63 for what happened to 30 of these vessels, and as to the others, 2,356, the amount to be paid on account of their seizure we will not know until further advised by the Court of Claims. But if we can judge of the amount to be paid on account of the 2,356 vessels by the sum the pending bill asks us to pay on account of the 30 vessels, the aggregate amount of these claims will far exceed $40,000,000.

But whatever these claims may aggregate no one doubts that if we pay those provided for in this bill we will have to pay all which the Court of Claims may, from time to time, report. In other words, an appropriation, to-day, to pay a part of these claims means an appropriation, at a subsequent day, to pay the whole. Sir, in a controversy involving such a vast sum of money, and involving questions of law, if not of fact, intricate and difficult to decide, what tribunal, if not the Supreme Court of the United States, ought to hear and determine it?

Sir, the judgment of an inferior court, much less the mere findings of a local court, having no power except to find and report, are not satisfactory in matters of such magnitude and moment. Learned and able as the Court of Claims may be, its findings in the cases reported have no force or value, except as mere opinions of five competent lawyers. Five other lawyers of equal merit and standing might find for the Government. These findings conclude no one, not even the Government, or any one of the claimants. They are without any effect as judicial judgments. In the act of Congress authorizing these findings to be made Congress expressly reserves the right to judge for itself as to the liability of the Government respecting these claims.

The Court of Claims, by the plain words of the act, is constituted an adviser, not a judge. For the information of Congress the Court of Claims finds and reports. It will be seen, therefore, that all of the questions involved in this controversy are still open for Congressional judgment, the same as if no findings had been made in the Claims Court.

While it is true that these findings show the Government to be liable for the payment of some of the French spoliation claims, still, in my judgment, no payment ought to be made, or liability acknowledged, before Congress is further advised by the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States. In my judgment the Congress of 1885 made a great mistake in asking the Court of Claims for advice as to the validity of these claims.

It would have been better for the Government and perhaps better for the claimants if the act had authorized the Court of Claims to render judgments instead of making findings, and provided for an appeal in all cases by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States. Sir, it will do no good to stop at this point and place the blame for this mistake. Yet certain it is that in this legislation these claimants secured an undue advantage over the Government. The interests of the Government seemingly had no attention when the act of 1885 was under consideration in the Senate or the House; but, sir, do you doubt that when the bill was about to be voted into a law the corridors of this Capitol were crowded with the agents and attorneys of these claimants, to aid by their presence, if in no other way, the passage of the bill?

In amending the act of 1885 by authorizing an appeal to the Supreme Court at the instance of either party, it does not follow that all the cases now pending in the Court of Claims will, after findings are made in that court, be transferred by appeal to the Supreme Court. The Attorney-General may determine for the Government and the claimants may determine for themselves as to the cases to be taken to the Supreme Court. The cases made by these claims admit of classification. All claims affected by the same legal principle may be put into one class and those affected by a different principle may constitute another class, and so on until each claim is classified. From these classes selections may be made and appeals may be perfected in these selected cases, and all other cases may await and abide the judgment of the Supreme Court in the appealed cases.

This course no doubt would be entirely satisfactory to all who believe that the Government of the United States has rights respecting these claims which should be passed upon by her highest court, and it ought to be more than satisfactory to these claimants, who, except by the grace of Congress, have no rights against the Government which they can enforce. But more than all this, Congress in opening the door of the Court of Claims to these claimants authorized the Department of Justice to represent the Government in that tribunal, and that Department in a late report tells Congress that, for the protection of the interests of the Government, it ought to provide for an appeal in these claim cases to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Sir, when the vote is taken upon the pending bill we will know whether or not this House will assume a responsibility from which its boldest member might well shrink. These views upon this feature of this dispute were entertained by me in the Committee on the Judiciary, and when I joined my colleagues of the committee in the minority report, and nothing has occurred in the course of this debate to change them in a single particular. Upon the opposite side of this question the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] were pleased to remark that these cases would be out of place in the Supreme Court, because the controversy presents no questions of law.

The only questions involved, say the gentlemen, are political, and with such questions the Supreme Court has nothing to do. My honorable friends differ with the distinguished lawyer at the head of the Department of Justice. The learned Attorney-General in his late report to Congress says that the questions involved in this controversy are of a judicial character, involving difficult questions of maritime and international law, and this is the very reason the Attorney-General assigned for authorizing appeals to the Supreme Court. The gentleman from Maryland says if these cases go to the Supreme Court that the delay to these claimants will be long and wearisome. My reply to this is that it is only the fewest number of the claimants that expect something, and even they would be greatly surprised to receive anything.

The gentleman from Maryland and those acting with him speak for legal representatives in the third and fourth generations. May I not, with equal right, speak for the legal representatives in the fifth generation? No matter that the third and fourth are living and the fifth is not yet born. By the highest test that can be applied to these claimants—the test of merit—neither the third nor the fourth generation of the legal heirs of the original claimants have any advantage over those in the fifth. But there need be no delay. The appeals may be advanced for hearing in the Supreme Court, if not by the existing rules of that court then by the act authorizing the appeals.

Mr. Chairman, if there be among these countless claimants one who is unwilling that the Government shall be heard, in its own defense, before the court of last resort, he can have little if any confidence in the justice of his claim, and to him payment should be denied. In my judgment nothing short of a liability fixed by the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States will satisfy the people that these claims ought to be paid out of their Treasury. It may be, sir, that even then they will be dissatisfied. We must not forget that the people understand that every Congress for eighty years, with two exceptions, refused to give to these claimants relief. Once a bill for their relief passed Congress, but was vetoed by President Polk.

Again Congress passed a bill for their relief and it was vetoed by President Pierce. These claims are not only stale, but, with the lapse of time, they have largely increased in amount. From papers before me I judge that when, eighty years ago, payment was first demanded of the Government these claims did not exceed $5,000,000; now they are $40,000,000. Heretofore all bills before Congress for the payment of these claims limited the appropriation to $5,000,000, and the bills provided that this sum should be distributed pro rata among all of the claimants, and further provided that it should be received in full of all their demands against the Government.

In the light of present surroundings it would seem incredible, nevertheless it is true, that until a recent period these claimants valued their demands at $5,000,000 and for many years labored in season and out of season to get this sum allowed. It may be that those who had to do with these claims when they were new and fresh knew less about them than those whose acquaintance began when they were old and stale. Sir, what the people do not now know about French spoliation claims they surely will be told by the daily press if this Congress appropriates any money to pay them.

Possibly our constituents may not call an appropriation of $40,000,000 to pay these claims an organized raid on the Treasury, or a forcible reach for almost half of the surplus, but we must expect that sooner or later it will occur to them that all of the original claimants and all of their immediate descendants are dead, and then, unless members of Congress are above suspicion, there may be votes to explain. We must not deceive ourselves. In whose hands are these claims, and to whom will the money we appropriate for their payment go? The original claimants and their immediate descendants are in their graves.

The remote kindred of the original claimants, those who perhaps stand in the third and fourth generation from their ancestors, may possibly get a mere trifle of the money. But aside from the cold law of descent their claims are without merit, and they out of the way, possibly, if not probably, their shares would remain in the Treasury as an escheat to the Government of the United States. What proportion of these claims are in the hands of the dealers in stale Government demands, at a nominal cost, or at no cost at all, we will never know unless Congress gives these marauders a picnic inside of the Treasury vaults. [Laughter.]

What per cent. of the appropriation to pay these claims will be distributed among the innumerable horde of agents, helpers, blowers, strikers, comers and goers, who year in and year out for sixty years past have infested this Capitol lobbying for the French spoliation claims? In all seriousness I put the question to the House, what proportion of the money proposed to be appropriated at this time and hereafter, as often as the Court of Claims reports, will reach the hands of those who hold these claims by inheritance from their ancestors?

Will such claimants receive one-fortieth part of the money? Never; no, never. If it were possible to ascertain at this time the proportion of the $40,000,000 which the legal representatives of the original claimants would receive in case this and subsequent appropriations are made, it might be best to pay them that proportion and thus end this long-pending controversy. But of course this can not be done. Shall we then waive all past denials, acknowledge the liability, and appropriate $40,000,000 to pay the claims, when we are morally certain that where the legal heirs of the claimants will receive $1 of the money others to whom the Government is under no obligation whatsoever will receive $40? Sir, we ought not to so deal with great public interests. The money in the Treasury is not under the control of Congress for any such purpose.

On yesterday I received a letter from a constituent stating that he wrote me at the request of a certain claim attorney, from whom he had just received a letter informing him that if Congress would make an appropriation to pay French spoliation claims some money would be coming to him, and urging him to write immediately to his member of Congress to vote for the appropriation. My notion is that this claim attorney has an interest in these spoliation claims many thousand times greater than my constituent.

Sir, there may be other members of the House who have received similar letters containing like requests. If so, it is to be hoped that in the interests of reputable legislation they will not keep secret the fact, but make it known to the House. It is charged that there is a combine in the House to secure the passage of an appropriation to pay these claims, but I do not believe that such a combine exists. Those making this charge call attention to the vote of the House in December last on the resolution to instruct the Committee on Appropriations to put into the general deficiency bill an appropriation for these spoliation claims. When that resolution was under consideration it was stated that what it proposed was without precedent, and to many no doubt it then did, and still doth, appear to be a strange method of legislating. The vote on the passage of the resolution was 163 yeas, nays 84, not voting 77. Of this vote it is better to believe the statement of some of the gentlemen voting in the affirmative that their votes were cast under a mistake, rather than suspect that a combine exists to recognize these claims and order them paid at the Treasury.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] in urging the House to pay these claimants used no mild words in speaking of those who voted to send them to the Claims Court, but now refuse to vote for an appropriation to pay their demands. Listening to the remarks of the honorable gentleman, particularly upon this point, there was reason to believe that he would explain why he was now on the claimant's side of this controversy, when in December last he voted against the resolution directing the Committee on Appropriations to report an appropriation to pay these demands. But no such explanation was made. In the speech of the gentleman, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Tuesday last, he gives the names of all members who voted for and against and of those not voting for the bill to send these claimants to the Claims Court, but for reasons best known to himself he omits all mention of the names of those who voted for or against the House resolution of December last.

It has been said, if not on this floor certainly elsewhere, that the Representatives who talk most and work most for this bill have constituents who expect to receive no small sums of money in case it becomes a law. That there is one member of this House who is a legal representative of one of the original claimants is no secret, and that his vote was cast against the House resolution of December last appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 102.

An additional honor awaits this member when he votes on the question of passing the bill, for it is reliably stated that he will vote nay. There may be other members who are of kin to some of the original claimants, but as to this there are those who are better informed than myself, and then the rules of the House provide for voting in such cases. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] in opening this debate told the House that the bill to pay French spoliation claims is not sectional, for it is for the payment of money due men who lived all along the coast of the thirteen original States from New Hampshire to Georgia, and whose descendants, now scattered throughout the Union, demand its passage.

Mr. Chairman, no one doubts that these descendants may be found in large numbers in the seaboard cities and towns and in the regions around about in the original States, but how many may be found in the twenty-five other States, to say nothing of the eight organized Territories? We hear of a descendant in Ohio, but he does not demand that this bill be passed. The only demand of which I have any knowledge is one made by a claim-attorney, whose residence is far distant from Ohio, and not far distant from the seaboard. [Laughter.]

"Scattered descendants throughout the Union," says the gentleman. I beg to inquire what proportion of these descendants live in that part of the Union which has been made since these alleged losses occurred, or their payment was first demanded from our Government? These scattered descendants—now far away from the Atlantic seaboard—how many of them know or even care about the bill now before the House, and who of them is demanding its passage, or expects to receive any of the money? The bill, sir, may not be sectional as to the States bordering upon our eastern seacoast, but how is it in this respect as to all of the other States? From the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts I judge that he has neither patience with or respect for the minority of the Judiciary Committee, or with, or for, their views respecting French spoliation claims.

Still these views, in my humble judgment, can be successfully maintained even against the ability and learning of so able and learned a gentleman as my friend from Massachusetts. In reading those views in connection with the gentleman's remarks it occurred to me that my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], who wrote those views, had the better understanding of the real merits of this controversy.

Mr. Chairman, the patience and respect of the gentleman from Massachusetts must have been very heavily taxed, and he under very great strain, otherwise he would not have gone so far out of his way as to say that in one particular these views were a contemptibly, unpatriotic, and cowardly admission, which he did not believe would weigh even in the days of this Administration.

Does the gentleman mean to be understood as saying that the present Administration is unpatriotic, cowardly, and contemptible, or worse? If so, my reply is that in devotion to the people's interests no Administration since the foundation of the Government excels that of President Cleveland; and allow me to add that I sincerely believe this to be the judgment of the American people. [Applause.] Do French spoliation claimants believe that this Administration is opposed to the payment of these claims that their friends on this floor call it hard, ugly, and unbecoming names? There is nothing before the House showing whether the present Administration is for or against the validity of these claims, and our responsibility is the same whether we know or do not know.

Mr. Chairman, if there be a place in this controversy for politics the gentleman from Massachusetts pointed it out by assailing an administration that has not only the heartfelt support of every Democrat, but, to a very eminent degree, in integrity and purity of purpose, has the confidence of every fair-minded man in this country. [Applause.]

Sir, he must be an indifferent observer of the course of political events who believes that any political party in this country can stand before the people and defend the payment of $40,000,000 to French spoliation claimants in the face of an honest denial upon the part of the Government for almost a century of all liability. [Applause.] No such a load shall be put on the Democratic party with my consent. [Renewed applause.]

The spotless record of the present Administration ought not to be stained by an affirmative vote of this House on paying French spoliation claims. Democrats in the pending political contest have no scandals to defend against, and they will have none if their Representatives on this floor keep the Treasury doors locked against French spoliation claimants. [Applause.] Sir, if these demands are just, why were they not acknowledged and paid when the Republican party was in control of the Government? Why is it, sir, that French spoliation claims met with no favor under the Republican administrations of Lincoln, Grant, Johnson, Hayes, Garfield, or Arthur? Surely the gentlemen who take the lead in advocating their payment at this time ought to be able to tell the House and the country why, during the twenty-four years rule of these six Republican Presidents, no French spoliation claimant was allowed to get within sight of the public Treasury?

Sir, if we had no surplus in the Treasury the French spoliation claims would not be pressed upon the House at a time when the thermometer stands at 90 in the shade. If a tax for their payment was to be levied upon the people the measure would have no disinterested advocates.

Impose upon some articles of imports or upon some articles of our own production the $40,000,000 which is demanded from the Government in satisfaction of these claims, and how many votes would the measure have in this House? In my judgment not one. Sir, if the House would not levy a direct tax upon the people, or upon articles they use or consume, to pay these claims, ought money raised by such taxation now in the Treasury be appropriated for their payment?

There is but one answer to this question. Sir, the Treasury surplus belongs to the people. Notwithstanding this money is out of their hands and for the time being at the disposal of Congress, still it is the money of the people. Taxation took it from their pockets to pay what the Government says it owes and not to pay what the Government says it does not owe. French spoliation claims ninety years ago, when their merits were better understood than they are or can be at this day, the Government refused to acknowledge their justice, and since Congress again and again refused to appropriate money for their payment, and by these repeated refusals said to these claimants and said to the people of this country and to the French Government that they are unjust demands against the Government of the United States.

Will this House say that it is wiser and better informed respecting these claims than were those who occupied seats upon this floor in all the years which are behind us, and that they in disputing the liability of the Government acted wrong, and that we in acknowledging their validity would do right? We are nearing the close of a ten hours' debate respecting these claims, and all that has been said—ably and learnedly said—has put no mind in shape to decide intelligently and understandingly the grave questions upon which the liability of the Government depends. Such questions can not be satisfactorily determined in the heat of a legislative debate. In the more cool and considerate deliberations of a court even and exact justice is done. What we need before we commit the Government to the payment of French spoliation claims is judicial wisdom as to the disputed question of liability. No legislative wisdom can enlighten our judgments upon this point.

The liability of the Government upon these claims has been denied since the day they originated, now near ninety years ago. This great lapse of time might well be used as a complete bar to legislative relief. Between individuals a few years bar judicial relief upon all obligations. Against these claimants time, perhaps, ought not to be used in bar of their rights. Let time be waived. They insist, in effect, that the Court of Claims shall determine the liability of the Government, while those acting in the interest of the Government more than in the interest of the claimants insist that the liability shall be determined by the Supreme Court of the United States. Into the Supreme Court these claimants refuse to go, and for this refusal, no matter for what reason, Congress ought not to appropriate a dollar for the payment of their claims.

Mr. Chairman, we hear and read of schemes for emptying the Treasury of its surplus, but what scheme in audacity is equal to the scheme of the French spoliation claimants? Why, sir, look at their demands. Upon their face may be seen one veto by one President and another veto by another President. Read the Congressional debates for seventy-five years past and learn how often Congress has refused to have anything to do with French spoliation claims. Before us in plain view is the refusal of these claimants to submit their demands to the judgment of our highest judicial tribunal. What, then, ought this Congress to do? Send these claimants to the United States Treasurer with an order for $40,000,000? They ask the House to do this. What audacity, what cheek!

Three weeks ago this House, in response to an imperative demand of the people, voted to reduce taxation $80,000,000 a year. To-day it is proposed by the friends of this bill to put on the people a tax burden of $40,000,000 to pay questionable, if not invalid, demands made upon the Government. Those of us who are under pledge to vote no money out of the Treasury except to meet the economical wants of the Government must be careful of the record we make on French spoliation claims. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], always eloquent, but never more eloquent than when speaking for these claimants, tells the House that the Government did in the long, long ago acknowledge the justice of these demands, and upon this assumption, to my mind the sheerest of assumptions, he, in touching and feeling words, appeals to the House to empty the Treasury into the pockets of these claimants.

Will my honorable friend permit me to remind him that whether or not the Government has acknowledged the justice of these demands or in any way obligated itself to pay them are matters of dispute between the Government and these claimants, and that upon these points nothing is to be assumed but everything is to be proven. The loose sayings or doings of diplomats make no binding acknowledgment or obligation.

Has the Congress of the United States by any enactment, with or without executive approval, acknowledged the liability or obligated the Government to pay these demands? No one so pretends. Is the acknowledgment or obligation to be found in intentional words in any treaty to which our Government is a party? The Government says not. How, then, is the Government obligated to these claimants?

Sir, we must look at the matters before us in the light of to-day, and not amid the surroundings of fifty or eighty years ago. Congress, by the act of 1885, put the executive department of the Government—which the gentleman from Kentucky as well as myself believes to be wise and pure and upright—between the Treasury and these claimants, and now through the law-advising head of that department we have the information, for such it is in effect, that the Court of Claims in finding for the claimants did wrong, and that this wrong can be righted in no other way than by authorizing appeals to the Supreme Court and refusing payment to all claimants until the disputed questions are determined in this appellate court.

The question, then, which confronts us is not whether these claims are just or unjust, but whether we have care enough for the interests of the people as to heed the disinterested opinion of their legal adviser, the Attorney-General of the United States, who tells the Congress to make no payments upon them at this time, but, instead, authorize the Supreme Court to judicially ascertain whether they are valid or invalid demands against the Government. But to all this the gentleman from Kentucky says no. The recommendation of the law arm of the Government respecting this legal dispute the gentleman puts under his feet. Clay, Webster, Clayton, Cushing, and Sumner, says the gentleman, believed these demands to be just, and their belief is my belief, says my friend; and to the same effect speaks the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. That these men were gifted and great and commanding in public affairs in their day it gives me pleasure to state; yet it is a most significant fact, and I would commend it to the thoughtful consideration of my friends from Kentucky and Maine, that they were unable to impress the opinions they held as to French spoliation claims either upon Presidents, or Congresses, or upon any considerable number of their contemporaries.

But it may be said, indeed it is said, by the advocates of these claims that a refusal upon the part of Congress to appropriate money to pay them would be an act of repudiation upon the part of the Government. Sir, this is beggary, but it is a part of the claimants' side of this controversy. Upon the opposite side it may be said that as long as the Government disputes its liability and as long as these claimants are unwilling to go into the Supreme Court of the United States to have the question of liability determined there is no repudiation of these claims. When the highest judicial tribunal in our land shall adjudge the Government of the United States liable for the payment of French spoliation claims, then the question may be more thoughtfully considered than it can be at this time whether the duty of the Government with respect to these claims may not be fully and honorably discharged by paying such of them as may be in the hands of the legal representatives of the original claimants and refusing to pay those held by purchase or otherwise for mere speculative purposes.

Mr. Chairman, for the legislation of this House the Democratic party is responsible to the country. As an humble and unpretending member of that party I desire to say to my fellow-members upon this floor that in my deliberate judgment the people are in no temper to stant the kind of legislation proposed by this bill. At no time in the past has our party been as strong in the confidence of the people as it is ad this hour. This confidence we must not abuse.

If we do our part the people will do theirs, and a triumphant victory awaits us in the contest before us. But, sir, if this Democratic House opens the doors of the Government Treasury to let in the hungry and greedy horde known to the country as French spoliation claimants to take and carry away forty millions of money, it is my humble belief that the Democratic party will meet with rebuke at the polls in November. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has been extended for five minutes, and a similar request will be granted on the other side.

STATUES OF RICHARD STOCKTON AND PHILIP KEARNY.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a resolution—

That the thanks of Congress be presented to the governor, and through him to the people, of New Jersey for the statues of Richard Stockton and Philip Kearny, whose names are so honorably identified with the history of the State and of the United States.

The committee resumed its session.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], in his remarks in support of this proposed appropriation, stated the ground upon which these claims are based so briefly and so clearly that in order that we may exactly appreciate the question before us I desire to read from them, at page 9750 of the RECORD:

By the treaty of 1801 the United States, for a valuable consideration, relieved France from whatever obligations she was under to pay American citizens for spoliations of their property, and in doing so she equitably assumed such obligation on the part of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the whole ground of argument in support of these claims is summed up in that statement. If it is true that the Government of the United States did for a valuable consideration release France from the obligations that that country was under to American citizens, then in doing so this Government equitably assumed the payment of the obligation so released, and there is a basis for the claim made upon the Treasury of the United States at this time, no matter how long ago this treaty may have been negotiated, nor however many different opinions there may have been expressed as to the justice of these claims. After all, this House is called upon to determine whether or not the Government of the United States did release France from certain claims of American citizens and was in consideration thereof itself relieved from certain demands in favor of France.

It is entirely obvious that this question is to be determined solely by consideration of the terms of the treaty made in 1801, and that it is entirely useless in ascertaining the justness of these claims against the Government of the United States to consider at all whether or not there had been contentions between the governments of the two countries in regard to these claims prior to the treaty.

So long as the claims remain claims against the French Government there is no pretext of liability of the United States Government. It is always to be remembered that these claims originated against another government and are asserted and can only be sustained against the American Government by showing that it used them as the consideration for its release from claims against it. Until it is shown that these claims as against the French Government have been discharged by the act of the United States Government and that they were the consideration of a release of claim against the latter government there is no basis for a demand upon the part of the owners of these claims against it. Until these two points are established it is immaterial to consider the merits or amount of the claims as against France.

It is for the claimants to show these two facts as a preliminary to the consideration of any other question relating to these claims. The treaty itself and the proceedings relating to the ratification of it furnish the best, if not the only, material evidence upon this subject. The instructions to and reports of the negotiators may be referred to to explain any ambiguity in the treaty, but can furnish no other aid in determining whether these facts existed. Neither are the subsequent acts of different branches of our Government of any importance, except for the same purpose. These claims as against our Government are dependent solely upon the treaty of 1801.

Therefore, to determine these questions, and because I desire to do exact justice to the people interested in them, I have taken the time to look up a little of the history of these claims. I would first call the attention of the House to the instructions which were given to the ministers plenipotentiary by the then Secretary of State, Mr. Pickering.

American State Papers, volume 2, page 302:

At the opening of the negotiation you will inform the French ministers that the United States expect from France, as an indispensable condition of the treaty, a stipulation to make the citizens of the United States full compensation for all losses and damages which they shall have sustained by reason of irregular or illegal captures or condemnations of their vessels and other property, under color of authority or commissions from the French Republic or its agents. And all captures or condemnations are deemed irregular or illegal when contrary to the law of nations generally received and acknowledged in Europe, and to the stipulations in the treaty of amity and commerce of the 6th of February, 1778, fairly and ingenuously interpreted, while that treaty remained in force.

At page 303, Mr. Pickering, further instructing, writes:

Claims may be presented to the board during two years, commencing with the day on which the commissioners shall first assemble to proceed to business; and in particular cases, in which it shall appear to them reasonable and just, they may extend the time of receiving claims to any reasonable term after the expiration of the two years.

All sums which the board may award to American claimants France should stipulate to pay in gold and silver, without any deduction, at such place or places, and at such time or times, as the commissioners shall appoint. The awards should comprehend a reasonable allowance of interest on the amount of the original losses and damages, or, instead of prompt payment, the whole may constitute a transferable capital, bearing interest until the debt be discharged.

The board should also take cognizance of the claims which may be presented to them by American citizens for merchandise or other property seized by the French in their own ports or elsewhere, and not comprehended under the head of captures; and for their vessels arbitrarily and unreasonably detained in French ports, and for the losses and damages thereby sustained, the board should award equitable compensations to be paid in the manner prescribed in the case of captures.

The claims of the United States, as distinguished from those of their citizens, for injuries received from the French Republic, or its citizens, should be submitted to the same board; and whatever sums they award, France should stipulate to pay, in the manner before mentioned in the case of captures.

As the French Government have heretofore complained of infringements of the treaty of amity and commerce by the United States, or their citizens, all claims for injuries thereby occasioned to France, or its citizens, are to be submitted to the same board; and whatever damages they award will be allowed by the United States, and deducted from the sums awarded to be paid by France.

If, however, the French Government should desire to waive its national claims, you may do the like on the part of the United States. Doubtless the claims of the latter would exceed those of the former; but to avoid multiplying subjects of dispute, and because national claims may probably be less definite than those of individuals, and consequently more difficult to adjust, national claims may, on both sides, be relinquished.

All claims for sums due to American citizens, by contracts with the French Government or its agents, which may be presented to the board, France should stipulate to pay within the shortest periods possible to obtain, with interest, at the rate agreed on; or, if no agreement about interest appears, then at the rate to be fixed by the board and from the time when the sums were respectively payable by contract. This also may be in transferable stock.

Acting under these instructions, our ministers went to Paris and entered upon these negotiations. Here are some fifty pages of fine print showing what occurred between the negotiators for the two countries; and they finally reached this result, as reported by our negotiators to the Secretary of State:

It only remained for the undersigned [our ministers] to quit France, leaving the United States involved in a contest, and, according to appearances, soon alone in a contest, which it might be as difficult for them to relinquish with honor as to pursue with a prospect of advantage; or else to propose a temporary arrangement, reserving for a definite adjustment points which could not then be satisfactorily settled, and providing in the mean time against a state of things from which neither party could profit. They elected the latter, and the result has been the signature of a convention.—American State Papers, volume, 2 page 343.

In other words, after every expedient that could be devised by the representatives of the United States to effect a settlement of the claims for spoliations had been exhausted, they were compelled to give up the hope of ever reaching a treaty which should cover the complicated claims against this Government, and of this Government as representing its citizens, against France, and accordingly we find that they made the treaty of 1801.

Article II of that treaty is as follows:

ART. II. The ministers plenipotentiary of the two parties not being able to agree, at present, respecting the treaty of alliance of the 6th of February, 1778, the treaty of amity and commerce of the same date, and the convention of the 14th of November, 1788, nor upon the indemnities mutually due or claimed, the parties will negotiate further on these subjects at a convenient time, and until they may have agreed upon these points the said treaties and conventions shall have no operation, and the relations of the two countries shall be regulated as follows.

Its effect is open to no dispute, and amounts to an agreement that these respective claims should be laid aside for further negotiations and for settlement by a treaty to be thereafter made between the two countries; and that these claims on our side so deferred were solely the spoliation claims is obvious from the fact that in Article V of the treaty, which is as follows:

ART. V. The debts contracted by one of the two nations with individuals of the other, or by the individuals of one with the individuals of the other, shall be paid, or the payment may be prosecuted in the same manner as if there had been no misunderstanding between the two States. But this clause shall not extend to indemnities claimed on account of captures or confiscations (American State Papers, volume 2, page 296);

It is agreed that claims other than for spoliation "shall be laid in the same manner as if there had been no misunderstanding between the two States; but this clause shall not extend to indemnities claimed on account of captures or confiscations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more in which to conclude my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for two minutes more to conclude his remarks without having it charged to the time for debate to the respective sides. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BACON. That treaty was transmitted to the Senate of the United States by the President with the following message:

[Executive Journal, volume 1, page 359.]

Gentlemen of the Senate:

I transmit to the Senate, for their consideration and decision, a convention, both in English and French, between the United States of America and the French Republic, signed at Paris on the 30th day of September last by the respective plenipotentiaries of the two powers. I also transmit to the Senate three manuscript volumes containing the journal of our envoys.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, December 15, 1800.

After discussion running through several sessions the Senate adopted by a vote of yeas 22, nays 9, the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That they do consent to and advise the ratification of the convention between the French Republic and the United States of America, made at Paris, the 8th day of Vendemiaire, of the 9th year of the French Republic; the 30th day of September, anno Domini, 1800.

Provided, The second article be expunged, and that the following article be added or inserted:

It is agreed, that the present convention shall be in force for the term of eight years, from the time of the exchange of the ratifications.

After this resolution was adopted the convention as thus changed was then submitted to the French Government, and the First Consul returned it to the President of the United States with the statement that the Government of France accepted and ratified the convention with the retrenchment of Article II, well understanding by this retrenchment that the two states renounced their respective pretensions which were the object of the aforesaid article.

Because of that peculiar phraseology the President of the United States again submitted the treaty to the Senate, and he did so with this message:

Gentlemen of the Senate:

Early in the last month I received the ratification by the First Consul of France of the convention between the United States and that nation. His ratification not being pure and simple in the ordinary form, I have thought it my duty, in order to avoid all misconceptions, to ask a second advice and consent of the Senate before I give it the last sanction by proclaiming it to be a law of the land.

TH. JEFFERSON.

DECEMBER 11, 1801.

Thereupon the Senate of the United States having taken the message under consideration adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States consider the convention between the United States and the French Republic as fully ratified, and therefore return the same to the President of the United States for the usual promulgation.

Yeas 22, nays 4.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that while the Senate in the first case consented to and advised the ratification of the convention as amended by it in the other case it asserted that the ratification was complete, thus treating the parenthetical statement of the First Consul—of his understanding of the effect of the ratification—as being a matter which was not in the treaty, which had not been settled in the negotiations, and therefore as not taking away from the force of the ratification.

As a result of these proceedings there was no clause in the treaty of 1801 by which the French Government released the United States from claims which the French Government or its citizens might have against it, nor was there any provision by which the United States released the French Government from claims made against it by citizens of the United States.

Now, as a matter of legal construction of those documents and resolutions, one of two things must be true: Either there was no ratification of this treaty, or else there was no convention between the two governments which waived the claims of citizens of the Government of the United States against France, and in either event the citizens of the United States have not been deprived of any right which they had, nor has the Government of the United States received any consideration for such an assumption of responsibility as is now sought to be charged upon it.

Mr. Chairman, there remains after an examination of these papers no ambiguity in their language or their meaning, to explain which we can safely refer to the subsequent negotiations or to reports of Congressional committees or to the opinions of eminent public men. Upon their face it is entirely plain that there is no foundation to be found in them in support of the excellent and complete statement of the cause he was advocating made by the gentleman from Maine, to wit:

By the treaty of 1801, the United States for a valuable consideration released France from whatever obligations she was under to pay American citizens for spoliations.

The only basis upon which the liability of the Government is asserted appears upon an examination of the original papers not to exist. This House, even with a surplus in the Treasury, can not, because their claims are large, because some of our citizens suffered unjustly in the past, because of any feeling of sympathy for the sufferers, or because of opinions favorable to their claims expressed by eminent men in the past, after what examination and under what circumstances we do not know, take from the Treasury a sum of money and pay it to persons worthy or unworthy, but not creditors of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that this Government is slow, exceedingly slow at times, in paying just claims against it. I favor at all times a speedy settlement and payment of every just demand due from it. But it is never to be forgotten nor overlooked that the money in the Treasury of the United States is the property of all its citizens, each having an undivided but beneficial interest in every dollar of it, and that the representative members of this House have no moral right to take away that interest, small though it be, from any citizen and bestow it upon any or all others.

I regret, sir, that I am compelled by these ideas of my right and duty, and by the conclusion I am forced to by an examination of the treaty documents which form the basis upon which these claims are rested, that there is no rule of law, equity, or natural justice which sustains them as valid debts against the Government, to vote against the passage of a bill for the payment of a part of these old and long-pressed claims.

I regret it the more, sir, because these claimants have been led by vain hopes, encouraged by careless legislation, and probably careless legislators, to carry on a long and expensive struggle to get these claims paid.

There is, however, no other vote which seems to me consonant with the discharge of the duty and obligation to the whole people which is imposed upon this House and its members, and it is to be hoped that it will be emphatic enough to put an end forever to this attempt to get money from the Treasury.

Mr. BURNES. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, there were two objections to the bill reported by the minority of the committee for the disposition of these claims, and the discussion seems to have rested finally upon those two points. The first point is that those cases which have been already reported to Congress are not provided for by the bill. That is an error. The bill itself as reported provides that the Court of Claims may, in those cases already reported to Congress, render final judgment against the Government, they, like the others, being subject to the right of appeal.

The other contention is that these cases are not to be advanced upon the docket, and that, consequently, serious delay will occur. I propose to amend that bill in conformity with the recommendations of the minority of the Judiciary Committee, so as to provide that it shall be the duty of the Supreme Court of the United States to advance the hearing of all such appeals so that every case that may be appealed, either by the Government or by the claimants, shall be advanced and be disposed of within six or eight weeks after it gets upon the docket.

There is one other point that I want to present. It is said that this is a political question, and that the right of appeal to the Supreme Court will not put that court in possession of these cases so that they will be adjudicated, because it will be a political rather than a judicial question.

This, of course, is denied; but grant that it be true; grant that this is a political question and that the Supreme Court should decline to adjudicate the question at all, what would be the effect? For want of jurisdiction these cases would be dismissed from the Supreme Court. Then how would the claimants stand? They would stand before the Congress of the United States, fortified by the final judgment rather than the report of the only court which could pass upon these claims. So that, in either aspect of the case, the remedy sought to be afforded by the Judiciary Committee, instead of weakening the case, puts these parties in possession of a final judgment against the Government of the United States if they should be dismissed from the Supreme Court; and to that extent their case would be strengthened.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. DIBBLE. For how much time?

The CHAIRMAN. For one hour and thirty-four minutes, unless, on account of the extension of the time upon the other side of the question, a corresponding extension of time be made.

Mr. DIBBLE. How much time was covered by the extension on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. As only nine minutes intervene before the coming up of the special order fixed for to-day, I submit to the committee whether it is worth while for me to proceed now. I am perfectly willing to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] who has addressed the committee this morning stated in the opening of his propositions that there were two issues involved in this debate—one whether the United States received consideration for the surrender of these claims to France, and the other whether France had admitted them. I had supposed the gentleman would go on and discuss those propositions; but instead of that, the points which he has raised have nothing to do, I submit, with the questions which we have to decide. He has said the claims are stale. Can the statute of limitations be pleaded by the Government of the United States with dignity against its duty, if the payment of these claims is a duty? If the claims are just, their venerable age is no disadvantage, because these claimants could not sue their sovereign, the Government. The law maxim is that to the vigilant, and not to the sleeping, is the assistance of the law rendered. These claimants have not been sleeping; but they have had no tribunal which could adjudicate their claims against the Government.

The truth is, Mr. Chairman, I deny the assumption of the gentleman from Ohio that he represents the United States, and, for the United States, is authorized to deny consideration for the surrender of the claims, and to deny the admission of their validity by France. I claim, in common with every advocate of the payment of these claims upon the floor, that when we take them up for examination we also represent the sovereign people of the United States. We do not stand here to represent antagonists of the Government We come here to join with the gentleman for the purpose of determining, upon deliberation and on behalf of the Government as the representatives of the sovereign people—as the political power of the Government—what is the duty of the Government to its own citizens who come here and say they have a grievance which the Government should satisfy.

I represent no claimants. I had the honor to introduce the resolution which the gentleman criticised. I am no attorney for any claimant. I represent none of them. I stand here simply as one of the representatives of the people; and I claim that this is the tribunal to settle this vexed and long-pending question. There are difficulties in the settlement of issues like these in a body like the present. This body, even through its committees, is not well constituted to go into the details of every individual case, to find out whether a particular ship was an American ship, what vessel seized it, where it was condemned, together with the value and ownership of the ship and the cargo. These are matters which it would be hard to decide with the machinery of this body; and being decided on ex parte testimony by our committees, the decision might be in some cases erroneously against the Government. But we have done with these claims what supplies that deficiency. We have called to our assistance the Court of Claims to settle all these facts. We provided that the Attorney-General of the United States, with his able assistants, should go into that court and represent the Government as if the Government were sued; and the claimants have been there with their counsel. Under the rules of evidence the facts have been sifted and are now presented to us here.

It may be said that those facts should be sifted by the Supreme Court of the United States. I contend, first, that, so far as the Supreme Court of the United States is concerned, it will not take cognizance of evidence or review the facts. It will only take cognizance of the questions of law. The best security which any system of jurisprudence can provide has been provided here against the success of fraudulent and unfounded claims. Both sides are represented, and can object to the evidence, in the Court of Claims.

But even if the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] should prevail, and these cases should be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States they would go there simply upon the facts as found by the Court of Claims, and without the evidence on which the finding as to those facts is based. When the Court of Claims was established there was a provision in the statute that there should be an appeal to the United States Supreme Court; that then the cases should be certified by the Treasury Department and reported by that Department to Congress in the estimates, a discretion being left with the Treasury Department as to the time of that report.

What did the Supreme Court do in the case of Gordon vs. The United States? Why, they dismissed the first appeal for want of jurisdiction on the ground that the Supreme Court, a co-ordinate branch of the Government, would not render a judgment if it was to be reviewed by anybody, and declined to render judgment which required a subsequent law to provide an appropriation to carry it out. What was the result? The Congress of the United States amended the law. They struck out that section which might render the judgment nugatory. They provided that the final judgment should go into the appropriation bill; and the Supreme Court of the United States adopted a set of rules to govern them in that class of appeals, and took cognizance of them; and among those rules is the rule that the Court of Claims must not send any of the evidence to the Supreme Court; that they will only review the errors at law; that the matters of fact they will take to be as the Court of Claims finds them; and where a record is sent up which includes the evidence the Supreme Court of the United States sends it back for amendment. They require of the Court of Claims simply the findings of fact, and on these findings of fact they review the law.

I cite this, Mr Chairman, to show that the Supreme Court of the United States will not undertake under its rules, and that it is not its function, to go down into the matters of fact and sift out the claims; and that the Court of Claims, with both sides present, is the proper tribunal of the Government for that purpose; and, so far as that part is concerned, it is already accomplished, and an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States will not change it.

The opinion of Chief-Justice Taney, in the Court of Claims case, Gordon vs. United States, where the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal for want of jurisdiction, contains the following, namely:

> Nor can Congress authorize or require this court to express an opinion on a case where its judicial power could not be exercised and where its judgment would not be final and conclusive upon the rights of the parties and process of execution awarded to carry it into effect. * * * And whether the appropriation will be made or not will depend upon the majority of each House. The real and ultimate judicial power will therefore be exercised by the legislative department, and not by that department to which the Constitution has confided it.

After Congress had stricken out the section of the Court of Claims act. the Supreme Court exercised jurisdiction on appeal as to matters of law only; and provided by rule as to findings of fact, as follows:

> The facts so found are to be the ultimate facts or propositions which the evidence shall establish, in the nature of a special verdict, and not the evidence on which these ultimate facts are founded. (Rules December term, 1865, 3 Wall., vii.)

The CHAIRMAN. Under the previous order of the House, the committee must now arise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the general deficiency bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

PRESENTATION OF STATUES, NEW JERSEY.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order fixed for to-day at 2 o'clock.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 21st day of August, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, be set apart for the consideration of the resolutions accepting two statues from the State of New Jersey.

Mr. PHELPS. With the consent of the House, I will call up the Senate concurrent resolutions.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House resolution will be laid aside and the Senate resolutions taken up for consideration.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to the governor and through him to the people of New Jersey for the statues of Richard Stockton and Philip Kearny, whose names are so honorably identified with the history of the State and of the United States.

Resolved, That these works of art are accepted in the name of the nation and assigned places in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, already set aside by act of Congress for statues of eminent citizens, and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the governor of New Jersey.

Mr. PHELPS. In response to the invitation of 1864, New Jersey to-day tenders to Congress the statues of Richard Stockton and Philip Kearny. They are two of her citizens who are illustrious for their historic renown, which was acquired by the one in the civil service and by the other in the military service of his country. As you may imagine, she looked long at the line of heroes that have illustrated her history before she could call out from it the fortunate two who shall for all time represent the Commonwealth of New Jersey at the Capitol. She had essayed in vain to make the selection had she not determined to choose a statesman and a soldier, a citizen of the distant past and a citizen almost of the immediate present, that these marble figures might tell at the first glance that the sons of New Jersey at all periods and in all callings had but one supreme motive—the welfare of their country.

Richard Stockton, the statesman, was born at Princeton in 1730, of the earliest and best New Jersey lineage. He received the best of academic and collegiate educations; he pursued the profession of the law and became the head of the New Jersey bar. For personal improvement he spent two years in Great Britain, and received there the distinguished attention his disposition and talents entitled him to. He was presented to the King in London and consulted there with Rockingham, Chatham, and other good friends of his distant home. Edinborough gave him the freedom of the city, and in Dublin he gave the Irish that sympathy his countrymen at this distant day still feel for that unfortunate Ireland. Upon his return in 1768, he was appointed a member of the King's council, and six years afterwards one of the judges of His Majesty's supreme court. In June, 1776, he was elected by the provincial congress of New Jersey to be one of its representatives in the General Congress then sitting at Philadelphia. As such representative he signed the Declaration of Independence. In September the Legislature, in selecting a governor, divided its suffrages between him and William Livingston. Upon Stockton's withdrawal from that contest, he was elected a few months afterwards chief-justice. Before assuming these duties he visited the Congressional army as one of a Congressional committee on investigation intrusted with extraordinary powers, which were wisely used. Returning to his home to superintend the removal of his family, whose safety was threatened by the approach of the British army, he was himself captured. He was imprisoned in Amboy and New York under circumstances of such cruelty that his health was lost. After his release, which was made the concernment of General Washington by a special resolution of Congress, he retired to the ruins of his home at Princeton a broken man, and died there aged fifty years.

Philip Kearny, the soldier, was born in New York in 1814. He received a fair education, and when of age entered the Army as a second lieutenant of dragoons. He fought on the frontier with the Indians; he was sent to Europe to report on French tactics, and fought the Algerines so well as to win the decoration of the Legion of Honor. Returning, he went to the Mexican war; he was made captain in 1846 for gallantry at Contreras and Churubusco; he was breveted major. He pursued the flying enemy into the city of Mexico, and was the first to enter its gates. In accomplishing his escape he lost his left arm. Afterwards he rendered service in California, and is entitled to a large share of the credit of adding that territory to our national domain. He went to Europe, continued his studies, and served in the Italian war in 1859. When the civil war broke out he came back, and May 17, 1861, took command of a New Jersey brigade. His promotion was rapid, won by gallantry in many a familiar field—Williamsburgh, Fair Oaks, Centreville. He was a major-general at Warrenton Junction. At Chantilly, telling orderly and aids to keep back, he rode forward himself to see the position and was killed September 1, 1862, only forty-eight years old.

Could two characters have been more different, or two careers? Contemplation and action. Peace and war. Stockton was the model of a statesman; fond of study and contemplation; a man fitted at every point for the duties of peaceful society. Kearny was the model of a soldier, fond of excitement and action, a man fitted at every point for the stern duties of war. Their supreme devotion to patriotic duty was the only trait in common. They were two most dissimilar types of character, and their grouping in equal honor on this occasion teaches as another lesson that an earnest purpose and not a special temperament is all that is necessary to make a man some way useful to his fellow men. The Quaker blood in Stockton gave him that moderation which philosophy says is the one essential of statesmanship. The Irish blood in Kearny kindled in him that ardor which gives the courage to despise obstacles and to anticipate success, qualities which are indispensable to military leadership. Stockton did everything after mature consideration upon a judgment carefully instructed by study and experience. He was the great lawyer, the wise counselor, the prudent statesman; he did not lack in courage, physical or moral. He wounded and fought off a robber who assaulted him in the streets of London, and met the physical privations of his capture without a murmur.

Nor did he hesitate longer than to convince his judgment, before he declared his independence of a sovereign who had shown him personal courtesy and given him public office and honor. But, for all that, he was a natural conservative, who preferred to run no risks, but to stand by all precedents where honor would permit it. He had a love for a complete decorum in all relations, which made him as careful with the mint and anise and cumin as in the weightier matters of the law. As farmer, lawyer, judge, member of Congress, son, husband, father, and friend, he was a model. The well-rounded symmetry of his character always reminded me of Washington whose friendship he enjoyed. Except that Stockton's life and character had no military tinge, there was a striking resemblance between these two men. They were both perfect gentlemen of the antique world: courteous, dignified, methodical, never forgetting themselves, and in justice let me say, never forgetting any one else whom they ought to remember. Just as I can picture Washington at Mount Vernon, I can picture this New Jersey gentleman sitting on the broad acres of Princeton which his grandfather had acquired in the seventeenth century. I can believe he had no greater pride than in recalling his stainless and distinguished line of ancestry, unless Providence had kindly lifted for him the veil of the future that he might behold his son, his grandson, and his great-grandson occupying seats in the Senate by their merits as regularly and as surely as if they were a Stockton heirloom.

How different from this picture is the active life and restless genius of Phil Kearny. He cared nothing for details; he ignored them all that he might concentrate all his energies upon the great principle for which he strove. Toward that object he rolled in molten stream his past, his present, his future, his memories and hopes, his courage and his parts, all that there was in him. Such enthusiasm could not wait for the slow processes of reason. He appealed often to instinct, knowing that he was a child of genius and that genius was kind to her children. The appeal was often not in vain, and then Indian and Mexican and Algerine and Italian and Confederate looked upon him in his rapid strategy and magnificent charge as an inspired madman; and yet when, unwilling to trust to these dangerous gifts, he appealed to the ordinary processes of mankind, he would show the power to plan and organize, which is the basis of the most solid military character. His intensity of nature, however, generally controlled him and brought with it all its natural advantages and disadvantages. He could see only the object at which he aimed, and in pursuit of that object he would ride roughshod over anything in his way—not from indifference, not from unkindness, but his look was focused on the distant object, and it could not be changed. Had this fierce enthusiasm, this concentration of fiery genius been for an unworthy object, it would have been inexcusable and baneful. Fortunately it was almost always directed to a noble and unselfish end, and those over whom he rode healed their wounds and forgave him, knowing that he was riding desperately at a common enemy. Brave as a lion, tender as a woman, his portrait remains the beau ideal of a soldier, and the picture of that slim, handsome figure riding all alone to its death at Chantilly, with his bridle in his teeth and his only remaining arm waving his sword, goes down to history as symbolic of the character and conduct of this gallant leader, the Murat of our volunteer Army. Soldier and statesman, hail! farewell! May our country never lack the unselfish wisdom in her later councils which Richard Stockton gave in her earliest, and may she never lack in the execution of them the self-devotion which made Philip Kearny, for his country's sake, ride to death as to a festival. [Great applause.]

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, the people of California would unite to-day with their brethren of New Jersey in paying a grateful tribute to the distinguished character and eminent public services of General Philip Kearny.

The name of Kearny is familiar to our people in the far West, more, perhaps, on account of the conspicuous figure of General Stephen W. Kearny in public affairs on the Pacific in that eventful period which marked the transfer of authority in California from Mexican rule to American occupation and control. But General Philip Kearny, who was a nephew of our distinguished pioneer, was himself identified with some of the important events in the early history of the Pacific coast.

He came to California immediately after the close of the war with Mexico, holding an important command in the Army. In this position he rendered most timely and gallant services against the hostile Indians then infesting Northern California and Southern Oregon.

General Philip Kearny was admired as an able and daring soldier, and as one of the conspicuous heroes who won for this country the rich and fruitful territory stretching from the Rio Grande to the Pacific, and with Texas including a domain equal to one hundred and four States as large as the State of Massachusetts.

It may be that there were political motives involved in the war with Mexico that would not now receive popular approval or partisan support, but the results achieved were inevitable.

The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was not merely the terms of peace agreed upon for the cessation of hostilities between two contending armies. It was the necessary and unavoidable readjustment of boundaries for the United States to accommodate the activities of an expanding civilization. It anticipated the advance of an enterprising, adventurous people and the needs of a growing, industrious population.

The mighty forces of nature that formed this continent and made a way for the waters of the north to descend to the Gulf decreed that in the economy of human affairs the great interior basin should become the home of one great homogeneous people, united in the ties of a common government and actuated by the hopes of a common destiny.

It was also then established that this same people, whose energy and enterprise should subdue the forces of nature along the banks of the Mississippi, would follow the course of the stars and p'ant their flag by the shores of the Pacific.

The prophetic vision of Bishop Berkeley saw all this in the very dawn of the movement when he wrote—

> Westward the course of empire takes its way;
> The four first acts already past,
> A fifth shall close the drama with the day;
> Time's noblest offspring is the last.

But through what infinite trials, tribulations, and human hardships all this was to be accomplished. Precious lives were to be sacrificed. Brave men were to face dangers and prove their loyalty to their country at the extremest peril. General Kearny was one of these brave men. His country was on the march and he took commanding service.

He knew no fear. As a soldier he was always in the very midst of the fiery conflict. He was the first at the breach and the last to abandon the assault. He never retreated. He was always in advance. He was the first man in the American Army to enter the city of Mexico during the progress of hostilities.

There were heroes before Agamemnon. There have been many since, but none more deserving of special distinction for personal bravery than General Philip Kearny.

Where was there a more attractive figure among all the military heroes of our late civil war? He was the embodiment of the restless patriotism of the Union forces. His coming anywhere on the field of battle was an event. He represented the fury of the storm when the elements are at war. He was the man for the supreme moment of a crisis. Such men always command the confidence of their friends and the respect of their foes.

"We all knew him and respected him," says General Longstreet of General Kearny.

There is something grand in the lofty spirit of these grim warriors facing death at every turn and even perceiving humor in catastrophe. General Kearny lost his left arm at the attack on the San Antonio Gate at the entrance to the city of Mexico. General Howard lost his right arm at Fair Oaks in the civil war. Kearny was present when Howard's shattered arm was being amputated. Howard, looking at Kearny's empty sleeve, remarked, "We will buy our gloves together hereafter."

The two brave commanders were in accord.

It is proper that such a brave soldier as General Kearny should be honored by his native State, and that his splendid military figure should be placed in this Capitol to remind the coming generations of men of the distinction the Republic would confer upon those who fearlessly and loyally serve her cause. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. The few scattered settlements along the Atlantic seaboard had grown into vigorous and thriving colonies. Covenanter and Quaker, Huguenot and Catholic, Roundhead and Cavalier, the shamrock and the thistle had here mingled, and from them had sprung a new people, hardy in body, strong in mentality, indomitable in purpose, and tireless in industry. The stern austerity of the Pilgrim father had yielded to the mellowing touch of association with those of less rigid mold, but in turn he had imparted to them his love of right, his devotion to duty, and his sturdy love of self-government. The mother country had viewed with apprehension the rapid growth of her vigorous child. Her Parliament had sought by successive enactments to bind its young but sturdy limbs, oppressive taxes had been levied, home manufactures had been repressed, and rulers of alien spirit and hostile purpose had been sent to govern, and to bring into subjection a people restless under oppression. The greedy King had fixed his eyes, bleary with debauchery, upon the wealth gathered by the colonists as the result of years of hardest toil, and had prodded his Parliament to more oppressive acts. The murmurs of the colonists had grown to vigorous remonstrance, and when remonstrance had failed, it had been succeeded by resistance stout and determined, and the guns of Lexington, of Concord, and of Bunker Hill had ushered in the bloody drama of the Revolution.

In all these stirring scenes New Jersey had borne no laggard's part, and now as active war came upon the land she organized her council of safety, elected her provincial congress, put her foreign-appointed governor to flight, and sent her full quota of delegates to the Continental Congress. Her sons were found in every conflict, while within her borders the fields of Monmouth, of Trenton, and of Princeton became historic. Her provincial congress, in session in the city of Burlington, N. J., July 2, 1776, two days before the promulgation of the immortal Declaration of Independence, had framed a constitution and form of government so perfect that for sixty-eight years thereafter it remained unaltered save by the substitution of the word "State" for "colony."

The Declaration of Independence was receiving its final touches at the hands of Jefferson and his colleagues at the time when these New Jersey patriots, in the preamble to their constitution, declared:

> Whereas all the constitutional authority ever possessed by the Kings of Great Britain over their colonies or their other dominions was by compact derived from the people and held of them for the common interest of the whole society, allegiance and protection are in the nature of things reciprocal ties, each equally depending upon the other and liable to be dissolved by the other's being refused or withdrawn; and
> Whereas George the Third, King of Great Britain, has refused protection to the good people of these colonies, and by assenting to sundry acts of the British Parliament attempted to subject them to absolute dominion of that body, and also made war upon them in the most cruel and unnatural manner for no other cause than asserting their just rights, all civil authority under him is necessarily at an end, and a dissolution of government in each colony has consequently taken place.

Two days later the old bell in Independence Hall rang out "Liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof," and the formal declaration of separation from and independence of the mother country was given to the world. The names of the delegates from New Jersey attached to this immortal instrument are Richard Stockton, John Witherspoon, Francis Hopkinson, John Hart, and Abraham Clark.

Richard Stockton was born October 1, 1730, near Princeton, N. J., upon an estate purchased by his great-grandfather, who emigrated from England in 1670, and in 1682 founded the first English settlement in that vicinity. Bred to the law, he early rose to eminence in his profession, and soon amassed a competency for those early days. Retiring from his profession, he spent a year in study and travel abroad, and visiting England studied carefully the sentiment there on the part of the ruling classes toward the colonies. He presented to the king an address from the trustees of the College of New Jersey, expressing their pleasure and satisfaction at the repeal of the stamp act, and, mingling freely with all classes, obtained information of great subsequent value to him and his country. Returning to America, he was given a seat in the supreme council, and was afterward made a judge of the supreme court.

In June, 1776, he was elected a member of the Continental Congress, and at once took high rank there by reason of the extent of his learning, the soundness of his views, and the patriotism of his purposes. His observations during his visit abroad had fitted him to understand the temper and motives of the King and Parliament, and added greatly to the value of his counsels. He was selected with another to visit and inspect the Army, to correct abuses, ascertain and provide for its wants, and add in every possible way to its effectiveness, and discharged this duty with fidelity and success.

Upon his return he visited his family to remove them to a place of safety, but was captured by the enemy, was conveyed to New York, thrown into a wretched prison, denied all comforts, deprived for a time of even the coarsest fare, and was treated in every way with the greatest severity. General Washington, at the request of Congress, interceded with General Howe and secured his release, but not until the seeds of incurable disease had been sown in the system of the captive. The army of the enemy about this time overran his plantation, burning his buildings, his library, and his papers, and he came from the prison broken in health to find his home desolated and himself in want. He could not resume his seat in the Congress, and, finally, February 28, 1781, when but a little more than fifty years of age, death came as a merciful relief from his sufferings.

Of him a biographer has well said:

> He was a man of general science and universal knowledge. He was the first chief-justice of his native State under the new constitution.
> As a lawyer he stood pre-eminent; as a judge he was impartial, sound, and lucid; as a statesman able, discreet, and wise; as a patriot firm, fearless, and devoted; as a gentleman polished, urbane, and graceful; as a citizen liberal, peaceful, and generous; as a friend true, sympathetic, and charitable; as a husband kind, affectionate, and provident; as a father faithful, tender, and instructive; as a Christian open, frank, and consistent; as a man honest, noble, and brave; and as a whole he was an ornament in society, an honor to his country, and a blessing to mankind.

Philip Kearny was a soldier. His profession was his idol. The smoke of battle was sweet incense to his nostrils and the shriek of the shell was music to his ears. He knew, absolutely, no fear. Where the fight was thickest he was to be found. In a charge he was in his glory, and a hand-to-hand engagement gave him intensest joy. Having lost an arm in the Mexican war, he was exempt from service in the war of the rebellion. But no disability could keep Kearny out of the Army when a war was in hand, and no assignment of forces could keep him out of a fight when once within the Army. To others has been allotted the task of speaking in detail of his achievements, and I but simply allude to this dominant trait in his character. September 1, 1862, at Chantilly, Va., while in advance of his forces he came unexpectedly upon a detachment of the enemy, and was summoned to surrender. He knew not the meaning of the word, and dashed off—the rifles rang out—and that fiery spirit left the body forever.

To-day, in response to the invitation given by this Congress for each State to place within Statuary Hall the statues of two of her most eminent citizens, we have placed in that hall the statues of Stockton and Kearny, and now tender them to the nation for acceptance. In their persons and in their lives these two men typify the dominant traits of the American character, wisdom and courage. The one was a statesman, the other a soldier; the one by wise counsels aided in the formation of the Government, the other drew his sword for its preservation. Both gave their lives a sacrifice for it. One represents well the patriotism and statesmanship which led his State thus early to declare the government of King George at an end, to join in the subsequent general Declaration of Independence, to sign the Articles of Confederation, and to be among the first to ratify the Federal Constitution. The other speaks as truly for that heroism which gave the Jersey troops to the Continental Army, which reddened the snows of Princeton, the grasses of Monmouth, and the slopes of the Assanpink, which poured out its blood in the war of 1812, and which gave from that State alone an army to the Union cause in the late war.

The statue of Stockton is of marble, that of Kearny is of bronze, a union of purity and of strength. They stand in their places teaching to us the lesson of these two lives, a lesson of patriotism, of courage, of sacrifice.

And as others come after us, to fill the places we occupy here and whose mission it shall be to take up the work of legislation where we lay it down—as they pass and repass among those reminders of other men and other days, of great deeds and of noble action, of wise statesmanship and of heroic courage, may the God of nations, the God of battles give them to see and to apprehend something of the spirit of wisdom and of statesmanship in which our fathers laid the foundations of the Republic, and something of the spirit of devotion to the Union which gave life and everything to its preservation, and so seeing and so apprehending may they discharge most wisely and in His fear the duties devolved upon them. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished soldier and statesman, General Schenck, on his return from his Brazilian mission, made a remark to a Boston audience which is as full of beauty for the natural selection of the illustration as for its appositeness.

He said that while in a foreign country he had forgotten all party allegiance, bitterness, and association. His beloved country looked to him like one forest in its garniture of green, and its waving line upon the remote horizon. He could not and he would not distinguish any particular tree of the forest. Whether hickory, or ash, or what not, they were all one to his patriotic observation. It was one and only one cluster of States that he saw, and therefore he was enabled when peril came to our country to contend for its unity both in the field and forum.

UNPARTISAN AMERICAN SPIRIT.

I may not, Mr. Speaker, from my short absence abroad, have learned the liberalities of philosophy and politics with such nice heed and courageous devotion, but certainly absence as well as the lapse of time has rounded the angles and smoothed the edges of asperity. It has made our country seem like one vast and beautiful scene of blended land, water, and sky, having one flag, with its patriotic motto, "Many in one."

When some one asked the author of "Hail, Columbia," what was the inspiration of that national lyric, he replied "that it was to inspire an American spirit which should be independent of and above the interests and passion and policy of parties, so that we might look and feel exclusively for our honor and our rights."

This song, which, I may say with some pride, was penned by one of my own blood, although written for a theatrical representation in Philadelphia, had much to do with harmonizing the American spirit and the American Congress, which was sitting in that city at the time. It is even said that it was sung by members of Congress in the streets at night, to show their devotion to the one great thought of American unity.

Such occasions as the present give cogent emphasis and untarnished beauty to the undivided patriotic sentiment of the American people. And no one State, sir, so illustrates what my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] calls the self-devotion of these martial and civic heroes whom we honor to-day, as the State of New Jersey.

New Jersey stands out into the vexed Atlantic as one of the most prominent parts of our coast, to beat back its storms.

The colony of New Jersey stands out in our history as a barrier upon which our Revolutionary contests broke with unexampled fury.

The Balkans have been considered the battle-ground of the Oriental question, as Belgium of the European question.

New Jersey was the battle-ground of our Revolutionary struggle. Our history is full of the brave contests of the Whigs and patriots of New Jersey against the British and hired Hessian foe.

I am not to speak to-day of the soldier, only of the civilian. No poor rhetoric shall tarnish the martial laurels of the gallant Kearny. If I were entirely frank I should say that I welcomed with more heartiness the civilian within the precincts of the Capitol devoted to legislative and peaceful methods. I am called upon to speak as to only one of these Revolutionary heroes. The accomplished member from New New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], the successor of my grandfather, General James Cox, in Congress from the Monmouth district, along with my friend [Mr. PHELPS], has tendered to me that honor. I appreciate it as a conspicuous honor, because almost every household story of my younger life, and much of the fervor which belongs to my later years in behalf of our beloved land, are imbound with associations connected with my ancestral State.

It may not be improper to say that among those who signed the Declaration of Independence, two of them at least, Francis Hopkinson and Governor McKean, are those to whom these ancestors were related.

"There were giants in those days." What a company of splendid scholars, statesmen, and patriots composed that Congress of 1776. The Adamses, the Carrolls, the Franklins, the Lees, the Rutledges, the Wolcotts, the Witherspoons, the Gerrys, the Jeffersons, and the Harrisons of that day had sympathetic association with the man whose statue we to-day place within our Capitol.

It is a proper subject of satire and irony when those who are degenerate boast of their ancestry. But the present attorney-general of New Jersey, ex-Senator John P. Stockton, and his gallant son, who is a representative of our country abroad, Richard Stockton, and the five others of that name, who are impearled in our history, have a right to boast of the man whose effigy we add to our pantheon.

In the court of bankruptcy, in which we all appear sooner or later, especially when we pay the debt of nature, it may be well to remember that—

> Those who on glorious ancestors enlarge,
> Produce their debt, instead of their discharge.

But the Stocktons of our later day have discharged their obligation.

The Senator, who even as a Federalist shone in Congress during our last war with Great Britain, was the worthy father of that naval officer who served on the Guerierre, who aided in the defense of Baltimore against the British, who fought the Algerian pirates in the Mediterranean, and whose name, connected with a beautiful city of California, is forever associated with our golden coast and the organization there of our first civil government, have fulfilled every obligation implied in the maxim "Noblesse oblige."

The chief among these worthies of this historic name is that Richard Stockton who signed the Declaration of Independence. The gentlemen from New Jersey have eloquently spoken upon his merits.

It is sufficient for me to say that he was born within their own domain, and which is now included in the classic precincts of Princeton; that he was a lawyer of great reputation; that after acquiring a competency in his profession he visited the old country, where he received many honors and where he endeavored to remove the gross ignorance then prevailing in Great Britain regarding the American colonies. It was his grave and thoughtful pen that dictated to Lord Dartmouth, on the 12th December, 1774, a paper entitled "An expedient for the settlement of the American disputes." He was a calm and dispassionate but defiant opponent of the English arrogance and prerogative against parliamentary and colonial privilege and human liberty; and although, by the testimony of Dr. Rush, he was not forward at first in the debates in the Continental Congress which looked toward independence, yet, sir, when the time came he gave his reflective and hearty concurrence to the final vote and to an energetic address in its behalf.

There is one episode in his life which his family and which those who come from the old Monmouth patriotic stock never can forget. While Mr. Stockton was sojourning in Monmouth County the barbarous loyalists of that region captured him in his temporary home. They immured him in the common prison in New York. There he was treated with such indignity and cruelty that his health was broken, and his life was ended at the early age of fifty-one.

This rare lawyer, this accomplished scholar, this ardent patriot was nursed in a school of active life. It gave him, as his biographer has written, great courage and agility, both as a horseman and a swordsman.

It may be a trivial matter to record, but it is a fact, that to the fifth Richard Stockton it was my pleasure to send a medal for saving life on the Monmouth coast at the peril of his own.

But above all, we remember Richard Stockton as the signer of the Declaration. We place his statue in our gallery, among the foremost men of the Republic, because he was imbued with those virtues by which our Republic was made possible. Out of such brains the Republic leaped forth, as if born in a moment from the goddess of wisdom. He was representative of a State settled by the Dutch, Swedes, and English. They were of a tough Teutonic and Norse stock. They dared the unknown sea for new adventures in a new hemisphere, and they had the intrepid virtue to make sacrifices adequate to the momentous occasion of our independence.

Richard Stockton was born in America. Indeed, all the signers of the Declaration were natives of America, except eight. The majority of them were men of refined education. They understood how to draw on ancient models and cotemporaneous teaching, so as to imbue our young Republic with the instinct, genius, form, and structure of our peerless polity.

Besides, sir, they were men of means. They used their means to build up the fabric of our Government. They used their means without stint and with great wisdom.

The members of that Congress of 1776, who signed the Declaration, were men of affluence, and the more affluent they were, the more unselfish. From the oldest member—Benjamin Franklin—to the youngest—Edward Rutledge—they kept their faith when they pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor. Not one of these signers was false to his pledge. Many of them were called to high offices after the success of their republican experiment. Two of them—Adams and Jefferson—became Chief Magistrate. All of them cluster as a grand constellation so brilliant and serene, pinnacled in a splendid heaven—like the Milky Way in the heavens—we can hardly distinguish the exceeding great magnitude of one from the other; or wherein one star in our early firmament differs from another star in glory. [Applause.]

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, New Jersey to-day, in response to the invitation of Congress to each of the States, presents the statues of two of her distinguished sons, one a leader in the struggle for the foundation of the Union, eminent as a jurist and statesman, the other distinguished for his bravery, dash, and military accomplishments in the war for the preservation of the Union.

It is not my purpose, nor is it my hope, that I may be able to add anything to the eloquent words of my distinguished colleague and the distinguished gentleman from New York, or to the distinction of the illustrious Stockton and brave Kearny, whose statues we unveil to-day.

The lives of these men, although brief, were none the less eventful, as has been so well told by my colleague. Both died before reaching the age allotted to man—Stockton before the end of the great struggle in which he had taken and was taking such an active part, and without knowing the blessings which his act on the 4th day of July, 1776, had given to mankind; Kearny before the successful termination of the cause for which he had contended and for which he yielded prematurely his young life.

I shall not attempt to analyze their characters. In the old Hall of the House of Representatives we place the statue of Richard Stockton by the side of his companion, George Clinton, of New York. His memory lives not alone in marble, but will live in history long after that marble has crumbled, "for the name of the legislator is engraved on the everlasting monuments of antiquity."

In that hall where stands the statue of Greene, of Rhode Island, we place that of Kearny, of New Jersey. Greene fought for national independence and the establishment of the Union, Kearny for the preservation and perpetuation of the Union.

Mr. Speaker, with the progress of time an increasing interest will be felt in the lives and forms of those illustrious statesmen who laid the foundation of this great American Republic and of those brave soldiers who in the hour of their country's peril sacrificed home, fortune, and life to preserve it. The one object of the placing of these statues in the old Hall of the House of Representatives is to demonstrate and quicken the reverence and love of the American people of all orders for the founders and preservers of our liberties—the one who laid the foundation of that great charter which has conducted us from the weakest to the strongest of civilizations, the other the soldier who assisted in adding to our territory a vast empire, and when civil strife threatened dissolution gave his life that it might be united. Let these names descend with the years, and their memories and brave deeds ever be remembered by their countrymen. [Applause.]

Mr. PHELPS. I now move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] is entitled to the floor, and has occupied ten minutes of his time. One hour and twenty-four minutes of the time yet remains.

[Mr. DIBBLE withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, this is the conclusion of the nine hours of general debate. Under the rule I suppose that, having been in charge of the bill, I would be entitled to an hour, but it will not be expected that I shall commence what I have to say this evening.

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIBBLE. As to the hour which the gentleman claims, I presume he alludes to the hour which he will have in the House after the committee reports the bill to the House. We do not concede that he has an hour in committee. On the general debate, which was closed before this special debate was entered upon, the gentleman did occupy his hour and gave it away to other gentlemen on the floor, but we do not admit that he can now come in with another hour at the close of this debate. We concede that when the previous question is ordered in the House he may have some time at his disposal as the member in charge of the bill, but we do not concede that he has any such privilege in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURNES. I beg that the gentleman will not press the consideration of his point of order now, because it was not my intention to urge that issue at this time.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have simply made this statement lest silence should seem to give consent.

Mr. BURNES. Well, I shall make that claim to-morrow. Now, Mr. Chairman, in a spirit of perfect fairness to gentlemen on both sides of this question and on both sides of the House, I desire to say that, having reached the limit prescribed for general debate, I propose to submit a point of order against all of these propositions inserted in the general deficiency bill for the payment of French spoliations. The point may be considered as applying to each particular item or to the whole in general if we consider it in that way. I make this announcement and I make the point of order now, in order that gentlemen may have an opportunity to consult the authorities and to be prepared to present their views with regard to this proposition when it shall come up for consideration either in the House or in Committee of the Whole. I shall make the point of order, and it may be considered as made now, as there may be some doubt as to when it ought to be made, that there is no law authorizing appropriations for the payment of these claims; that the claims are not germane to this bill; that the insertion of them in the bill is in express violation of several rules of the House of Representatives, amongst others clause 3 of Rule XXI.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman mention the other rules? "Several" is rather a comprehensive word.

Mr. BURNES. I may not be able to refer to them all at this moment, but I will mention Rule XI, clauses 30 and 31, which requires private bills to be referred either to the Committee on Claims or the Committee on War Claims; Rule XXII, clauses 1 and 2, which directs the manner in which private claims shall be presented to the House; and also clauses 3 and 5 of Rule XXI. Clause 5 of that rule requires that all private bills shall be referred to one of the three or four committees having private measures under consideration. But the greater includes the less, and the principal point I make is based on Rule XXI, clause 3.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I suppose the gentleman will be perfectly willing that when his point of order is made, points of order may be presented against his right to make the point.

Mr. BURNES. Undoubtedly. I presume, however, that the gentleman does not mean that he has any right to object to my making the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do mean just that.

Mr. BURNES. Well, I give notice now, so that no snap judgment may be taken, and so that every gentleman may be prepared to consider the questions of law and order involved. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment in order to correct a name in the bill. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 12, line 12, and I move to strike out the name "Ralph," and insert in lieu thereof the name "Raleigh."

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. McCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10896 (the general deficiency bill), and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BUCHANAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of George B. Houston.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

On motion of Mr. BUCHANAN, general leave was granted to members to print in the RECORD remarks on the resolutions accepting the statues of Stockton and Kearny.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 38, noes 16.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly, at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m., adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CONGER: A bill (H. R. 11243) granting a pension to Mary E. McQueen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORD: A bill (H. R. 11244) for the relief of Charles W. Rose—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE (by request): A bill (H. R. 11245) for the relief of Sallie Hardmond—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MATSON: A bill (H. R. 11246) granting a pension to Elizabeth Bennett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11247) granting a pension to Philura Tappan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 11248) for the relief of E. B. Carter—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CRAIN: Petition of citizens of Galveston, Tex., praying that the terms of the Federal courts at that place may not be abridged by act of Congress—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCREARY: Papers in the case of Mrs. Martha A. Bibb, of Danville, Ky., for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Joint resolution providing for the payment of the claim of John H. Hamlin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. J. J. O'NEILL: Memorial of the St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8, in favor of the Chace international-copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Papers in the case of the Presbyterian church of Murfreesborough, Tenn., for payment of war claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 22, 1888.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. A. W. PITZER, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of citizens of Ramsey County, Minnesota, praying for certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Fergus Falls, Minn., praying for the passage of House bill 9234, for the relief of William Gaffer and others; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of citizens of Tampa and other places in Hillsborough County, Florida, and a petition of the Tampa (Fla.) Board of Trade, praying for the passage of a bill appropriating $200,000 for the purpose of protecting the country against the spread of yellow fever; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2696) for the relief of John J. Crooke, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3448) granting a pension to Charles H. Green, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DOLPH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the veto message of the President on the bill (S. 1870) granting certain lands in Pierce County, Washington Territory, to the city of Tacoma, for the purposes of a public park, to report the message back with a recommendation that the bill be passed over the President's veto. I desire to state that this report is the report of the majority of the committee, and that the minority do not concur in the report, but I understand do not propose to submit a formal minority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to have the report now acted upon?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It had better go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill with the message will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1686) for the relief of George S. Fisher, to submit an adverse report thereon. In the absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who introduced the bill, I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2601) for the relief of the Baptist Female College, of Lexington, Mo., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3431) for the erection of a public building at the city of Kalamazoo, Mich., reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of General P. H. Sheridan, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I desire to give notice that at an early date I shall call the matter up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1278) for the relief of James A. Terrell, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2441) to refund illegal internal-revenue tax collected of James R. Berry, as late auditor of the State of Arkansas, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. 3276) granting restoration of pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report, to accompany the resolution of the Senate of February 8, 1888, directing the committee to prepare certain information in regard to Canada:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the resolution of the Senate of February 8, 1888, begs leave to report that it has been proceeding in the execution of the duties imposed upon it and has accumulated a considerable mass of information, a large part of which was compiled by Henry V. Poor; that the Senate having since committed the same subject to a select committee, this committee asks that it may be discharged from the further execution of the aforesaid order of the Senate, and it returns with this report the documents and papers referred to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit the motion stated in the report, to refer the information I send to the desk to the select committee of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And the Committee on Foreign Relations will be discharged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Foreign Relations will be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

GEORGE F. RIDER.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 410) entitled "A bill for the relief of George F. Rider," now pending in the Senate, together with all of the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1883, and an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, to find and report to the Senate the facts bearing upon the merits of the claim, including the loyalty of the claimant and all other facts contemplated by the provisions of said act.

LA ABRA SILVER MINING COMPANY.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the following resolutions; which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations have leave to require the attendance of witnesses before said committee or a subcommittee thereof to give evidence under oath respecting the claim of La Abra Silver Mining Company against the Government of Mexico; and said committee or subcommittee shall have power to administer oaths to such witnesses; and the expenses of their attendance and other necessary expenses in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the funds appropriated for the contingent expenses of the Senate, on certificates issued by the chairman of said committee or said subcommittee.

Resolved, 2. That counsel for or against said claimants shall be authorized to appear before said committee or subcommittee and examine and cross-examine any witnesses under the authority of this resolution.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 3474) amendatory of an act "authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo.," approved February 3, 1887; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3475) granting the use of certain lands in Pierce County, Washington Territory, to the city of Tacoma, for the purposes of a public park; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. REAGAN. Some days ago I introduced a bill defining trusts and providing for the punishment of those connected with them. I found on examination that it needed amendment, and instead of amending it I propose to introduce a substitute bill on the subject with an additional section relating to the jurisdiction of the United States courts.

The former bill was referred to the Committee on Finance on account of some previous reference to that committee. I should like very much, inasmuch as the bill I now introduce contains a new section relating to the jurisdiction of United States courts, that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I shall move that it be so referred.

The bill (S. 3476) to define trusts and to provide for the punishment of persons connected with them or carrying them on, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3477) granting a pension to Minerva Griffith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

THE SINKING FUND.

Mr. BECK. I desire to offer an amendment to House bill 9051, which is the House tariff bill, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That all laws or parts of laws requiring the maintenance of a sinking fund or the purchase of any of the outstanding bonds or obligations of the United States for that purpose be, and the same are hereby, suspended until the further order of Congress.

Mr. BECK. I ask that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on Finance, and printed.

Mr. BECK. I offer the following bill on the same subject, being a bill to repeal all laws requiring the further maintenance of a sinking fund; it is very short:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all laws and parts of laws requiring the further maintenance of a sinking fund or the purchase of bonds of the United States for that purpose be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

I ask that the bill may lie on the table, so that I can see what becomes of the amendment I have sent to the Finance Committee.

The condition of things is this, as I see by the papers this morning: The premium on the 4 per cent. bonds we are purchasing has gone up in the last five months from 124¼ to 129, and the four-and-a-halfs, which have less than three years to run, have gone up from 106 to 108⅛. The meaning of that is that we refuse to reduce taxation and have so arranged our laws that we are obliged to keep up the taxes, $50,000,000 a year more than the needs of the Government require, to provide a sinking fund, which now calls for $50,000,000 a year and increases annually, when we have already bought and canceled from the principal of our indebtedness over $700,000,000 of bonds—more than anybody pretends the sinking fund calls for, which is only 1 per cent. a year—and when we have only a fraction over $200,000,000 that we can by any possibility buy before 1907 without paying whatever premium the holders of the bonds ask. We have enough idle money lying in the Treasury to-day to pay off now every one of the 4½ per cent. bonds of 1891 without any embarrassment to the Government. Of course all the 3 per cents. have been paid off long ago.

The pretended requirement of the sinking fund, so called, which has been a fraud for the last ten years, is kept up simply to maintain high and needless taxation. I have tried time and again to have it repealed so as to enable us to bring taxes down. The sinking fund is not only encouraging trusts and combinations of bondholders to increase the premium on our bonds, but our outstanding indebtedness is in such a condition now that I can name ten men in the United States who by combinations can purchase all our outstanding bonds and hold them, and under the law as it now stands force the Secretary of the Treasury under our laws to pay $200,000,000 for every $100,000,000 of bonds he obtains from them, and he is compelled by law to buy annually over $50,000,000 of them even if he pays 100 per cent. premium.

I insist that the sinking fund now is maintained for no other purpose than to put money in the pockets of the bondholders and to enable them to combine together, as the Secretary of the Treasury is compelled to buy bonds under the laws as they now stand at any prices they ask. They have already advanced 5 per cent. They will advance these premiums 25 or 50 per cent. within a year unless we repeal the sinking-fund laws.

It is an outrage on the tax-payers of the country and an outrage on decent legislation to maintain the sinking-fund laws any longer. I want the bill I have offered kept on the table until I see whether the Finance Committee will not agree to suspend the operation of these laws, which I insist are now kept on the statute-books simply to enrich a few men of wealth at the expense of the tax-payers of the country. If they fail to report the amendment, I shall urge the Senate to pass the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is it? Is it a resolution?

Mr. BECK. No, sir; I have offered an amendment to the tariff bill by which I hope the Senator from Ohio will suspend the operation of the sinking-fund law, which he, against the will of many of his associates, imposed upon the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment, which has been referred to the Committee on Finance, is now offered as a bill. The bill will be read the first time at length, if there be no objection.

Mr. TELLER. I rise to inquire if this question is a proper subject of debate now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not. The bill has not yet been read the first time.

Mr. BECK. I hope it is. I should like to have it debated.

Mr. TELLER. If it is, I propose to take a hand in the debate.

Mr. BECK. I should be glad of it. I should like to hear somebody deny what I have said.

Mr. TELLER. I think we can show that there would have been no purchase of bonds at all if this Administration had not been compelled by law to purchase them.

Mr. BECK. It is one thing to have a surplus with which to buy, and another to be required by law, whether you have a surplus or not, to keep up taxation for the purpose of compelling the Government to buy the bonds at any premium combinations may demand. That is what is done now.

Mr. TELLER. There never would have been a dollar of bonds bought if the Administration had not been compelled to do so by law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to know what this is about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read the first time at lenth for information, and the Chair will then submit the question whether it shall be read the second time.

The bill (S. 3478) to repeal the laws relating to the sinking fund was read the first time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all laws and parts of laws requiring the further maintenance of a sinking fund or the purchase of bonds of the United States for that purpose be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. BECK. That is all of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read the first time, is there objection to its second reading?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it would be better to have it read the second time and take the usual course, unless the Senator from Kentucky wants to make another speech on it.

The bill was read the second time by its title.

Mr. BECK. I have already referred a similar amendment to the tariff bill to the Finance Committee, and I propose that this bill shall remain on the table so as to see what becomes of the amendment I have sent to the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered, the bill having been read twice.

Mr. BECK. Then I can call it up.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota; which was ordered to be printed.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That hereafter, and until otherwise ordered, the daily sessions of the Senate shall commence at 12 o'clock meridian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it had better go over until to-morrow, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Personally I have no objection to it myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule and be printed.

Mr. HOAR. I offered the resolution for meeting at 11 o'clock, the adoption of which has enabled the Senate to accomplish a good deal of business, and I am now quite contented to agree to the present proposition of the Senator from Vermont, but I should like to suggest to my honorable friend from Vermont that he so frame the resolution that we may change the hour of meeting towards the close of the session, if a majority of the Senate desire to do so, without the point of order standing over the resolution to do it for a day. It is quite convenient near the close of a session sometimes to make that change, and if when the resolution comes up to-morrow he will so modify it that it will enable the Senate at any time any day to fix the time of meeting on the next day at 11 o'clock, I should think it would be better.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be a change of the standing rule, and it would be difficult to accomplish it; but it can always be accomplished, if anybody objects, by a simple motion to adjourn to a given hour the next day.

Mr. HOAR. That requires a quorum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So does a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I desire to-morrow morning, when the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] comes up in regard to the time of meeting, to move an amendment to it. I ask leave to offer the amendment now and have it printed. It is not necessary to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed if there be no objection.

The amendment is to add to the resolution the words:

Unless a majority of Senators present when the Senate shall adjourn shall vote to adjourn to another hour.

DISTURBANCES IN COREA.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer a resolution to be read and ordered printed. I desire to submit some observations in connection with it before it is referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I shall ask the courtesy of the Senate to-morrow, immediately after the morning business, for about fifteen minutes, for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all official correspondence between his Department and the minister resident and consul-general of the United States at Seoul, Corea, and between the Department of State and the Corean envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary resident in Washington, occurring since January 1 last, including that relating to the recent disturbances and alleged massacre of Coreans in the streets of Seoul, Corea, on or about June 20, 1888, and touching the causes inciting thereto, if any.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to enter a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask that the motion be acted on now, but if I should be absent when it comes up I wish to have it pending.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations had heard what I said when I offered the resolution, his suggestion would have been unnecessary. In submitting the resolution I stated that before I should move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations I desired to submit a few observations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that; but the form of the resolution being out of the ordinary course, I did not like to have it acted upon without a motion pending to refer.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is my intention to move, myself, to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table, and be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. SPOONER. Some time since I introduced a resolution calling upon the Treasury Department for copies of correspondence between the First Comptroller of the Treasury and certain other governmental officers, and the commissioners and chief supervisors of elections. The resolution was laid over, I believe, because of the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], who had suggested a desire to offer an amendment to it. I ask that the resolution be laid before the Senate at this time, and considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SPOONER June 4, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence, statements of accounts, and inclosures which, during the incumbency of the office of First Comptroller of the Treasury by the present occupant, such officer or his deputy has had with any United States commissioner, or any chief supervisor of elections, and of all replies thereto received by said First Comptroller; and also to inform the Senate whether the several supervisors of elections appointed by the respective circuit courts at and for the election of 1886, at which Representatives in Congress were chosen, or for any registration held prior thereto and for said election, were paid for the respective number of days, not exceeding ten, for which their accounts were presented, and if such payments were not made the reasons therefor, and for what number of days they were not allowed and paid; and also to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence upon such subject-matter had between the First Comptroller of the Treasury and the Attorney-General or any United States marshal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which has been read.

Mr. EVARTS. If the morning business is over, I will ask permission to call up the resolution covering the gift of the bust of Garibaldi to the United States, of which I gave notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain that motion at this time, a previous motion having been made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to withdraw his motion so as to allow me to move to take up the joint resolution reported from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases yesterday morning, proposing an appropriation to be expended in the suppression of yellow fever in the South.

Mr. SPOONER. I think this resolution will not take much time. I very much prefer that it should be passed upon by the Senate. It has been on the table for some time. I desire the information which it is designed to elicit, and I desire it at as early a date as possible. If it consumes much time, I will say to the Senator from Florida that I shall not want to antagonize his measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Strictly speaking, the morning business being concluded, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first bill under Rule VIII on the Calendar will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1944, a bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill being in order, the Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to consider the resolution which has just been read.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate, and the question recurs upon agreeing to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

LOUISIANA ELECTION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to postpone the consideration of the Calendar and to take up the resolution which I submitted on the 19th of July for an investigation of the Louisiana election.

Mr. MORGAN. I inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether he wishes to take up the resolution for action or merely for the purpose of delivering some remarks?

Mr. CHANDLER. For the purpose of making some remarks thereon, but not with the intention of asking a vote to-day if any Senator desires to speak or desires that the resolution shall go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution to which he has referred.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire to yield——

Mr. WALTHALL. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that both the Senators from Louisiana are absent on account of sickness. The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] has been confined to his bed for three or four days and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] has been absent from the Chamber and from the city for several weeks under the injunction of his physician, as I know.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I will yield to the Senator from Florida in a moment. My attention has been called to the fact that both the Senators from Louisiana are absent. The junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] has been absent for a long period of time and, I am informed, does not expect to return during the session.

This subject has been postponed from time to time by arrangement between myself and the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] until such a period that it is impossible for me, without great inconvenience, to postpone it any longer. I therefore sent word to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] that I desired to go on with my remarks, which are in no direct sense personal either to himself or to the junior Senator from Louisiana, giving him a full opportunity to reply at his earliest convenience.

Mr. WALTHALL. I desire to say that so far as the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] is concerned, I know it is his purpose to return to the Senate as soon as he is able to do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not mean to say that the junior Senator from Louisiana did not desire to return, but that I had been informed that his health was such that in all probability he would not be able to return. Undoubtedly he desires to come here if he can. I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire to withdraw that motion, and I appeal to the Senate to allow the joint resolution reported by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases to be considered at the present moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would remind Senators that under the rules the question of proceeding to the consideration of any subject during the morning hour is not open to debate.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the Senator from Florida proceeding.

Mr. CALL. I wish to say to the Senator and to the Senate that this is a matter of humanity. The necessity for some action on the part of Congress with reference to the epidemic which is beginning to get hold of the Southern States is a pressing emergency, one of the greatest importance to the country at large; and as a matter of humanity I appeal to the Senator and the Senate to let its consideration be had at the present time.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the resolution which I have moved shall be taken up and be before the Senate, I will yield to the Senator, provided the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] be present; but I do not think the subject which the Senator from Florida wishes to take up ought to be considered in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent further to say that the Senator from Tenpessee is somewhere about the building. He has had notice of this application, and this dreadful disease does not stay its ravages because the Senator may or may not be here. I have no doubt he is within the building somewhere.

Mr. CHANDLER. If my resolution is taken up, I will yield to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of the resolution which has been referred to, touching the election in Louisiana. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the Senator from Florida proceeds I desire to say that I am very glad to yield to him, as I now see the Senator from Tennessee is in his seat; and I have also agreed to yield to the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], in order that he may submit some remarks in connection with the reception of the Garibaldi statue. After that I shall not be willing to consent to yield for any other subject.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I do not propose to participate in any debate about yellow fever or State rights, but to refer to a matter pertaining to myself, which is called to my attention.

I see that the Associated Press saw fit to announce and spread it all over the United States that I was absent and not voting yesterday on the fisheries treaty. It is not a matter of very great consequence so far as the treaty itself is concerned, but for the truth of history I desire to say that the announcement was made by the Senator from Missouri right in front of me [Mr. COCKRELL] that I was paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. The agent of the Associated Press—I presume he was in his seat—was within 10 feet of the Senator from Missouri when that announcement was made, and it so appears in the RECORD; but that does not help anything, as nobody reads the RECORD; but people do read the Associated Press dispatches, so I want to correct the statement, and give the press a chance to correct it also.

SUPPRESSION OF INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside to enable him to move the consideration of a joint resolution the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 102) appropriating $200,000 to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States.

No objection being made, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in addition to the unexpended balance of the contingent fund heretofore appropriated, the sum of $200,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States in aid of State or municipal boards of health, or otherwise, to prevent the introduction of cholera or yellow fever into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory from another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CALL. The only difference of any importance between the joint resolution which I introduced and the one reported by the committee is in the omission of the words:

To seize and destroy, under conditions and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, any infected personal or other property which is communicating infection and disease in the interstate commerce, and such condemned property shall be paid for out of the money herein appropriated.

I desire these words to be contained in the resolution or law that shall be passed. The words used by the committee, "in the discretion of the President," are quite as broad as these are. Certainly, unless there be some objection in the invasion of the power of the States, the discretion of the President would be under the terms used by the committee as broad as in this definition and prescription of the duty to be performed; but they are not so regarded in the Treasury Department. If it be necessary, in order to prevent contagion and infection, to destroy the clothing and bedding of persons who have been in an infected locality, the question remains in doubt whether or not it can be paid for, and it is agreed by all persons that there is no other method of obtaining the infected clothing except by a knowledge of the fact that it will be paid for immediately.

Persons either before or after taking the trains and traveling through the country with baggage, with woolen clothing and articles which are ascertained to communicate this infection, will not disclose it, will not produce it unless they can be paid for it, and it is believed in the city of Jacksonville, which is now threatened with an epidemic—but for the great purity of the atmosphere there, certainly there would be a very fatal and destructive epidemic which would spread to all the great cities—it is believed that it has been brought there by travelers and others wearing and bringing their baggage or clothing that had been exposed in infected localities elsewhere.

Mr. SPOONER. May I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator simply whether there is any report of the Treasury Department indicating that this appropriation is necessary?

Mr. CALL. There is a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service which accompanied the resolution that I offered here.

Mr. HARRIS. I sent a letter of inquiry to the Secretary of the Treasury on the question the Senator from Wisconsin raises, and if the Senator from Florida will yield for the purpose I will send it to the Secretary's desk and let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, August 15, 1888.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 13th instant, requesting information as to the balance of money remaining unexpended from the appropriation for preventing the spread of epidemic diseases, I have to inform you that, in round numbers, there is about $150,000 remaining of this appropriation.

You further inquire whether this unexpended balance is sufficient. I have to say that at present it is impossible for any one to forecast the necessities of the present season. The amount of money is undoubtedly sufficient if the fever should not extend beyond the limits of Florida, within which State it is hoped it may now be confined. The measures taken, owing to the establishment of fumigation stations, the employment of guards, physicians, and other employés, will probably require the expenditure of $50,000 within the State. As to the amount required for the destruction of property which can not successfully be fumigated, no estimate can be given at this time.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,
United States Senate, Chairman Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. CALL. In addition to that I will state to the Senator from Wisconsin and to the Senate that there is a letter which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, which I suppose is amongst the papers from the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service in reply to a request which my colleague and I made of him that he would ascertain how far this money might be used for all the purposes which, in his judgment, were necessary to suppress this contagious disease and prevent its spread into the other States, and for the destruction of property which was communicating the contagion and infection, which he had recommended should be destroyed. His reply to that letter was as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SUPERVISING SURGEON-GENERAL,
UNITED STATES MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE,
Washington, August 9, 1888.

SIR: Referring to our conversation of this morning, I have called at the Department and conferred with Assistant Secretary Maynard in regard to the matter, and have to say that the Department is of opinion that no existing law will authorize the destruction of any infected house in a State, but if Congress should make an appropriation to reimburse the State of Florida, or the individual owner, for the destruction of any house deemed infected, so that disinfection could not be effectively performed, there would be no objection to the officers of this service acting as appraisers to determine the value of the property and superintend such destruction. It would probably be necessary for the governor of the State to give the order for the destruction of any property. An order for the destruction of bedding and clothing infected beyond effective fumigation has this day been given.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN B. HAMILTON,
Supervising Surgeon-General M. H. S.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate.

That was the response which the Surgeon-General received to this application to know whether under the law as it now exists and, as the report of the committee allows it to continue, in the discretion of the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service the money could be used to pay for contagious or infectious clothing, bedding, or wooden houses which were in such juxtaposition to the tide of travel as to communicate infection and contagion to it.

Mr. President, that is the whole question. Shall we define and make clear, so that there will be no trouble in regard to it, the law so as to authorize to the extent of the appropriation, in the discretion of the executive officers of the Government, the money to be applied to payment for such clothing, such bedding, and such infected houses as are communicating disease to the interstate commerce of the country as in their judgment may be absolutely necessary?

There is no other method of preventing the spread of this destructive and fatal disease or of extirpating it from the interstate commerce of the country except by the destruction of the clothing and bedding and the houses in the immediate locality where it commences or finds a lodgment. This is the object of this appropriation. Why shall it not be made plain and clear beyond all doubt?

I have here the law as it stands, and I am only asking in this resolution that the law as it stands shall be made plain and relieved of all doubt. Let us see what it is. The act of June 2, 1879, is referred to in the later acts upon the subject. In the act of July 1, 1879, these words are contained:

And the board of health shall have power, when they may deem it necessary, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as a means of preventing the importation of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, or into one State from another, to erect temporary quarantine buildings and to acquire on behalf of the United States titles to real estate for that purpose, or to rent houses, if there be any suitable, at such points and places as are named in such section.

That is the act of July 1, 1879; and the section referred to is the third section of the act of June 2, 1879, and that section is:

SEC. 3. That the National Board of Health shall co-operate with and, so far as it lawfully may, aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, and into one State from another.

The places referred to are the places where it is necessary to acquire houses, to buy real estate, or rent houses for the prevention of the introduction of contagion and its spread from one State to another. We have, therefore, by the express terms of the existing law, authority to expend this money to acquire real estate, to build houses, to own houses for the purpose of preventing the spread of this infection from one State to another, at such places as may be necessary.

Now, the question arises, there being power under this act to own this property, if the property acquired be a source of contagion or infection to interstate commerce, does the public safety require its destruction, and is there power to destroy it? If we have not, or if it be a matter of doubt whether under this act we have given the power, what reason can be given when the disease is spreading into the interstate commerce of the country from an infected house, what reason can we have, if we can authorize the Government to buy the uninfected locality for the purpose of preventing the contagion, for refusing or failing to destroy and pay for a house which is spreading the contagion?

Mr. President, I wish to impress upon the Senate, and for myself to avow my support of a public policy which requires that the power of the Government to wrestle with this question of epidemic disease shall be exercised, and that it shall be brought to the point clearly and unequivocally of doing what has already been made the law in respect to the animal industry of the country, and that the contagion shall be arrested, if necessary, by the purchase and destruction of property wherever it is necessary to prevent the destruction of human life.

Mr. President, I wish the Senate to understand the magnitude of this danger which is threatening the country; which is not less, but is greater, than if an armed force were invading the country from the shores of the Gulf of Mexico. I affirm that the proposition is true beyond all question, whether in respect of property or the protection of the lives of the people of the United States, an epidemic of this, the most fatal, the most contagious, the most dreadful in many of its forms, of all diseases known, is more threatening to us than any organization of armed force which could assail the country.

To show the possible eventualities in our great towns and cities of this disease which is now obtaining a foothold in the most salubrious, the most healthy, and the purest atmosphere in the world, to show what may be the result, as has been in former years in Savannah, in Charleston, in Norfolk, in New Orleans, along the whole valley of the Mississippi, to present what may be the result of any negligence on the part of the authorities of the Government, of any ignorance and narrow views, of any defect in our laws, of any failure to do what is possible to be done, I wish to read a few lines from a statement in reference to the character which this epidemic has assumed elsewhere and which it may assume in this country. From the consular reports made to the State Department, which will be found on file there, I quote the following:

The vomito appeared at San Blas, an island on the Pacific coast of Mexico, after the absence of a century. The town had 3,000 inhabitants. One-third of those who remained died, says the American consul in his report of March of this year. So violent was the disease that in a large percentage of cases death occurred simultaneously with the first warning and while the person was feeling well and looking comparatively well. Vomiting generally appeared simultaneously with the attack, and many are said to have choked to death. It partook more of the nature of pyæmia, and attacked the stomach as the objective part with more malignity than the ordinary black vomit, but at a different stage. The consul says he is constrained to believe in the germ theory, and that the inoculation may have been so fatal that being taken up at once into the circulation its effects operated precisely as any other deadly poison.

This is not unprecedented. The small-pox at different times has destroyed entire populations. One-fourth, I see in this report, of the population was destroyed and the capital of Thibet in the East was deserted for three years. We have the history of the terrible plague, called the "black plague," in Europe in the Middle Ages, which destroyed whole populations, whole nations, and which made a desert of many of the most populous portions of the world.

Thorold Rogers, in his book on Work and Wages, says:

The black death is alleged to have had its origin in the center of China in about the year 1333, and is reported to have been accompanied by various phenomena, in the earth and atmosphere, of a very novel and destructive character, such, indeed, as were noticed as long ago as in the plagues of Athens and the simultaneous visitations at Rome or the mortality which prevailed in Northern Europe near three centuries before our era, and at the terrible pestilence which visited the known world in the age of Justinian. So, in later times, the cholera and influenza were traced to particular spots in India or China, which had been desolated by earthquakes, as Justinian's plague was said to have had its origin at Pelusium.

Nearly every infectious or contagious disease which has desolated mankind appears to have had its origin in the East and to have traveled along thence to Europe, although the yellow fever is said to be a product of the West. It is alleged that before it reached the West the black death exhausted itself in the place of its origin. Like most other plagues it was infinitely more destructive at the commencement of its career than after it had endured for a time. * * * We are told that it killed the strong * * * as with Asiatic cholera when it is most virulent; many of those attacked perished speedily, and before the disease had developed its most characteristic symptoms. It appears, indeed, and the impression is confirmed by scientific research, that when some new infection or contagion is developed the whole population is speedily liable to the assaults of the disease, and that sometimes it may totally perish, as in all likelihood the ancient occupants of the ruined cities in Central America have disappeared without leaving any sign, other than their stupendous buildings, of their existence.

The black death, as our forefathers called it from the dark purple blotches which appeard on the skin when the blood and tissues had become wholly disorganized through the virulence of the disorder, still lingers in the East under the name of the Levant, or the Oriental plague. Even now we are occasionally informed of an outbreak * * * where the * * * Turk has reduced every one to squalid poverty and misery, and whence Europe is again threatened. * * * The black death visited Christ church, Canterbury, every lightly for a century before the friars had laid in pure water from the hills to the monastery.

The black death first attacked Europe in Cyprus at about the end of 1347, and was accompanied by great convulsions of the earth and by atmospheric disturbances. Many persons who were seized with the disorder died instantly. * * * It appeared in Avignon, January, in 1348; * * * in Florence, by the middle of April; * * * France and Germany, in August; * * * on 1st of August in the seaport town of Devonshire, in England; and in Russia in 1351.

The mortality was enormous and appalling. It is probable that one-third of the population perished. * * * The immediate consequence was a dearth of labor and excessive wages. Crops rotted in the fields, cattle and sheep roamed at large, and land went out of cultivation. But the progress of sanitary science has put an end to the worst ravages of a disease which was so terrible more than five centuries ago.

Now, I wish to ask, Mr. President, if any theory of government that neglects or forbids the use of the means by which a calamity so widespread, involving the existence of whole races of people shall be ignored—whether it is reasonable or unreasonable, whether it is wise or narrow and impracticable? But we have here the precedents, the example, the authority.

The Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service has declared that the destruction of infected houses where this disease exists in some cases is an absolute necessity for preventing the spread of the disease. He has declared what is obviously true and what has now become a recognized fact in sanitary science, that the woolen clothing which is exposed in an infected locality will carry for months or years, until a favorable combination of atmospheric forces occurs, the cause, whatever it is, of this disease, and therefore the necessity of the destruction of such clothing or such houses.

What I ask is that this law shall be made definite and clear, and if there be a building which is declared by competent sanitary authorities who represent the Government under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury that can not be so fumigated and cleansed and disinfected as to deprive it of its death-giving property, that they shall be authorized to burn it, and, if so, to pay for it, the State authority and laws consenting and co-operating. The only question is whether the State of Florida, or the State of South Carolina, or the State of New York, or some other State in which this disease may exist should incur this expense. I reply in regard to that that it would be entirely reasonable, so far as its local benefit extends, the State should pay it, and the cities should pay it, but in so far as it affects the interstate commerce of the country the General Government should pay its proportion of the expenses.

Mr. SPOONER. Why should it be paid for at all if it has become so infected that the public health and the public interests require its destruction, any more than you would pay for a building which it becomes necessary for the fire department to pull down and destroy to prevent the spread of fire?

Mr. CALL. I will answer the question. Why shall you compensate any man for his private property taken for public use?

Mr. SPOONER. But the Supreme Court of the United States has decided, and it would seem to need no decision, that property destroyed in order to prevent the spread of infection is not "taken for public use," within the meaning of the Constitution, so as to require compensation.

Mr. CALL. Is not the preservation of the lives of other people a public use? The man in the infected district can live in it with impunity, and his family who have become acclimated and whom the fever can not hurt can live there with impunity, but other people in the trains and in other places who may sit by the side of the man that has woolen clothing which has been in the yellow-fever locality may take the fever and die, while the man who owns and wears it escapes—it has no effect upon him. Now, in whose use is it that the clothing should be taken, the public or his?

Mr. SPOONER. I would not have the Senator from Florida infer from my question that I am opposed to this appropriation. I am in favor of it.

Mr. CALL. I understand that. I wished to show the reason of it. The taking of the property of the individual when it is not for his benefit, but for that of the public, is a taking for the public use.

There is a reason of public policy which these officers urge in addition. They say that unless the poor man having little property, with perhaps but one suit of clothes, with but one bed, knows he will be paid immediately upon the delivery of the articles, he will escape the law and not be where they can be taken from him, and if he does not his wearing apparel can not be taken and leave him without clothing. Therefore some one must pay for it.

In respect to this existing epidemic which now threatens this country, and other places more than Florida, there has been no provision in the laws of Florida because the existence of an epidemic there of yellow fever or of anything else has been heretofore unknown, with the exception of one or two localities. With that exception the State of Florida has been exempt from epidemics of every kind, and therefore there is neither money nor authority there now to meet this evil which is threatening the whole country with sorrow and death and will not admit of longer delay.

Mr. President, Florida is far in the South. It approaches in its southernmost point the Island of Cuba, where the yellow fever is domesticated, and from which it spreads to other portions of the world. It is true that its wonderful purity of atmosphere and healthfulness of climate have heretofore preserved Florida from invasion by it to any large extent except in a few localities, but the tide of travel which now comes constantly from Cuba through Florida on to all parts of the United States, the more intimate commercial and social relations that have grown up since a line of steamers has been established, with their biweekly trips to Havana, is a cause for constant vigilance and of constant danger not only to Florida but all the cities on the Atlantic seaboard, and, since the experience of Memphis, to the cities of the valley of the Mississippi and even of the Ohio. Therefore it is a question of the greatest importance that whatever means may be successfully introduced and used now to suppress this threatened epidemic before it fastens its deadly grasp shall be used, and not only such measures as are ascertained and known, but those which are experimental and probably useful for that purpose.

I urge now upon the Senate that the discretion which these laws already give of buying property in all places where it can be used for the prevention of this epidemic and its spread from one State to another be so defined that the property when bought can be destroyed if it is necessary to destroy it for that purpose, and that this express power and discretion shall by law be vested in the President and his Secretaries and their proper officers.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand that the provision which the Senator is urging is analogous to that made in the pleuro-pneumonia law.

Mr. CALL. I said so.

Mr. BLAIR. And it would seem to be reasonable if we may stop the cattle plague that we may stop yellow fever; but I would ask the Senator if his proposition contains any provision for quarantining the individual and seizing the clothing and destroying it, whether he be willing or unwilling?

Mr. CALL. That is so. My amendment of course goes as far as the Federal authority can. It authorizes the payment when the property has been seized in pursuance of State authority.

Mr. BLAIR. I thought the Senator contemplated throwing out a bit of temptation to the infected person to produce his clothes or bring in his old buildings and get his pay for them.

Mr. CALL. That undoubtedly is true not only of this resolution but of all other bills for the payment for either property or services.

Mr. BLAIR. It seems to me the Senator or somebody should undertake to make a law like that we have enacted to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia or cattle diseases, hog cholera, and all that sort or thing. I do not see any reason why human life is not as properly entitled to protection, and why we may not as well pay out money, notwithstanding the doctrine of State rights, to prevent the spread of yellow fever all over this country as we may pay for cattle to prevent the general distribution of the cattle plague. But it does seem to me that the Senator rather than by introducing a measure here, such as I think his proposition is, to tempt people to come along with old clothes and all manner of old truck to get pay for it, should make a proposition which would give a chance to exercise some power on the part of the nation, which is to pay the money, to quarantine and inspect, and to take away from people their clothes, their wearing-apparel, when there is fair evidence that they are infected, and then pay for them.

Mr. CALL. I shall be very glad to accept any suggestion of amendment which will effect the purposes of this resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. We have not the yellow fever in New Hampshire, but we will pay our share of the money if the Senator will produce the proper sort of law.

Mr. CALL. I thank the Senator for his suggestion, and I will very gladly accept any amendments which may be offered by any one which will protect the public and secure the proper expenditure of money appropriated to prevent or extirpate the disease, and also the proper expenditure of money in reference to cattle, and in reference to every form in which money can be expended under appropriations. I supposed that this was already sufficiently protected, first by the discretion of the Secretary to establish the rules under which this money should be paid, so that the rags and old clothing which were sought to be paid for should not be paid for unless it was proved that they were full of contagion and death, and their destruction necessary to prevent the passage of contagion from one State into another.

I think that is a duty and a discretion that may be intrusted to the Secretary of the Treasury. I should be very willing to intrust it to the Senator from New Hampshire if he were Secretary of the Treasury, or to any other man who is fit to be Secretary of the Treasury. I should be willing to give the discretion of making rules by which it shall be made certain that the rags and the bedding are really contagious.

Mr. BLAIR. Is not power given in the resolution as reported by the committee to expend the money necessary, in the discretion of the President, who may use such measures as he may think are calculated to suppress the disease, using this money to enforce those measures, and if the Senator's proposition be a sensible method of extirpating the disease, it is fair to presume that so sensible a man as the President or the Secretary of the Treasury will resort to that method to pay for these clothes and rags and old buildings, and proceed in that way?

Mr. CALL. That is all very true; but if the Secretary entertained that opinion, and if when the Surgeon-General went to him he had said, "I have that discretion, I will pay for that building, I will pay for those clothes, when it is proved to me that they are spreading death in the country," I should not have introduced this resolution; but it is because the Surgeon-General, who is the head and source of the executive distribution of this fund, has said that he has consulted the Secretary, and has been advised that he does not so construe the law, that I was forced to introduce this joint resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. Then would it not seem to follow that neither the President nor the Secretary of the Treasury nor the Surgeon-General considers the suggestion of the Senator a sensible one, and that it is not necessary to resort to this method?

Mr. CALL. It is not my suggestion. I do not know anything about it. I have never expressed an opinion about it. I have never seen a case of yellow fever in my life, and I do not desire to see one. It is the suggestion of the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, and he says in this letter that he has ordered a destruction of bedding and clothing which were sources of contagion, and which were beyond the reach of fumigation and disinfection. It is an ascertained proposition in sanitary and quarantine science now, and recognized and known of all men. So I understand, though I am not an expert nor an authority upon that subject.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator's proposition empower the President to seize property and destroy it?

Mr. CALL. It does not.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I do not see that the Senator makes any proposition which will be of the slightest avail here. The Surgeon-General says he has pointed out infected property that ought to be destroyed and he can not destroy it, and the Secretary of the Treasury and the President say they have not the authority to do it, and they need authority to do it. Now, why does the Senator not make a proposition that this property when it is evident that it is infected, may be seized and destroyed just as you destroy a sick ox?

Mr. CALL. The difficulty in the case, and I think I can have the Senator from New Hampshire see it, is that I am not asking for authority to seize any property; I do not know that we have the power to enter into a State manu forti and take a man's property for this purpose or strip the clothing from his wife and children.

Mr. BLAIR. Not even to prevent the spread of yellow fever all over the whole country to kill the whole nation?

Mr. CALL. No; not even for this end. It is an open question, and there are points involved which it is not necessary to raise. Sufficient it is that there are many persons who do not think with the Senator, and it is not necessary to exercise this power now, even if it was clear that we possessed it. If you give the money, and give the President and the Secretary express and certain power to use it, there will be no need of power to compel any one to take it, and if there should be the State authority will furnish it.

I am asking that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to pay for the clothing and bedding which under proper regulations may be ascertained to be causes of death, and that it may be clear that he has the power and it is his duty in a proper case to apply the money for that purpose. That is all. The Secretary now says it is not clear. The President said he thought if there was any doubt about it that the law had better be made clear. And as these are the officers whose opinion will control the expenditure of the money and its payment, it is necessary, if that is to be done, that it shall be made clear and beyond doubt. What sensible reason can Senators give for their argument and their proposition that the law should be left obscure and uncertain. I confess I am amazed at this strange proposition of Senators and the zeal with which they urge it. To what end shall the law be left uncertain?

Mr. BLAIR. But the Senator's proposition, if he will pardon me, is simply this, as I understand it: That when somebody comes along and says that he has got the yellow fever about him and wants pay for the clothing he is wearing, this money may be used to pay for these old clothes and their destruction; but if he chooses to travel with the yellow fever on his person, wherever he pleases, in any State whatever, there is doubt of the power of the Government to seize his clothing, whether in his possession or otherwise, to prevent the spread of the disease; and the President says he wants power by law to do that. The Senator does not make any proposition to give him that power. He still leaves it to the will of the individual who has the property to dispose of. There is where his proposition seems to me to be deficient.

Mr. CALL. I do not make any such proposition as that to start with. I think if you find a man traveling upon the trains or public conveyances, who has yellow fever or has baggage or clothing which contains it, there is no question of the power of the Government to seize it; but when a man is not traveling upon the cars, but is in a place from which he is liable to go upon the trains or public conveyances and where he probably will go upon them, and where clothing and baggage are about to be shipped, but are not yet in the interstate commerce, I think there is a region of doubt whether or not it can be seized; but be that as it may, I did not say that the President said he wanted power. When I applied to him with my colleague and the rest of the delegation from Florida on this subject, in response to the request which I shall now read, the President said he thought that if there was any doubt on the part of the Treasury Department, or in the law, whether the power existed of paying for this infected property, it had better be provided for by an act of Congress; and I think his opinion is very clearly a correct and sensible one, and I can not understand how any one can entertain a different opinion.

This resolution provides not "that a man coming along and saying he has the yellow fever, or cholera, or any other disease, shall be paid for his clothes, whether good or bad," but that when the board of medical men charged with this duty under the law and under the regulations of the Department shall say this man and his clothing will communicate in all probability this disease because of recent exposure to it in an infected locality, and the public safety and the public health demand that this property shall be destroyed—when that safeguard has been carefully observed, then I say that the money ought to be paid upon the proof of those facts; and it is proper that the law should so plainly declare, and it is not in any respect wise or sensible to impose on any officer the responsibility of interpreting at his peril a doubtful law. When Congress makes the law it is its plain duty to make it clear and certain, definite and precise in its provisions, and this has never been doubted or denied before.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator indulge me there?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I now understand the Senator to ask that by this proposed statute we give to the President power to interfere with persons and property before they have in any way become identified with the interstate commerce, and that the President would like this matter of power cleared up by legislation.

Mr. CALL. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIR. Well, is this not the difficulty of the Senator in his States-rights view of this thing, that there is no constitutional power, as he holds, to interfere with this person and this property until they have come within the domain of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution? If that be so, how is it possible for us to pass a statute interfering with that domain, so outside of our national constitutional jurisdiction? Is he not, in other words, asking us to pass an unconstitutional law to meet a difficulty of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CALL. I do not think there is any great difficulty about that. That is an old question which we have argued here time and time again in endeavoring to arrive at some legislation which would harmonize the different views which were prevalent in respect to State authority and power and the power of the General Government in reference to sanitation, quarantine, and the prevention of the spread of epidemic diseases. Of course there are those points to be met, but we arrived at a common agreement in the act of 1879, and in the appropriations made in different appropriation bills from that time to this, to exercise the power of the General Government as to interstate commerce in respect to the prevention of the spread of disease amongst animals as well as infectious diseases amongst men in the interstate commerce by requiring it to be done in harmony with the State laws. The great principle of constitutional interpretation in this country is an interpretation that shall effectuate the powers of the General Government in harmony with the powers of the State governments.

I do not care to discuss that question, and therefere in the amendment which I introduced I provided that it should be done subject to and in accordance with the authority of the State, and the money is appropriated to do those things in the States, which the National Government could not do, and without the exercise of forcible power the act to be done being within the domain of State authority, yet being an act necessary to prevent injury to the interstate commerce of the country, this power and this duty is recognized in all this legislation.

I will remark further to the Senator that the laws expressly say in so many words that this money shall be appropriated to do certain things in aid of the authority of the State boards of health and of the State quarantine regulations, and this law, which has been reaffirmed from 1879 until now, in every case gives this money under the authority of the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service to effectuate the State quarantine in those matters where the Federal authority was not recognized by law to extend.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. CALL. I will.

Mr. BLAIR. How in case the State authorities should refuse to receive the money and this contagious disease, we will suppose already so destructive in Florida, should be spreading over the entire country?

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Florida will allow me, I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that he is somewhat mistaken when he says that moneys have been appropriated from the Federal Treasury at any time to aid State or municipal boards of health in doing anything except to so regulate commerce as to prevent the infection of contagion from foreign countries into this country or from one State into another. That is the limitation; and it is for that purpose that moneys have been appropriated to aid State and municipal boards, and for no other purpose.

Mr. CALL. The Senator will allow me to say that I think I have said that every time I have said anything. Certainly that is true; but it does not affect this argument in any respect whatever. Our sole authority is to prevent the infection from one State into another. Everybody must understand that. But of what import is that to this question? If the doing of a certain act, if the seizing of a man with baggage infected before he takes the car within the limits of a State, if the burning of a house which is breeding cholera in juxtaposition to a line of travel, a highly contagious form of disease, within a State is necessary to the prevention of it in interstate commerce, what concern does that have with the question that our only authority is to prevent the infection of this disease from passing from one State to another if the burning of that house is necessary to do that thing? That is what I have asserted, and I have said that in this law, I repeat again, which the Senator from Tennessee was largely instrumental in framing, the authority was given to buy that infected house or any other house in express terms already; and shall it be said if, having bought it, it is producing death and contagion; having bought it for the purpose of preventing contagion from one State into another, and it is producing contagion, that the Government may not destroy that which is its own for the very purpose for which it bought it?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Florida will allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. The authority as to the house the Senator refers to was given to build or buy a house to be used as a quarantine station, was it not?

Mr. CALL. I will read you the law:

> To prevent the infection from one State into another—

Those are the words of the law—> of contagious or infectious diseases.

Mr. HARRIS. That part of the law which authorizes the buying of a house is simply a house to be used as a quarantine station.

Mr. SPOONER. It does not authorize the purchase of houses to be destroyed.

Mr. HARRIS. By no means, nor does it squint at it.

Mr. CALL. Let us see and let us examine that in the light of reason. The Senator from Tennessee says it is to buy a house for a quarantine station. Now I want to ask him why does the law authorize you to buy a house for a quarantine station? Tell me that.

Mr. SPOONER. For a public use.

Mr. CALL. What public use?

Mr. SPOONER. To isolate the persons who are supposed to be infected.

Mr. CALL. What do you want to isolate them for?

Mr. SPOONER. To prevent the spread of contagion.

Mr. CALL. Exactly so, to prevent the spread of contagion. Now, you undertake to say that it is a reasonable proposition to buy a house to prevent the spread of contagion, and having bought the house and found that it spreads contagion and is a cause of death, there is no constitutional power to allow you to destroy it?

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator make this proposition, that if the health authorities of the State decide that given premises are infected and that the public health requires that the premises should be immediately destroyed, that is a taking of property for a public use which requires the payment of compensation?

Mr. CALL. I do. I will state it a little differently. I say that the taking of property to protect the public health—and I challenge the Senator to produce a single plausible reason why it is not—is a taking of private property for public use.

Mr. SPOONER. In the State of Iowa they passed a law under which certain brewery property was destroyed, and the point was made as to its constitutionality, that while it was a taking of private property for public use the law provided no compensation, and the Supreme Court of the United States decided that property taken in the interest of the public health, under the police power, was not "taken for public use" in the constitutional sense of the phrase, and that no compensation was required to be made. In the case I supposed a little while ago of a fire, if the fire was spreading and it became necessary in the judgment of the officers of the city, the fire department or the commissioners, to destroy my friend's house in order to prevent the spread of the fire and the utter destruction of the city, that property may be destroyed without compensation being made for it. It is an emergency, an overwhelming public necessity, which is not the taking of private property for public use within the legal sense and meaning of that expression.

Mr. CALL. We are reasoning now about this, I take it. The Senator has given an illustration and I will give one. A war is raging, it is flagrant, and men are needed, for what? To protect the soldier and everybody else; but the soldier is taken and my friend and myself are left. Why pay him anything? It is the public welfare, it is the public protection. You and I are protected, and he, too, exactly alike; and why pay him for devoting his life and his services?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator must refer to a draft, I suppose, where a soldier is taken for public use against his will.

Mr. CALL. I do not care whether it is a draft or not. The significance of the idea and the reasoning is that you take that which is personal and you devote it to a public use, which includes the person as much as anything else. I do not desire to argue the question whether or not——

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will allow me to suggest in connection with his illustration that the power to take the individual for the public use in war is not a power that carries along with it the right of compensation on the part of the individual at all. He is given pay for his services for the time he is in the field, but he is not paid for his life. He has no right to his pension even, except by statutory provision. But the innate power in government is to command the force of every living individual for the common protection of all, and that, too, without compensation, as is demonstrated in the case where the individual, body and soul, may be taken, even up to death, and then there is certainly no compensation.

Now, is not this the distinction, I will ask the Senator, that wherever property be taken or wherever property be taken and destroyed, which property is not taken for the public use, but taken for the purpose of its own destruction, it may be for the general welfare, but in that case the individual runs his risk as a member of society, and he is not entitled to compensation. That is the principle. But where the thing taken is for the public and is subsequently valuable to the public and continues to exist as property and is property of the public, instead of that of the individual, then there is the right to compensation; but where for the common good a thing is destroyed, whether a man, or a beast, or property, there is no right to compensation.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to know if I really understand my friend from Florida to insist that where the Government calls a soldier into the military service it is in the exercise of the power of eminent domain—in other words, if he means to insist that there is any parallel in the cases?

Mr. CALL. I thought my friend was too good a logician to ask me such a question.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the fault in logic is in my friend, not in me.

Mr. CALL. Of course I am very willing if I am wrong to bear the blame. But in my view of society and government, as I understand it, dating from the time of Justinian and the civilization of the Roman Empire to this day, as recognized by all enlightened people, rights are founded in beneficent use and application. They originate in good for mankind. There is no foundation of right but beneficence. Power, concession from the people, has its origin in a beneficent purpose and use, and therefore I say that when the soldier takes the place of the Senator from Wisconsin, and gives his life and his time and his personal ease to allow him or me to do without the sacrifices which he makes, he has a right, not in the naked sense of power or of eminent domain, but in the higher and better sense of beneficent legislation, of proper action on my part and his, to compensation for that greater part which he has done for the public than he or I.

Mr. SPOONER. The resolution as presented by the Senator from Florida does not discriminate in any manner whatever between the property for which perhaps there ought to be some compensation made and the class of property or property so situated or infected that any lawyer must concede the owner is not entitled to be paid for it. He provides here:

That the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service is authorized, on the request of the governor of any State, to seize and destroy, under conditions and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, any infected personal or other property.

That is, property already infected which ought to be destroyed in the interest of human life—

Or other property—

That is, property already injured to the owner, property which it is almost a crime in the owner to maintain and permit the existence of—which is communicating infection and disease in the interstate commerce, and such condemned property shall be paid for out of the money herein appropriated.

That is, property condemned must be paid for out of this Government appropriation. Suppose the authorities of the State order it to be destroyed and the Government authorities acting in harmony and by way of aid to the State authorities concur, must all the appropriation or payment be made out of the Government appropriation? If so, why?

Mr. CALL. It does not bear any such interpretation. The resolution says the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to say for what this money shall be paid, for what property and under what circumstances; that is all.

Mr. SPOONER. It says all property condemned shall be paid for out of this appropriation.

Mr. CALL. Condemned under what? Under the rules of the Secretary of the Treasury. That is all. The Secretary of the Treasury shall say what shall be condemnation and what shall not.

Mr. President, I am of course solicitous that this measure shall pass, but I wish to place it before the Senate and to assume my own position in regard to it. The justification of this proposed resolution depends on whether it is beneficent or not. Is it authorized under our powers of government or not? Can we authorize a veterinary surgeon or a Commissioner of Agriculture to seize and destroy thousands of cattle and appropriate $800,000 for it within the limits of a State in pursuance of State law, and shall we hesitate to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to destroy infected property in the States under regulations which shall be prescribed by him in cases where, like in the case of infected cattle, disease and death are being spread?

That is all. Is it beneficent or not, and is it wise? If this epidemic, as the Surgeon-General has certified, can only be stopped in that way, then we should provide the proper means; and I have here a communication which I shall ask the Senate to print with my remarks without reading it. It is time that this body should wake up to a realization of the great questions of the age in which we live, to a proper sense of the fact that the danger to life, society, and government is more in the fatal plagues of disease and pestilence than of armed men and organized force. That we have something else as statesmen to do besides organizing armies and building navies, and paying for them, and providing policemen. We have other and greater ends of government and legislation than these.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator, in connection with this very proper and eloquent appeal, this peroration, a question that I think goes to the root of the matter, why will he not ask the Senate then to strike out of the proposition the words "on the request of the governor of any State," and not leave the whole nation of sixty-five millions of lives dependent upon the caprice of the governor of Florida or of any other State where this disease happens to be located? If the Senator will move to strike out the words "on the request of the governor of any State" I shall be very glad to vote for his proposition. Then it will read:

SEC. 2. That the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service is authorized to seize and destroy, under conditions and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, any infected personal or other property which is communicating infection and disease in the interstate commerce, and such condemned property shall be paid for out of the money herein appropriated.

Do you want to leave the lives of the people of the whole nation dependent on the will and caprice and pestilential States-rights views of the governor of Florida? The worst pestilence there is in this country is this States-rights doctrine, upon which theory the Senator has introduced his resolution. If he will strike that out, we can get along well enough, and we can control yellow fever and other worse things in this country.

Mr. CALL. I think I can give the Senator a very good reason for that. First, it is impracticable. There is such difference of opinion that we can not make any legislation that will harmonize with his views. That is one reason. Another reason is because the law for the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia, the law for the suppression of contagion and infection in the interstate commerce, has adopted a different rule. The precedents, therefore, are for this action and not for the manner of legislation which he advises. That is the practical reason why, whether he is right or wrong, I should not do what he proposes to do.

But I have said that I have made this motion in pursuance of the better and established sanitary and medical opinion of the day, and that we are confronted now with an enemy of the most formidable character, whose power over human life and human happiness, not in one State, but in all the States, has been evidenced in the most convincing manner on repeated occasions, and therefore we are called upon to do, experimentally and practically, whatever may be probably efficacious to stop the advance of this enemy.

I have this telegram from Jacksonville, signed by gentlemen of great intelligence, of eminent humanity, and of the highest integrity of character, who are now devoting themselves in the commencement of this epidemic, which I hope may be stayed, and which, if this country is wise, will be stayed and extirpated where it is. I have this telegram from them:

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., August 14, 1888.

To Hon. WILKINSON CALL, Washington, D. C.:

I am instructed by citizens' association to urge immediate passage of your relief bill, and to make part of the appropriation available here for strong measures to suppress yellow fever.

J. J. DANIEL,
President Jacksonville Auxiliary Sanitary Association.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., August 18, 1888.

Senator CALL, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

We are instructed to communicate to you the following resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Citizen's Auxiliary Sanitary Association, held this day, with the request that you adopt such measure as will in your judgment best promote the objects in view:

"Resolved, That while we do not feel it necessary to appeal to the charity of the public at large for the present, at least trusting that our people in the spirit of self-reliance which animates them will furnish means until their resources are exhausted, we realize the importance to the entire State of Florida, and the United States generally, that extraordinary efforts be made to stamp out the disease which has been introduced into our city and prevent its possible spread to other communities, and to this end it may be necessary to destroy buildings which have become foci of the infection, and undertake works of a public nature to remove all possible danger. We feel that the United States Government can most appropriately devote such funds as are available for the prevention of infectious disease to enable us to carry on these works and thus avoid a long and disastrous epidemic, in which event we would no doubt be compelled to seek the aid which has been so kindly tendered to us from many quarters."

J. J. DANIEL, Chairman.
J. W. ARCHIBALD, Mayor.
NEAL MITCHELL,
President Board of Health.

Colonel Daniel, who heads these signatures, is one of our most distinguished citizens, both for ability and eminent virtues of all kinds, and all these are gentlemen of intelligence and merit and distinction. The people of Jacksonville, with commendable liberality, have devoted their resources entirely to this great public duty, and have not asked for public charity nor for aid from the Government; but seeing that it is possible, with means greater than they have, to stamp out the present infection by destroying the places of infection, they have submitted to the Government this request that the authority in the laws shall be made plain and clear and beyond mistake and quibble.

Now, here is this epidemic, from which the pure and healthy climate of Florida exempts the State generally, but which has extended from Key West to the city of Jacksonville on its way to the great cities; which has attacked several towns along the line of railroad, commencing at Tampa, which is now comparatively free from it, and pausing in Jacksonville—a climate unfriendly to its propagation—this epidemic in its present state is easy to control with adequate means. The Surgeon-General has stated—and I think it will be found in his report—he has stated to me that in the little town of Manatee, which is adjacent to Tampa, some 40 miles distant on the bay, there was a nest of houses, and that all through the winter his expert and accomplished physician, Dr. Murray, whose opinion I know the Senator from Tennessee will state to be valuable, a patient, self-denying, intelligent, studious, thoughtful man, laboring in the interest of humanity and science, has reported to him that the entire origin of that disease, with a guard of fifty men around it, seeking to prevent persons going in and coming out, has been from a series of old buildings, where for a space of seven or eight months this disease has been generated in that immediate locality, from those houses, and communicated all through the country and now threatening the whole Atlantic coast and all the great cities, including Washington.

Mr. President, I have said all I desire to say to the Senate upon this subject. If we are refused this legislation so clearly required by the public interest, after having given $800,000 to seize animals and kill them, with the consent and co-operation of State authority, to prevent pleuro-pneumonia; having given authority to buy and destroy property of all kinds in the different States, cattle-yards, places where the contagion and infection of pleuro-pneumonia exists, which the Senator finds no objection to—destroying cattle-yards and paying for them under our laws—why not destroy the houses that are spreading disease and death all through the land? I care not for these unreasonable distinctions upon this subject. I am for the beneficent exercise of this power harmoniously with the power given to the States.

I insist that the power of the Federal Government and the power of the States can in all cases be harmoniously and beneficently exercised in co-operation, the one aiding the other; and I contend that that is the sole principle, the great life-giving principle, of the Constitution in respect of its distribution of powers. I do not believe that you need to coerce the States into the exercise of any authority given to them; but you need to aid them, as all this legislation does from the beginning until now, by appropriating money to aid the States in doing those things which may affect disastrously the general interstate commerce of the country, affect the national and public interests in respect to the powers and subjects over which the General Government has power.

Now, Mr. President, I ask leave to publish with these remarks a paper sent to me by Dr. Souvielle, who states that he is lately a surgeon in the French army, a member of the St. Thomas Hospital, London, and now of Hot Springs, Ark. While I am not a judge of and know nothing about these matters, it seems to me to be a valuable contribution to the studies of the age upon the subject of yellow fever and its prevention, and illustrates the necessity of this action on the part of Congress, showing that this contagion may be prevented.

The paper is as follows:

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., August 14, 1888.

I have learned through the "St. Louis Republic" of the development of a few cases of yellow fever in your midst, though I hope the reports of the prevailing state of panic among your citizens are somewhat exaggerated. My interests in the present case are double—that which I feel for the cause of science, and also that which I have in the welfare of the city and people of Jacksonville.

The generally unknown character of the yellow fever renders it more dreaded than it would be were it "more familiar grown," and to make it so should be the first care of the scientific physician, for only by the intelligent co-operation of the authorities, and of every individual of a community, can his labors to combat its inroads meet with the success they merit, and would certainly bring about were they thus supported.

The city of Havana, where yellow fever is always present, is never subject to panic on its account, for every one knows something of its characteristics and treatment but those who are its victims are new-comers who are afraid of it, and whose very fears are almost certain to make them succumb. The mind has a more powerful influence toward a good or an evil termination than can be fully understood, though well authenticated.

In a letter to your valuable paper (Times-Union, Jacksonville, Fla.) of the date of November 7, 1887, I gave a short account of yellow fever, and its origin and history, which I will not occupy space to repeat, though of great interest just now; but now that it is actually present among you, it is absolutely necessary to meet it boldly and intelligently. To do this it is expedient to know first what we have to combat, then where to look for lurking danger, and afterwards to consider the means.

That it is a microscopical living organism is well known. That it is carried by currents of air, that it is propagated in foul air and follows lines of travel are all facts equally well understood. That it requires moisture in order to exist is also true, as in a state of absolute dryness of the atmosphere it is harmless. Impure water and improper food convey it into the system, and all products and processes of fermentation serve to communicate it, to extend its ravages, and to intensify its virulence. High barometer retards its development and aids towards recovery those who are suffering from it, while a state of low barometer at the sea level is favorable for its propagation and the invasion of new regions. The low barometer due to elevation has an exact opposite of this, for in the dry atmosphere of high altitudes it can not develop.

We have now reviewed a few of the more important general conditions and forms in which we have to meet this intangible and insidious enemy. Of the requirements of the city generally, which are in a great measure peculiar and local, and of the means necessary to be adopted by the corporation, I hope to speak further, and for this I, as an individual, must wait for proper encouragement and support, which the authorities alone can render, but to other individuals quite as personally concerned as myself I give the following directions: If those who would benefit by them will bear in mind the previous portion of this letter, the reasons for the precautions and measures to be mentioned below will be at once apparent.

As I wish to be understood by those whose means or circumstances or business affairs will not permit them to leave the city, but who must remain to meet the emergency of the hour as best they can, I shall be very concise and put what I have to say in the simplest and most practical shape possible. They are immediately available for every person, while by their careful observation three-fourths of the cases can be prevented even after the infection has obtained the ascendency, and by their timely use it would never become an epidemic.

The subjects requiring attention are food and drink, sanitary regulations, and ventilation, prophylactics, and disinfection, to be considered in their order.

Only the very freshest gathered and cooked vegetables and freshly killed and newly cooked meats should be eaten, while no warmed over or left over food of any kind should be partaken. The use of ice and ice-water should be particularly avoided. From one-half to one ounce of chloride of sodium or common salt should be taken with food during every twenty-four hours. This acts as a prophylactic in the blood, and being extremely important and an easy condition to observe it should on no account be neglected.

All water which is to be used for drinking purposes should be boiled and kept closely covered while cooling, or bottled while boiling hot, and never allowed to be exposed to the air. Vegetable tar should be put in it, and this with small quantities of wine be the only beverage allowed. A half teaspoonful of flowers of sulphur should be taken twice in each twenty-four hours, and tonics of all kinds are also of extreme value.

The air of houses in damp weather and at nights must be kept as dry as possible, this being best effected by open fires. All sleeping apartments and the sick chamber should be in the highest story of the house, and the latter especially of large dimensions and well ventilated.

Burn all dejecta of the sick with the assistance of coal or vegetable tar (and the clothing and bedding suspected of contagion should be also burned), as these matters are a prolific source of propagation when allowed to remain in vaults or sewers or buried in the earth. All the water-closets should be disinfected daily, and a quantity of charcoal kept under the seat to absorb the evolved gases. Ice melting in the receptacle will also prevent the formation of gases.

Over (or within) each manhole or vent of the city sewers, and over all private sewers, should be placed, suitable in size to the opening, a cylinder or other filter of charcoal to absorb the gases escaping therefrom. As charcoal will retain about one thousand times its own volume of gases it is almost a permanent safeguard in such situations. The air from below is to be filtered through the charcoal, so that the bottom of the cylinder must be perforated, or what is better, made of coarse wire or wickerwork or lattice. The whole may be made of either of these materials, and it is to be preferred,

Dampness must be carefully avoided, and every person suspected of contagion sponged with alcohol; but above all do not anticipate or fear an attack. The fatality of yellow fever is always exaggerated in the public mind, as in the most widespread of all recent epidemics, that of 1878, the percentage of recovery was eight out of ten cases, and the tendency is generally to a favorable issue, unless complications exist. The sick should be all removed by the city authorities on steamers to the mouth of the river and kept there in salt atmosphere, which will greatly aid in recovery.

The steamers must be disinfected morning and night, and all the sanitary regulations as before mentioned carefully observed. Cities near the ocean should always have their hospitals near the seashore, and those in inland situations should so utilize the greatest altitude available. Physicians ought not to visit from house to house in the ordinary clothing, but should wear linen or a rubber gossamer while on such duty. Should the disease become beyond control, which condition obtains when it becomes epidemic, then sulphuric-acid gas should be artificially produced in the atmosphere in the following manner: At the intersection of the streets place iron cylinders or other vessels which will contain about 20 gallons each. These should have substantial bases and be filled with the following mixture, which is then to be slowly burned:

Take coal or vegetable tar, to each gallon of which is added 5 ounces of gunpowder, 1 ounce of flowers of sulphur, and one-half to 1 gallon of coal oil, this to be continued for several nights or until subsidence of the disease. By this means ozonification will be effected, and complete destruction of the infection thereby secured.

All the processes for the prevention and arrest of the epidemics, and the purification and protection of the air of cities from the exhalations from sewers are covered by a patent granted to me by the United States Government, but to the suffering city of Jacksonville for the present emergency I hereby give the right to use for her own benefit all my methods, which I have freely described, to relieve her in her hour of imminent danger and affliction.

M. SOUVIELLE, M. D.,
Late Surgeon French Army and late Member St. Thomas Hospital, London, England.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Senator from Florida will suspend. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 12) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes. If there be no objection, by unanimous consent the unfinished business will be laid aside informally, and the consideration of the joint resolution continued.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to suggest an amendment to the amendment reported by the committee to the pending resolution. The amendment reported by the committee seems to provide for the protection of all parts of the United States except the District of Columbia. It provides this protection:

To prevent the introduction of cholera or yellow fever into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory from another.

I suggest as an amendment to the committee's amendment to add, at the end of that amendment, the following:

Or into the District of Columbia from any State or Territory, or into any State or Territory from said District.

Mr. HARRIS. There can be no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this resolution is of no value as the committee have reported it. It is idle. The point is that the officials who have the power to spend this money do not consider that it gives them the power to pay for bedding and clothing and infected houses and to destroy them. Surgeon-General Hamilton was sent there to ascertain this, and he has reported that they thought they had not the power. In the cattle laws we have provided expressly that the money shall be applied to the payment for property. Why, then, talk about enacting here a law which is a delusion, under which the Departments will not pay the money for the only purpose for which it can be, and you have amended carefully the cattle laws so as to seize and kill cattle in the States and destroy the infected yards?

Why is it that you oppose without reason this humane and necessary amendment in favor of human life? Is it because I have no power to impress so plain and so unmistakable a thing upon the Senate? That may be true. We have but to look at the cattle laws to see all that this amendment provides. Why, then, shall all this objection be made to making that plain which you declare is intended to be covered by the general provision, but which is so general, so obscure, so vague that it may and will be interpreted to mean nothing and will leave the money in the Treasury unused, and leave the people to die without assistance or relief?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Florida look for a moment at the substitute reported by the committee?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator be kind enough to look at it a moment? I wish to call his attention to the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I will hear what the Senator has to say.

Mr. SPOONER. Would it not remove the objection by inserting after the word "prevent," in line 9, the words "by such means as he shall deem best;" so as to read:

To be expended, in the discretion of the President of the United States, in aid of State or municipal boards of health, or otherwise to prevent, by such means as he shall deem best, the introduction of cholera or yellow fever into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory from another.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him why shall we confine it to that expression? Suppose he says "I do not consider that I have the power under this law?"

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator answers my question by asking me another. I would be glad if he would answer my question, whether the insertion of these words would not clearly give to the President the power to purchase property and destroy it if in his judgment it became necessary?

Mr. CALL. I think so, and I think he has that power now under the law; and I think his discretion would be wisely aided by that suggestion of the Senator. I think if the resolution is to pass in this form it is a wise suggestion, but I think it would be better still to do what we have done in the cattle laws, to say that you may expend this money to pay for property. That we have done in reference to pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator upon that point seems to be under a misapprehension. Whatever has been done under our law relating to the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia in connection with State authorities has been done in connection with those authorities constituted by legislation and existing as a result of the action of the legislative power.

Mr. CALL. What legislative power?

Mr. BLAIR. The creation of State boards and the authorization on the part of State boards to seize cattle and destroy them, and they have gone so far and been so kindly in their relations to the National Government that when the National Government, through them, will assist in the extirpation of disease by paying all the expenses, they will accept the money from the United States. That is the extent to which they have gone. But the point to which I call the Senator's attention is this—that the power to seize property and extirpate disease by destruction of the property is one which is exercised in the State by virtue of the action of the Legislature, the creation of State boards by authority of law, and I would like the Senator's attention, because it is necessary that the Senator's views be understood.

The Senator from Florida comes to us with this proposition, that the Government of the United States, upon the request of the governor of a State, may step inside the State jurisdiction and exercise a power for the destruction of property with no other authority but an authority which, on his theory, the United States does not now possess—upon no other authority save the request of the governor of the State.

Now, the question I wish to put to the Senator is this: Can it be possible that the mere request of a governor can confer jurisdiction upon the United States Government to step inside the limits of a State and perform these acts?

Mr. CALL. No, certainly not; beyond all doubt. I answer the Senator from New Hampshire—I believe the answer is very plain—by saying certainly not. The request of the governor gives no authority, except in the specified case of the Constitution where there is an invasion of State territory.

Mr. BLAIR. That is for the suppression of insurrection and to repel invasion.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. That is a constitutional power. Now, the Senator denies the right of the General Government to go inside the territory of a State, within State jurisdiction, and destroy property to prevent the spread of disease. He denies that power.

Mr. CALL. I do.

Mr. BLAIR. His theory denies it; and now he produces a resolution and asks us to vote for it, which, upon the request of the governor of the State alone, will induce this foreign and alien and subversive power of the United States to destroy property within a State, when, as I understand him now, the legislative authority is indispensable before it can be exercised.

Mr. CALL. This joint resolution says the governor shall do it not without the legislative authority, but assumes that he has legislative authority.

Mr. BLAIR. But it does not say he shall do it subject to the legislative authority. The joint resolution provides this:

That the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service—

Not even the President, but—the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service is authorized, on the request of the governor of any State, to seize and destroy, under conditions and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, any infected personal or other property which is communicating infection and disease in the interstate commerce, and such condemned property shall be paid for out of the money herein appropriated.

There is no provision that the governor must first be authorized by legislative power within the State.

Mr. CALL. Well, Mr. President, that is not the question. The question is, does the Senator from New Hampshire recognize the fact that in the prevention of epidemic or contagious disease in the interstate commerce of this country from one State to another it is wise to appropriate and pay the public money, under regulations prescribed by the President or his executive officers, for property necessary to be destroyed to prevent contagion?

Mr. BLAIR. I certainly do.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator recognizes that, let him amend the resolution. If he thinks "request of the governor" is improper language let him say "subject to the legislative authority." The reason for putting in the request of the governor was that inasmuch as a dreadful epidemic threatens to-day the people of Washington, of New York, of Philadelphia, of Charleston, and Savannah, more than it does the people of Florida, where its pure climate and its piney woods may and probably will shorten its natural course, the question is whether in that state of things and no Legislature sitting, the request of the governor can be assumed to be subject to the State authority. I am asking for this, that this resolution shall say that the President or somebody may apply the public money to do that specific thing which the people there and everybody says ought to be done now, namely to pay for and destroy property which has spread contagion throughout the United States. Amend it in any way you choose to do.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the Senator that his facts, his conclusions, all repel the entire structure which he has offered to the Senate. It is inadequate; it is absurd. The Senator makes an effort to preserve his consistency with this, as I said before, pestilential States rights theory, which, notwithstanding it has already cost us billions of money and hundreds of thousands of lives, has been nourished and nurtured and has continued to remain the intellectual conviction of many as to the relations between the Government of the United States and the States. It is just as sure to result in great wars in future as it has in the past.

I say the Senator in his effort to be consistent in that wicked doctrine which is dead and buried or ought to be and has been understood to be as the result of the war, produces here a joint resolution based upon that theory; and then when pressed to be consistent with himself or to abandon his theory and to make his resolution what it ought to be and give the national power the right or the particular States the right to go where the disease is which concerns, as he says, the people in New York more than it does those in Florida, because there are so many more of them, what do we find? A hundred thousand men may be extirpated in Florida while in New York there are millions who are interested in the result of the spread of this disease and in the result of this legislation, it may be, and now he asks me to perfect his resolution, and he asks me, if the consent of the governor, which alone he provides for, is not sufficient, and he admits it is not, to amend it to make necessary the consent of the State Legislature. I do not act upon that theory at all. I deny the whole theory.

The consent of the State in no manner whatever is necessary. The National Government has the right under the national welfare, the national defense, to go within the limits of a State and extirpate any disease which is liable to spread over the remaining portions of the country. It is its duty to do it, and but for this doctrine the Senator would get legislation which would take care of Florida and all other portions of the country threatened by yellow fever or by cholera or those diseases which imperil cattle in every direction, he would get legislation vastly more for the general good and promotive of the general welfare.

Mr. CALL. I will say that the Senator from New Hampshire is not only courteous, but he is eloquent and he is learned and is not stupid. I will accord all those things to him, and I will be willing to be regarded by the Senator as stupid and as ready to propagate a very wicked doctrine, although I am not a doctrinaire. I am not at all dogmatic or doctrinal in respect to my opinions as to the exercise of power. All I want is to stop the epidemic of yellow fever, doctrine or no doctrine. All I want is the Senate to say that the President shall have power, in his discretion, or the Secretary of the Treasury, or anybody else that can be trusted, to pay the public money herein appropriated for houses which are places of infection or contagion to the people of this country. That is all. And I do it, not because it may be the best thing to do for the man who owns the house, but because as a matter of practical legislation, property that is infected will be destroyed when it is known that compensation will be made, and as a matter of practical legislation it will not be destroyed, neither the clothing nor the houses, unless it is known that money will be paid for them. It is the practical result that I desire, and therefore I have introduced the joint resolution in the very likeness and almost the words of the laws relating to the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia, almost the exact words, and if it does not suit Senators in the respects criticised I have not the slightest objection to amending it.

All I ask and all I want to do is to make the issue here and now that in the dreadful epidemics which threaten this country the power of the General Government, whether in the appropriation of its money to pay for property in the State or out of the State which is spreading contagion and infection to the whole people, shall be exercised. That is all, and I want to make that point.

It is true I am making it to-day for the State of Florida, which is now threatened and is the present source of the danger to all the other States, but I am as ready to make it and as ready to vote it in any form for Massachusetts, or New Hampshire, or New York, or Oregon, or any other State as I am for Florida.

That is why I want this resolution amended. It is because the Treasury Department, that is to spend this money, has said and the President has said that he does not recognize in that law the clear and unquestionable power to pay the money and make the regulations which may insure the destruction of property communicating contagion to interstate commerce. It is a practical question, and the Department is not ready to put that construction on it, and therefore I have asked that the law as it is admitted to be shall be made clear. That is the question. Is there any difficulty or doubt as to the propriety of making the expressions of the law clear so as to do that thing which it is designed to do? If there is, let the Senator from Tennessee give the reason why a law should be made obscure and doubtful. That is the only point. It is admitted that is the law, and it is also known that that is not recognized to be law. Now, let us make it clear and plain.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, from the day of its organization down to the present time, has believed and held that the only authority it has to deal with contagious or epidemic diseases was derived from the power to regulate international and interstate commerce. That committee has frequently asked Congress to pass bills and resolutions to so regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States as to strip it of contagion, believing, as the committee always has believed and still believes, that that power is clearly possessed by Congress, and that it is the duty of Congress to exercise it whenever and wherever necessary. For the last seven years there have been from year to year appropriations made, to be used within the discretion of the President of the United States, for the purpose of preventing the introduction of contagion from foreign countries into this country or from one State into another. To that extent legislation has gone. From year to year in the sundry civil appropriation acts these appropriations have been made.

The second section of the joint resolution of the Senator from Florida requires that upon the application of the governor of a State it shall be the duty of the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service to seize and to destroy any property, personal or other, which may be so infected as that it may breed and communicate contagious diseases. I undertake to say that under the substitute reported by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases the President has in his discretion the clear and indisputable right to perform any act which may be necessary or to use this money in any way which may be necessary to prevent the introduction of contagion from foreign countries into this country or from one State into another. He needs no additional power.

It is absolutely clear that he can use this money for that purpose, and it is within his discretion as to how it shall be used to best effectuate and accomplish that purpose. But it does not legislatively direct him that he shall, upon the application of the governor of a State, burn property and pay for the property. It might be a question, even if it was found necessary to destroy the property, as to how far it would be right or just or proper or lawful to make compensation for property destroyed because it was so infected as to be destructive to the public health. Indeed, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has referred to decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which clearly show that such property is not to be construed as taken for the public use; that it is not to be compensated for as property which is taken for the public use; that it is property which is destroyed in the public interest and is not to be compensated for. Such is the property to which the Senator from Florida refers.

The Committee on Epidemic Diseases, with absolute unanimity, were ready to vote any amount of money which may be necessary and which can be constitutionally used in preventing the spread of this contagion from Florida to other States, or from any one State into another. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that there is now a fund of $150,000 subject to the uses of the President, within his discretion, for this purpose; but in order "to make assurance doubly sure" (for if the necessity arises at all it will be an imperative necessity, and we can not measure the extent of it in advance), the committee consented to add to that fund the sum of $200,000, so as to give an amount ample for any possible contingency that may arise. That amount is subject to the use of the President, within his discretion, for the accomplishment of the only constitutional purpose to which it can be appropriated, that of so regulating commerce as to prevent the introduction of contagion from one State into another, or from foreign countries into this country.

That at all events has been the construction placed upon the powers of that committee and the powers of Congress by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. To that it adheres. We have provided by the substitute which is reported from the committee the additional appropriation of $200,000, which will be added to the $150,000, making a sum of $350,000, and it is to be presumed, if not taken absolutely for granted, that the President will use it in such a way as is necessary to accomplish the object and the only object for which it is legitimate and proper to make the appropriation.

I do not care to prolong this debate. The committee is unanimous in favor of making an appropriation of any amount of money which may be necessary and which can be used legitimately for the purpose, and I take it for granted that every Senator is ready to vote any amount of money which can be legitimately used.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from Tennessee sits down I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. It is not perhaps very pertinent to what is now going on, but it is a matter of interest to the public and will be to the Senate. When this subject was under discussion a few years ago, when there was a much more extensive alarm in regard to the spread of this pestilence than there is now, there were some eminent physicians here from the South, one from New Orleans, I remember, who thought that a method of preventing the spread of yellow fever by something akin to inoculation or vaccination had been discovered in Brazil, and there was some proposition to appropriate a sum of money for investigating that matter by our Government. Is the Senator from Tennessee, who is chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, aware whether that expectation has been verified or whether anything has turned out to be true of what was then believed by those physicians?

Mr. HARRIS. I am not aware of the fact that any commission of scientists has been appointed or sent to make the investigation which was then suggested and contemplated. My information, however, is that it is still a matter of grave and serious doubt in the opinion of medical scientists as to whether a prevention or certain remedy can be found by the idea then suggested. Yet there are advocates of that theory, and there are many scientists, I understand, who believe that yellow fever may be prevented by a system of inoculation.

Mr. REAGAN. In response to the question asked by the Senator from Massachusetts, I will state that, although I have no official information, I was advised recently by Dr. Davis, of Massachusetts, who took great interest in that question and in securing the appointment of the gentleman who was to conduct the investigation, that the physician so appointed had reached the conclusion that there was perhaps nothing in the theory propounded by the doctors in Mexico and one in Brazil; but he still thought it worth while to prosecute the investigation further to see whether some discovery could not be made.

Mr. HOAR. The question perhaps was not very pertinent to this subject, but I thought Senators would like to be informed what had resulted from that inquiry.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to say that I have the honor to be a member of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, together with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE]; and I appeal to the Senator from Tennessee to state, if he has not already done so, that from the first all the members of that committee have been not only willing but earnest and insistent that enough money should be provided to the Treasury Department to enable that Department to stamp out yellow fever on its appearance in this country. I myself called the attention of the chairman of that committee to the necessity of being ready, and it was ascertained that there was then subject to the control of the Treasury Department between $200,000 and $300,000 applicable for that purpose. I insisted that the chairman should make certain that that money was available, and he did so.

It was perfectly well understood that not only the Southern members of the committee, but the Northern members of the committee, were willing and anxious to do everything in their power not only to prevent the introduction of the disease of yellow fever, but to prevent its spread in this country if the disease should make its appearance.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from New Hampshire, I imagine, was not in his seat when I distinctly stated that the committee were absolutely unanimous in favor of appropriating any amount of money that was necessary for the accomplishment of the object.

Mr. CHANDLER. When the proposition of the Senator from Florida came before the committee the other day there was equal unanimity in the committee in favor of making new and additional appropritions sufficient to give the Treasury Department no excuse for not preventing the introduction of the disease or the spread of the disease if money or the precautions which money would bring could prevent its spread. That is where we stand to-day, not only the Southern members of the committee, but also the Northern members of the committee; and I ask the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] to make his statement on this point, because, inasmuch as the Senator from Florida puts himself in the attitude of complaining of the action of the committee, it is important that the position of the committee should be distinctly understood.

If there is any lack of power to-day on the part of the Treasury Department we want to confer that power. If it is necessary to destroy property, and the power is doubtful, we want to confer the power to destroy property, and we want to keep the treasury of the officers who are in charge of this subject at all times filled with national money, so that there shall be no excuse for any neglect whatever.

The only point on which we differ with the Senator from Florida is that we are not willing to appropriate in advance money to go into an appraisal of any of the bedding, or any of the furniture, or any of the clothing which may be presented by the citizens of Florida to be appraised and purchased and destroyed by the United States for fear it may have about it the infection of yellow fever. I ask the Senator from Michigan if he will not state his view on this subject.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Mr. President, after the discussion which has been had on this measure I think it is hardly necessary for me to add much to it. I will simply state, however, that with the other members of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases I was in favor of any appropriation which was thought necessary to be made in this direction, but for one I wanted to be careful to have the conditions so applied that there should be no complaint of an attempt to infringe upon the powers and rights of the States in this matter. As I understand the amendment of the committee, it was made with especial reference to that view of the case; and the committee were, as has been stated, unanimously in favor of the report.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I take it that we are here in this body to reason about the subjects which come up before us. If we have any function it is that of discriminating as to what is reasonable and what is not.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] says that we can do whatever is necessary to prevent the spread of the contagion from one State to another; that that is all the power. I grant that—everybody grants it—but that is not the question here. Nobody has raised any such question as that. The question here is, what is necessary to do it? What is the specific thing? The Senator from Tennessee says that the specific thing is included in what the committee report. He says that a law which provides not what specific thing shall be done, but what a specific man thinks ought to be done, is the sort of a law to pass, although you have knowledge that the particular thing that is required is in the opinion of that man not the thing to be done. The Senator makes the proposition that we should make a law as follows: "Be it enacted, That all our power is to prevent contagion passing from one State into another, and to that end the President shall do what he thinks best," not that which Congress thinks, not the act that everybody thinks is necessary, but what he thinks, and that makes it all constitutional; if he thinks a house ought to be destroyed it is right to do it. That is what the Senator from Michigan says. The Senator from New Hampshire thinks that that is States rights, to give the President an unlimited power to do something that he thinks is right. I say that is not reasonable; that that is no hypothesis for an argument.

I have proof here that the opinion of the learned and scientific and practical people of this country is that in this contagion and infection the destruction of the infected foci is a necessary fact; that all experience has demonstrated that fact. I have asked that that particular thing shall be declared the thing for which the public money shall be expended; and I am met with the argument that the committee have always believed that the only power they had was to strip commerce of contagion.

I want to make my record here. I do not entertain any such opinions. I do not want to stand upon them. I want to stand upon the proposition that in this great scheme of government, of national powers and State powers, the national powers are intended to aid the State powers, and that they are to be beneficently and beneficially construed, and not beaten about the bush by the idea that the only power the Government has is to prevent contagion as it affects interstate commerce. Certainly that has nothing to do with the purpose in view.

I wish to avow and maintain some reasonable and useful exercise of the powers of Government. I wish to be known as advocating the appropriation of the public money to the specific purposes within or without a State as will extirpate and prevent contagion and infection and the spread of plague and pestilence. If it be necessary to buy and burn houses, I advocate their purchase and the burning of them.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly I will.

Mr. HARRIS. Do you not think that the President, with such instrumentalities as he may employ for the purpose of investigating the exact condition of affairs in any given locality at this moment, is better prepared to decide what step is necessary to prevent the introduction of contagion from the State where it exists to another State than we are to-day prepared to dictate to him that certain property that the governor of the State may request to have seized shall be seized, and we decide to-day that it shall not only be seized and destroyed but shall be paid for out of moneys appropriated from the Federal Treasury?

Mr. CALL. I agree entirely with the Senator, and if I had introduced any such proposition as that here I should abandon it and vote with him.

Mr. HARRIS. Will you let me show that you have introduced exactly that sort of proposition?

Mr. CALL. If I have introduced any such proposition I will abandon it and vote with you.

Mr. HARRIS. Section 2 of the joint resolution, as introduced by the Senator from Florida, provides:

That the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service is authorized, on the request of the governor of any State—

Mr. CALL. Mark the word "authorized."

Mr. HARRIS. I mark the words as you have marked them.

Mr. CALL. The word is "authorized." I want you to emphasize that.

Mr. HARRIS. Then you propose to leave the entire discretion with the Surgeon-General. Is that your construction?

Mr. CALL. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRIS. The language is—

That the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service is authorized, on the request of the governor of any State, to seize and destroy, under conditions and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, any infected personal or other property which is communicating infection, etc., and disease in the interstate commerce, and such condemned property shall be paid for out of the money herein appropriated.

If your proposition does not mean what I describe it to mean, I should like to know what it does mean.

Mr. CALL. It is just about as far from what you describe it to mean as any two things on the face of the earth. What you described was that I asked for a law that should require property so infected to be seized on the request of the governor pointing it out, whereas the resolution that I have introduced and which you have adversely reported authorizes it to be done. The difference between "authorize" and "require" is just the difference between the sun and absolute darkness. It authorizes; it permits.

Mr. HARRIS. Then will the Senator allow me again? It authorizes the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, upon the request of the governor——

Mr. CALL. Yes; so far.

Mr. HARRIS. Then, if your construction as you now give it is the true construction, you leave the whole discretion to the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, or else you impose upon him the imperative duty to seize and destroy. The one or the other is evident.

Mr. CALL. I am surprised that so bright a man and so forcible a logician should in the presence of the Senate make that proposition. I undertake to say that if I have done that I will abandon the resolution and vote with the Senator. But what I have done is just as far from what he says as it is possible for any two things to be.

I introduced a joint resolution authorizing the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, on the request of the governor, under the authority and the conditions, and with the consent and direction of the President or the Secretary of the Treasury, which is the same thing, to do those thing, not in the discretion of the Surgeon-General, but in the discretion of the President and his advisers. You can order it any way you please.

It is to be done with the consent or request of the governor. Where do I get that from? There is no Legislature in session. The Constitution provides that the National Government, in the exercise of one of the most important functions in aid of the State's well-being, shall do certain things. Therefore if I am wrong I am wrong in the language of the Constitution of the country in assuming that when certain matters of internal regulation are to be done the governor shall be the inviting and consenting power when they are to be done in the States.

But why be so critical? The difference between the Senator from Tennessee and myself is not that difference. The difference is not in the appropriation of public money; the difference is in the question whether that money will be of any service as appropriated in the amendment proposed by the committee.

I have said that the joint resolution does not extend the power of the Government at all. Let that be the point. I have proposed in this emergency to apply the former appropriation of $150,000 to do what the Senator from Tennessee says, to prevent the contagion from spreading from one State to another. I want it distinctly understood in the country that before I asked the Committee on Epidemic Diseases of the Senate to act in the matter I applied to the Department to use this money as the Government servants in charge of this business declared was necessary for this purpose, and the Secretary of the Treasury and the officers there told me they had not the authority under the form of language which the committee and the Senate are imposing upon them.

Mr. President, I want to say just a little more upon this subject in reference to what Congress shall do to prevent the spread of contagion, as to what steps it shall pursue, and what that power means in practical use, not in general affirmation, which, like the text of the Scripture, is applied by every sect in support of their peculiar doctrine. What does the power to prevent contagion spreading from one State to another in interstate commerce mean? That is what we are talking about, not this old saw which covers everything of the latitudinous extension of the power to regulate interstate commerce. Let us see what it means in practical application. On the 18th of April, 1879, I find this act, which the Committee on Epidemic Diseases themselves recommended and which passed the Senate—the same committee that can not now appropriate this money to pay for the old rags and clothing, not of the citizens of Florida, but of the citizens of New Hampshire who are in Florida, for we have some there, and very excellent people, and I am asking it for your people as well as mine——

Mr. BLAIR. You have no old rags of citizens of New Hampshire down there.

Mr. CALL. Oh, yes, we have, and new rags, too; they all get old after awhile.

Now, let us see what this same committee did—what specific act—to prevent the spread of contagion. Bear in mind it is this same committee to which my friend belongs who can not find it in their conscience——

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know what the Senator is going to read, but he looks at me almost as eagerly as he urges this appropriation. I wish to call his attention to the fact that I was not on the committee at that time.

Mr. CALL. I know, but then you have adopted its methods and doctrines now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator then be kind enough to look at the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], for instance, when he emphasizes his point against the committee?

Mr. CALL. I look at him as a veteran who believes in this vast power to regulate interstate commerce, and I want to show what specific act he is willing to do to regulate it, and to see how far it goes beyond the purchase of old rags and bedding. Let us see:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized—

Just like I propose to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury—to contract—

For what?

for the purchase or construction—

You can not only buy, but you can build—of such steam vessel—

And what else?

And refrigerating machinery.

If you can freeze yellow fever out, surely you can burn it out. If you can build a boat to freeze it out or purchase a boat to freeze it out, surely there is no great constitutional difficulty in purchasing a house to burn it out. If there is I can not see it. I may be very obtuse, or I may be, as my friend says, very stupid and wicked as to States rights, but I can not see that, and I am willing to acknowledge it, if that be obtuseness.

Or to arrange with the Navy Department for the use of such vessel as may be recommended by the National Board of Health—

That does not require even the Secretary of the Treasury or the President; it is the National Board of Health, whose recommendation is to build this refrigerating machinery—to disinfect vessels and cargoes from ports suspected of infection with yellow fever or other contagious disease; the construction of the same, if such construction shall be recommended by said Board of Health, to be under the inspection of an officer of the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy, who may, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy for that purpose; and for the purpose of such purchase or construction, the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Here you have the building of a ship and refrigerating machinery to freeze out yellow fever and keep it from spreading, because the only object of that provision is to keep it from spreading in the interstate commerce of the country. I have asked Congress to make an appropriation of $200,000 to do what? Not in the recommendation of a board of health to buy or build a house, but in the recommendation and under the discretion and the guard of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Marine-Hospital Service to do what they have recommended to be done, to purchase and destroy houses that are known now to be diffusing the yellow fever through the country, and which by such purchase and destruction may beyond all question, not as experimentally here, but beyond all possible doubt destroy the infection.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALL. Yes, I will.

Mr. SPOONER. The power which the Senator proposes by section 2 of the joint resolution he introduced to vest in the Secretary of the Treasury is a Federal power, is it not?

Mr. BLAIR. It is to be vested in the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service. Is it a Federal power?

Mr. CALL. What power?

Mr. SPOONER. The power to seize and destroy, under the conditions and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, infected personal or other property.

Mr. CALL. Why is it Federal power?

Mr. SPOONER. Why is it vested in a Federal officer, then, by this proposed act of Congress, if it is not a Federal power?

Mr. CALL. I will tell you why.

Mr. SPOONER. If it be a Federal power——

Mr. CALL. Does my friend want me to answer?

Mr. SPOONER. Will my friend permit me to finish my question?

Mr. CALL. I will.

Mr. SPOONER. If it be a Federal power, a power conferred by the Constitution upon the General Government, to be carried out by governmental officers, upon what theory is its exercise made dependent upon the request of the governor of a State?

Mr. CALL. I will tell the Senator why, and I am surprised that he should ask me that question. It is a good deal like the old argument in Shakespeare between the grave-digger and Hamlet. It is a distinction without a difference; a play on words.

Mr. SPOONER. I want this measure made so that there shall be the fullest power in executing the provisions of the act. If it shall be found necessary, in order to preserve the interstate commerce of the country, to prevent the spread of the yellow fever or of the cholera, that a house shall be destroyed or that a vessel shall be destroyed, I want the fullest authority given by legislation upon the Treasury Department to destroy it; but I do not want the exercise of that power, which is in the general interest, in the interest of the whole people, in the interest of the entire commerce of the country, to be made to depend upon the consent or upon the request of the governor of Florida or the governor of any other State.

My question was not an idle question; it was not put to the Senator for the purpose of casting any ridicule upon his measure; and I should like to have it answered in the same spirit in which it was put.

Mr. CALL. I am very glad to answer it. I am always entirely courteous to the Senator, and his suggestions I appreciate. It is not my habit to answer questions otherwise than in the spirit in which they are put.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not put it as an absurd question.

Mr. CALL. The question is, why do I put what I regard the exercise of the power, which in this respect and to the extent it can properly be used is a Federal power, the seizing of this property, in conjunction with the State authorities? That is what the Senator asks. I will answer it if he will listen to me. It is because many persons think, the Senator from Tennessee thinks, I think, that there are certain things within a State, within its jurisdiction and power, which as an exercise of power can not be done by the Federal Government.

Mr. SPOONER. But this relates only to interstate commerce. What jurisdiction has the State over interstate commerce to the exclusion of the Federal Government?

Mr. CALL. There is a very plain answer to that question. Here is a house or here is an animal within a State; it is not engaged in interstate commerce, but there is the existence of infection and disease in it. I hope the Senator will listen to me. If he wants me to answer I will do it.

Mr. SPOONER. I am listening.

Mr. CALL. Here is an animal within a State. It is not now the subject of interstate commerce, but the fact of its having a contagious disease, as pleuro-pneumonia, affects interstate-commerce manu forti; the Federal Government can not go there and take that property by any process, nor pass a law to do it. That is the opinion of a great many, and I think so, too. Be it right or be it wrong, it is certainly the opinion of many persons. There is that house in that locality not engaged in interstate commerce. Perhaps the man who has the yellow fever and the infected house has not and never will have anything to do with interstate commerce, but the fact of the infection of the house or of the man's having it affects the interstate commerce. Yet it is in the jurisdiction absolutely of the State and the State law. I say with the consent of the State authorities the power of the Federal Government should be exercised to establish a wise system of policy by which that house and that man will no longer be a source of contagion. That is all there is in it. What does the law say?

I shall not detain the Senate longer. I had the statutes here in relation to the prevention of the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, by which I wished to show that in all these cases they have acted in harmony with the State authorities and the State board of health and all the local authorities on the request of the governor. For that reason I introduced the joint resolution in the form in which it is, and for the further reason that there is no other authority in the State of Florida existing to-day except the governor which is authorized to represent the State in respect to this matter.

Now, this is a practical question; that is all there is about it. I am willing to commit myself to the proposition, and I desire the issue distinctly made, that the money of the Federal Government shall be applied to the specific thing with the consent of the State authorities to do whatever is necessary to be done for the prevention of the spread of contagious disease from one State to another, whether it is paying for property to be destroyed, the removal and support of people liable to the disease, or any other thing useful or necessary to the suppression of an epidemic, contagious, or infectious disease.

I want to make that record, and I want to put in the RECORD, with the consent of the Senate, these acts in regard to the prevention of pleuro-pneumonia in the animal industries. What I have asked and what the Senator from Tennessee now refuses to do for the fever-stricken people of Florida and of the Atlantic coast, is the specific thing which has been done in regard to animals in the prevention of pleuro-pneumonia, that is the purchase and destruction of the infected property which is spreading the infection, while in this case it is the diseased and infected house. In the animal-industry law both can be done. They can seize and kill the animal. Of course you can not do that with a human being, but they also seize and destroy, with the consent of the State authorities, the infected property. They burn and destroy that. No man can find a distinction between seizing and destroying infected property in the two cases.

The Congress of the United States and the public policy of this country should be bound to do what the Senator says the law does not require them to do. When they take a man's house for the purpose of preventing the spread of contagion which would affect the interstate commerce, whether it is in Wisconsin or in Florida, the law should provide that the United States shall pay for it, that distinct issue would be made. And when they take the clothing from a poor man and his wife and children in order that it may not spread a contagion in the interstate commerce, although it still continues to clothe the people who are not subject to the contagion, I want the law to say that this poor man shall be paid for it, and I want it not only for the benefit of the sufferer himself, but I want it for the benefit of the people of the whole country, because that is the only possible method in which the infected property can be brought to light and destroyed, and to such a conclusion have all the authorities in Florida who have been in contact with this disease arrived. These are principles of legislation which should be recognized. Florida is the healthiest State in the Union. This fatal disease will soon pass away from her, but without this legislation it will find a lodgment in other cities and other States.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I am very reluctant, after so much time has been consumed in discussing this matter, to trespass further upon the patience of the Senate and upon the courtesy of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who has very kindly given way in order that this measure might be taken up at the present time. But before a vote is taken I should like to state very briefly the question that is before the Senate.

There seems to be no hesitancy upon the part of the committee or upon the part of the Senate as to the wisdom and propriety of making this appropriation for the suppression and prevention of the spread of this disease. The committee has unanimously favored the amount recommended by my colleague in his joint resolution, and there seems to be no unwillingness on the part of any member of the Senate to give such relief as is needed by the fever-stricken people of my State. The question of difference seems to be as to the manner in which the appropriation should be used.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] referred to this matter from a sectional point of view. He stated that the Senators from the North were perfectly willing to assist in making this contribution. That statement, though kind, was certainly unnecessary, for we have been made to feel in the past, whenever any question of this sort has come before the people of the country, and has come before the Congress of the United States for action, that it is one of those great subjects which rises superior to all party considerations, superior to all sectional considerations, and that whether the scourge is the yellow fever in the South or the cholera in the North the people of all parts of the country are willing to join hands heartily in taking such means to suppress it as are judicious and practicable.

Florida in this case is in the front rank of exposure to the epidemic. But it is a menace to other parts of the country. It may extend to all the Southern States. It may next appear in Savannah, or in Charleston, or in Norfolk, or it may traverse farther west and appear again in Memphis. If not successfully resisted in Florida, its ravages may be extended far and wide.

The people of Jacksonville are scattered all over the country. They have been compelled to leave their homes; they have been compelled to abandon their business; they have been compelled to flee to other parts of the country in order that they may have a refuge. So this is not a question in which my State or in which any particular city, town, or county is interested. It is a matter in which the people of the whole United States are concerned, and though the fight is now upon the Florida line it may very soon be removed farther north or west.

We are all agreed as to the necessity of meeting the danger and resisting the progress of the disease, and I believe that there is a substantial agreement as to the amount of the appropriation, and if the question were put at this moment the report of the committee as to the amount would be sustained by the unanimous vote of the Senate; but the question is as to the way in which the money shall be expended.

Without desiring to consume too much time, I should like to call attention to the recent action which has been taken with reference to this matter in the last Congress. On page 524 of the acts of the Forty-ninth Congress this power is given to the President:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera or yellow fever, to use the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated therefor by the act approved August 4, 1886, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same and for maintaining quarantine and maritime inspections at points of danger; and the President is further authorized to use of the same unexpended balance a sum not exceeding $10,000 for the purpose of investigating the merits of the method practiced in Mexico and Brazil for preventing yellow fever by inoculation.

At a former session of the Forty-ninth Congress, on page 247, this power is given to the President, similar to the other:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera or yellow fever, to use the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated therefor by the act approved March 3, 1885, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same and for maintaining quarantine and maritime inspections at points of danger.

Under this power the question has been raised whether the destruction of property could properly be authorized under that section, and whether when the property was destroyed the appropriation now proposed could be made available to pay for it. My colleague has already referred to the letter—perhaps he read it—from the Surgeon-General upon this very point. I will read the clause of the letter which refers to this matter. It was written in response to a verbal request on the part of the delegation from my State, Senators and Representatives, who waited upon the Supervising Surgeon-General and talked this matter over with him, after my colleague had talked with the President in reference to it, and I think our conferences also included one with the Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SUPERVISING SURGEON-GENERAL,
UNITED STATES MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE,
Washington, August 9, 1888.

SIR: Referring to our conversation of this morning, I have called at the Department and conferred with Assistant Secretary Maynard in regard to the matter, and have to say that the Department is of opinion that no existing law will authorize the destruction of any infected house in a State, but if Congress should make an appropriation to reimburse the State of Florida, or the individual owner, for the destruction of any house deemed infected so that disinfection could not be effectively performed, there would be no objection to the officers of this service acting as appraisers to determine the value of the property and superintend such destruction.

* * * * * * *

JOHN B. HAMILTON,
Supervising Surgeon-General.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate.

It is believed by many eminent physicians who are acquainted with this disease that it is often necessary to destroy personal property and sometimes buildings where there are decayed timbers exposed or other conditions which render them dangerous by affording lurking places for the seeds of the disease in whatever shape they may exist, and it was for this reason that this matter was brought to the attention of the Department and the President.

From the letter just read it seems that under existing law the power to destroy houses and buildings is not recognized, and it was the desire of my colleague in offering the joint resolution to put it down in unmistakable terms, when further aid was rendered to the people of the country generally for the suppression of those diseases, that this power does exist; that the destruction of such property shall take place under the direction of the Government, under proper regulations, whenever the necessity for such destruction is believed to exist.

I find in looking over the acts of the last Congress, on page 491, that this power has been given and probably exercised with reference to the destruction of animals to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia:

And the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, and in such manner as he may think best, to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, and for this purpose to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals and the quarantine of the same whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia from one State into another, $100,000 of this sum or so much thereof as may be necessary to be immediately available.

Then, on page 103 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, the following appears:

For carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, $100,000; and the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, and in such manner as he may think best, to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, and for this purpose to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased animals whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia from one State into another.

Mr. President, I do not consider it material as to this argument as to what section of the Constitution this power has been exercised under. It seems to be the policy of the Government to prevent the spread of disease among cattle by purchasing property and destroying it, and I do not propose in this discussion to turn to the article or section or line of the Constitution under which this authority is exercised or upon which this policy is based. If the last Congress did right in thus legislating to prevent the spread of disease among cattle there is no reason why that same power should not be exercised to preserve human life and to protect the people of this country from infectious and contagious diseases.

I regret that the committee has not clearly expressed this power and has not taken some action to incorporate the proposition in the joint resolution which has been offered, so as to give it in unmistakable terms in some manner under such regulations as may be necessary. The form is perhaps immaterial, but it should be expressed in some shape that Senators can agree upon, so that it may hereafter be exercised in accordance with law whenever it may be necessary. This power undoubtedly has been recognized as existing in the past, and I trust it will be clearly incorporated in our present legislation, either by adopting the joint resolution in the shape in which it was originally offered in the Senate or by making some appropriate amendments to the substitute reported by the committee which shall carry out the design in view when the joint resolution was first introduced.

The agreement of the Senate is manifest as to the amount, and I trust we shall find some way to lay down in unmistakable terms the grant of the power to destroy infectious property whenever it may be the means of spreading disease, so that the interstate commerce of the country and the postal arrangements of the country and the business of the country at large may not be impeded and rendered dangerous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the amendment of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. HARRIS. There is no objection to that amendment. It is proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be read. I do not know that the clerks have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment of the committee:

Or into the District of Columbia from any State or Territory, or into any State or Territory from said District.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee. I move to add after the word "otherwise," in line 9, "by such means as he shall deem best."

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest to the Senator to add the words "including the destruction of property when necessary."

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that will not be added; I think that is going a little too far.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator agree to add a provision for adequate compensation when necessary?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, I am opposed to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, after the word "otherwise," it is proposed to insert "by such means as he shall deem best;" so as to read:

To be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States in aid of State or municipal boards of health, or otherwise, by such means as he shall deem best, to prevent the introduction of cholera or yellow-fever into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory from another, or into the District of Columbia from any State or Territory or into any State or Territory from said District.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. After the word "best," in the amendment just agreed to, I move to insert "including the destruction of property;" so as to read:

To be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States in aid of State or municipal boards of health, or otherwise, by such means as he shall deem best, including the destruction of property, to prevent the introduction of cholera or yellow fever into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory from another.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me that that matter might be left to the action of the States. We are undertaking here to do that which is largely within the purview of the States. Florida, Louisiana, and all the Southern States, of course, have some interest in this matter, and we are proceeding somewhat generously, I think, although necessarily and advisedly; but when it comes to enter upon the question of the destruction of property, it is entirely within the range of possibility that old buildings and things of that kind desired to be disposed of may be unloaded on the United States. I think if property is to be paid for it had better be paid for by the States themselves. At all events, we had better let that remain until we know more about what this measure is likely to result in.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator from Florida will withdraw the amendment to the amendment, otherwise it will result in a prolonged debate. When the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the board that has the suppression of yellow fever in charge, are given authority to do anything which they see fit to do, when they are given absolute power without any limitation whatever, it seems to me the Senator had better let that power remain as it is, and not undertake to introduce specifications, because if you are going to introduce one specification, you may as well undertake to introduce another and another.

I beg the Senator not to press the issue in a shape which endangers the passage of the measure which he and his colleague affect to think is an important one for immediate passage, but to leave it where it is. With the amplest supply of money, the fullest possible power to do anything under heaven the officials in charge see fit to do, I beg the Senator not to leave the impression on the Senate and let the impression go to the country that they are anxious to have some property in Jacksonville, real estate and personal property, or anything else, sold to the United States at a valuation. I trust the Senator, in the interest of what he is trying to accomplish, and what he and his colleague have been urging upon the Senate, will withdraw the amendment to the amendment, and not ask the Senate to vote it down, as I am sure it will.

Mr. BLAIR. I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER], who was upon the committee, whether he understands that the resolution now includes the power to destroy property?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not in terms.

Mr. BLAIR. Well, in fact?

Mr. CHANDLER. Unquestionably in fact.

Mr. BLAIR. Then there is no need of the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Unquestionably to stop pestilence they can do anything they please, and when the Senator from Florida puts in "including the destruction of property" he is limiting the resolution in fact, and by insisting upon it he creates the impression that there is a determination down there somewhere to have something destroyed that it is not necessary to destroy in order to stop the yellow fever, and the cholera if it comes into Florida.

Mr. PASCO. The necessity for that, I will say to the Senator, is the fact that the Department at present does not seem to think that the existing law goes so far as to allow it.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator will either have to speak a little louder or Senators will not hear him. I can not hear anything he is saying.

Mr. PASCO. I will state again, then, that the importance of placing that clause in the resolution comes from the fact that the Department at the present time does not recognize that the existing law, which is nearly as broad as the resolution now reads, gives that power. I will also call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Kansas to the fact that that power exists, as broadly as here, in the law which I read awhile ago in reference to these cattle, and that no harm seems to have come to the country from the very broad power that has been given to the Commissioner of Agriculture in those statutes.

It does not seem to me that there can be any danger of giving too much power by putting in such a provision as this. While not willing to call for the yeas and nays on the subject, I should like to have the views of the majority of the Senate with reference to it, and will cheerfully yield to the action of the majority whatever it may be. In the other act referred to, power was given to the Executive Departments to destroy property in the shape of cattle without resulting in any harm, and I do not think any danger will result by giving a like power under this resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. But there is this very important difference between the two cases: In the power which is embraced in the bill called the "pleuro-pneumonia bill" there is a very narrow limitation in regard to cost or in regard to the price to be paid, which practically prevents any possible abuse of the power.

Mr. REAGAN. And it must be done under State authority.

Mr. PLUMB. And it has to be done, besides, under the State authority, as suggested by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. While I am willing myself to do everything I can to supply funds and give authority to meet the situation as it exists or as it may exist, I do not believe that it is wise to encumber this resolution now with something that is liable to lead to very great abuse, but that we had better proceed under the more limited authority, as I think, which is contained in the original proposition, until we see that it is necessary, because it can not be held that this would add to the efficiency of the proceeding, but it would only enable somebody to get paid for the property destroyed, and offer an inducement to proceed to a length which perhaps might not be necessary. It would be entirely possible, of course, by the deposit of a single yellow-fever patient in a row of buildings in the suburbs of Jacksonville or Tampa to make an assumed necessity for the purchase and destruction of the entire property, although it might, for all purposes of sale or occupancy, be unnecessary to resort to such a step.

While we are on the threshold now of a class of legislation to which we have heretofore given very little attention, it seems to me we ought not to go into any domain which will leave us in any doubt as to the result, or as to what may be absolutely necessary for the suppression of diseases. The question of compensation to property owners can very well come in later; but I think that very much less cost in that matter will arise if we do not provide for it than if we do.

Mr. HALE. I can add nothing to this discussion, except to say that as a member of the committee that reported this measure I gave it some careful attention. Let me suggest to the Senator from Florida, who offered this amendment [Mr. PASCO], that there are two reasons why he should not press it. In the first place any exercise on the part of the General Government of its discretion, its authority in the direction indicated by his amendment, should be most carefully done. It should receive no encouragement in the direction of amplifying any such authority.

I met this morning the gentleman who is at the head of the bureau in the Department of the Treasury which has charge of this matter, Dr. Hamilton, who was journeying South for the purpose of giving personal supervision to this most important subject. He asked me, as was natural, what I thought was the extent of his power, and referred to this resolution as reported by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. I was able to say to him, from my own conviction, that if it became necessary in order to prevent the introduction or the spread of cholera or of yellow fever (we were talking about yellow fever mainly) he might under the measure that the committee had reported exercise the power of the destruction of property; that in an extreme case it might be done under this general authority. I have no doubt that he might do that in an extreme emergency.

But let me suggest to the Senator from Florida that if he insists on urging this amendment and its voted down, as I make little or no doubt that it will be, he is then confronted with a vote which puts the burden on the other side and would render it difficult and perhaps impossible for the officers of the Government executing this law to destroy property under any circumstances. He will have got the negative action of the Senate on that proposition. Therefore, for that thoroughly practical reason I hope he will not insist on his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BROWN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "best," in line 9, it is proposed to insert "including the destruction of property;" so as to make the provision read:

To be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States in aid of State or municipal boards of health, or otherwise, by such means as he shall deem best, including the destruction of property, to prevent the introduction of cholera or yellow fever into the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the adoption of this amendment the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will vote down this amendment. That we should undertake to pay for every house in Florida in which yellow fever may exist, and that we should undertake to pay for all the clothing worn by the people of Florida who may come in contact with the yellow fever, is, it seems to me, too absurd a proposition for argument.

Mr. CALL. If there is anything that is more absurd than the statement which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has made, I can not imagine what it is. Nobody asks that Congress shall pay for all the clothes that the people wear in the State of Florida nor that they shall pay for all the houses in the State of Florida, nor are the Senators from Florida at all affected by the idea that the country will understand that they are begging the United States to buy some property in Florida. These are very poor suggestions and quite unworthy of so important a subject.

Mr. President, this resolution, if passed, will not probably cost the Government of the United States $20,000, and yet the passage of this amendment will save the Government of the United States probably two millions of lives of people and millions of money, for who can tell what day the yellow fever in its most flagrant form may be communicated to Savannah, to Charleston, to Washington City, to New York, and what man stands here to say that he can reasonably guaranty or can give even a probable reason for supposing that the infection will not spread with the rapidity which it has done in former years and in communities where they have not the salubrity of climate and atmosphere that we have.

What an absurdity for men to attempt to predicate legislation, in the presence of a danger of such a character, upon such a hypothesis as that it will not spread or that the President of the United States will buy all the clothes that the people of Florida wear. What a proposition is that, that you can not trust your executive officers with the expenditure of $200,000 for fear that they will be corrupted into buying property to a large extent in the State of Florida. Why, Mr. President, the suggestion is unworthy of this place, of the magnitude of the occasion, and of the great object to be accomplished.

I appeal to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], whom I supported in inserting into the pleuro-pneumonia bill the provision "to expend any part of this sum of $200,000 as he may deem necessary in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals." You can buy a diseased animal, and you give only twenty or a hundred dollars or $500 for it, and I say to the Senator from Kansas that many of these animals so diseased are of greater value than many of the poor houses that will be burned under this appropriation; and yet these houses are all that some poor people have. One of these cows provided for in the pleuro-pneumonia bill costs more money and is worth more money than the poor houses of some poor people that will be destroyed in Florida.

Our people are feeding themselves. We have not accepted the offer of rations from the Government of the United States. They are sending away the people of other States who are themselves too poor to go, at the expense of the people of Jacksonville; and with magnificent liberality and charity they have declined aid for any other purpose than that which is absolutely necessary. But they have appealed here by these resolutions, and have said, by a consensus of opinion of all the people there and of the medical force there, that these houses which are the foci of infection, as they term it, ought to be destroyed, and they have not the money from private charity to pay for them, nor is it right that they should spend their money to prevent infection in the interstate commerce. Here is your legislation about animals providing that the same thing may be done to save animal property which we ask may be done to save human life.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that there is no parallel in the cases cited by him, nor could there be, unless the bill he read from had provided for the destruction of the stables in which the animals were housed. So there is nothing in that comparison at all.

Now, the Senator has undoubtedly got in mind some houses that he wants destroyed and paid for. If he would enumerate them, that would be a different thing. I do not want to interfere with any particular object that the Senator has in view. If he has any special interest of that kind to subserve, any constituents whose houses he wants taken off their hands, I would feel like obliging him in that particular.

Mr. CALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if he thinks that is an argument that he is making, the suggestion that the Senator from Florida has some houses in mind that he wants destroyed in order to benefit some of his constituents! I ask him if he thinks that is an argument in reply to the statements made by all the medical and experienced authorities and laymen who have been in contact with this great scourge, who say that they are of opinion that certain houses which are ascertained by them—not by the Senator from Florida, but by these people—and which may be decided by the President or the Secretary to be spreading contagion in the interstate commerce ought to be destroyed. What a reply to that proposition that the Senator from Florida doubtless has "some houses" in his mind that he wants destroyed to benefit his constituents!

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator said that the expenditure would not exceed $20,000, and he must have known where it was to be paid. He said the houses belonged to poor people in Jacksonville and were not of as great value as a single animal named in the pleuro-pneumonia bill. I was therefore justified in saying that he knew where the money was to be spent and for whose benefit.

Mr. CALL. Let me relieve the mind of the Senator from Kansas by saying that I do not know of a single house in Jacksonville that is the focus of any contagion, nor a single house that ought to be destroyed any more than the Senator from Kansas has knowledge of any cows that should be destroyed under the authority given in the pleuro-pneumonia bill, and I would be ashamed to suggest that the Senator in his strenuous advocacy of the pleuro-pneumonia bill had for his object the payment to his constituents for some Kansas cows.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida, though not in connection with the precise matter he is discussing with the Senator from Kansas, what is the reason that the State of Florida, like the State of Vermont, is not capable in point of law and able in point of means to get rid of a local infection which exists in a particular part of her territory, at her own expense? That is a point I should like to understand.

Mr. CALL. I will endeavor to explain that to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. In the first place, there is no Legislature sitting or which has been sitting in Florida for, I think, over a year—that is one reason—and there is no appropriation. Then the State of Florida has never before had an epidemic of this fever that has remained so long and extended so far into other localities. Heretofore it has been confined for a few months to one or two ports. On this occasion it has spread since last summer, when it was an epidemic on the coast, one place and in Key West. It has followed the line of railroad—the new lines of communication—to the extreme verge of the northern part of the State, stopping in one or two localities. The State of Florida has no legislation at this time applicable to the case. The epidemic does not stay its ravages for the Legislature to assemble.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How long does it take the governor of Florida—I suppose he has the constitutional authority—to call a special session of the Legislature, if you have no general laws bearing on that subject?

Mr. CALL. I suppose it would take the governor thirty days to extend information throughout the State and gather the members from the State in all directions. I will ask my colleague if he does not agree with me in that?

Mr. PASCO. Fully.

Mr. CALL. I will say further that the people of Florida in many of these localities are scattered widely and there is a panic through the country, so that the times are not favorable for considering adequate legislation. And further I say, with all the legislation of Congress looking to the prevention of the spread of contagion from one State to another, voted for by the Senator from Vermont, that in cases where the cause of the contagion is being directly communicated from the State of Florida to the interstate commerce it is proper that the interstate commerce should bear its part of the cost.

I will add that the State of Florida, under all circumstances, will have to pay nine-tenths of the cost of suppressing this epidemic. Give them this $200,000, burn every house which it will buy and all the infected clothing, and still the State of Florida will have paid its million dollars for the prevention of this contagion in the interstate commerce. Do all you can, and still the burden will lie there and with our people, and the sorrow and the grief and the calamity will be theirs. No people have ever done more; none have ever shown more beneficence, virtue, and generosity, and they need fear no comparison with Vermont or any other State for public spirit or personal virtue.

Mr. COCKRELL. In order to save time, as I believe the amendment will be voted down, I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to a withdrawal of the order for the call of the yeas and nays? The Chair hears none. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That in addition to the unexpended balance of the contingent fund heretofore appropriated, the sum of $200,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to be expended, in the discretion of the President of the United States, in aid of State or municipal boards of health, or otherwise, by such means as he shall deem best, to prevent the introduction of cholera or yellow fever into the United States from foreign countries or into one State or Territory from another, or into the District of Columbia from any State or Territory, or into any State or Territory from said District.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I doubt very much whether the word "contingent" ought to be there. I doubt very much whether the statute makes that fund by legal title a "contingent" fund, and the use of that word might embarrass the President.

Mr. HARRIS. The statute provided that the money shall be expended upon the contingency of an existing or threatened epidemic of the diseases named.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but that does not make the fund a contingent fund, and if the word "contingent" be struck out no technical disadvantage can result.

Mr. HARRIS. There can be no difficulty about striking out the word "contingent."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in line 3, to strike out the word "contingent;" so that the clause will read:

That in addition to the unexpended balance of the fund heretofore appropriated the sum of $200,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, as amended, was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 915) granting a pension to Susan Edson;

An act (S. 2253) granting a pension to Mrs. Alvis J. Hockey;

An act (S. 2579) granting a pension to Mrs. Maggie A. Ward, formerly Miss Maggie A. Egan;

An act (S. 1325) for the relief of John McKernan;

An act (S. 1609) for the relief of James McLaughlin;

An act (S. 1122) granting an increase of pension to Willian Collinsworth; and

An act (S. 3248) for the relief of John W. Durr.

BUST OF GARIBALDI.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I had given notice that I should call up this forenoon the resolution relative to the statue of General Garibaldi, and I now find a protracted debate and another one coming on. I propose, therefore, to give notice that in the morning hour to-morrow I will make the observations I had intended to make to-day.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10556) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11062) for the removal of the political disabilities of Gustavus W. Smith; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

JACKSON, MISS., MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to state that to-morrow, after the morning business, and at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] of which he has given notice, it is my purpose to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary in respect of the municipal election at Jackson, Miss.

J. W. PORTER.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yesterday afternoon the Senate passed a bill (H. R. 4792) to pension J. W. Porter. I laid it aside at the time. I find that there was a very grave error made in the report made in the other House and which was adopted by the Senate committee. I therefore move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate, and I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which this bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4792) to pension J. W. Porter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state that it is a pension to a member of what is known as Powell's Battalion of Missouri Mounted Volunteers. In the report, which is copied from the House report, there is this statement:

The Adjutant-General further states that although the battalion was called into service under the act of Congress of May 13, 1846 (providing for volunteers for the war with Mexico), yet it was used for the purpose of laying out a route to Oregon, and did not serve in the war with Mexico.

That regiment, Mr. President, was not formed under that act at all, but was organized under the act of May 19, 1846—"An act to provide for raising a regiment of mounted riflemen and for establishing military stations on the route to Oregon;" and if the Adjutant-General ever made such a report as that it was not founded on the record or on the facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill whose title has been read. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to postpone the special order, and take up the resolution in relation to the investigation of the Louisiana election.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was agreed to in the morning, and the resolution was laid aside informally to allow the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to call up the joint resolution which has just been disposed of.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood that, but I also understood that it was superseded at the expiration of the morning hour by the special order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg pardon of the Chair. The action of a previous occupant of the chair misled me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the reading of the resolution submitted by me July 19, 1888, with respect to the recent election in the State of Louisiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to inquire (1) into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana, held on the 17th day of April, 1888, at which there were chosen State officers and also a Legislature, which has since elected two United States Senators; and especially to ascertain and report whether the 136,746 votes returned for the candidate of the dominant party for governor were actually cast, in view of the fact that at no previous election had the votes for such candidate of such party exceeded 88,794; and also why in the parish of Madison there were returned 3,530 votes for one party and none for the other; in East Feliciana Parish, 2,276 for one party and only 5 for the other; in Morehouse Parish, 1,584 for one party and only 14 for the other; in Ouachita Parish, 2,994 for one party and only 5 for the other; in Sabine Parish, 1,441 for one party and only 2 for the other; in Tensas Parish, 4,627 for one party and 113 for the other; and why there were similar returns from other parishes; and also to ascertain and report whether or not at said State election there was any violence, intimidation, or fraud which prevented a fair election, and particularly whether or not there were any false canvasses or false returns made by the local election officers or included in the final canvass of the votes.

And in case said committee shall find that such illegalities as violence, intimidation, or fraud, false canvasses or false returns prevailed in connection with such election, then said committee shall further inquire—

2. Whether any of the acts or omissions of the officials or other persons responsible for or connected with such illegalities were contrary to the Constitution of the United States or the amendments thereof, or were violations of any of the statutes of the United States, especially the provisions of chapter 7, Title LXX, of the Revised Statutes, punishing crimes against the elective franchise and civil rights of citizens, and if so, whether any prosecutions have been or ought to be commenced in the United States courts for such offenses.

3. Whether such illegalities are likely to be repeated in connection with the election to be held in said State on the 6th of November next for Representatives in Congress; and if so, whether there is occasion for the alteration by Congress of any of the regulations prescribed by said State for holding elections for such Representatives in Congress.

4. And said committee shall also inquire whether there were in connection with the aforesaid State election illegalities, frauds, false canvasses, and false returns so extensive and systematic in their character as to show that there existed on the part of the various State election officers a deliberate plan to apparently carry said election without regard to the votes actually cast, and to choose a governor and other State officers and a State Legislature by such illegal, false, and fraudulent means, and if so, whether said Legislature was actually and duly elected by the people of Louisiana, or was in fact substantially the creation solely of the returning and canvassing officers, and whether said State of Louisiana has a republican form of government, including a Legislature entitled to choose United States Senators, and to provide methods for the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

PATENT OFFICE ATTORNEYS' FUND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Patents, transmitting, in response to a resolution of August 2, 1888, a statement showing the names of persons and the amount of their deposits with Levi Bacon, financial clerk of the Patent Office, in what was called the "attorneys' fund," at the time of the death of said Bacon in 1887, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business being informally laid aside, the resolution which has just been read is before the Senate, and the Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it is my purpose to state the facts and principles which require and justify the investigation proposed by the resolution which has been read of the State election in Louisiana said to have taken place on the 17th of April last, which has already resulted in the choice of two United States Senators who will claim to sit in this assembly.

The first fact is the suspicious character of the face of the returns, which show 136,746 votes and 84,753 majority for Francis T. Nicholls for governor, when the vote for Cleveland and Hendricks in 1884 was only 62,540, and their majority only 16,193. The returns also show overwhelmingly Republican parishes as having cast the following votes:

Parishes.	Votes cast.		Registered votes.
	Nicholls.	Warmoth.	White.	Colored.
Madison	3,530	0	279	3,081
East Feliciana	2,276	5	1,072	1,775
Morehouse	1,584	14	780	1,683
Ouachita	2,994	5	918	2,183
Sabine	1,441	2	1,173	329
Tensas	4,627	113	471	3,689
Total	16,452	139	4,793	12,740

It must be admitted in the outset that there has been some difficulty in ascertaining what has been the official count of the vote of the State. No official promulgation of it has ever yet appeared in any Democratic newspaper that I am aware of. False countings and the killing of voters, although the principal Democratic methods of carrying elections in Louisiana, yet are not often found recorded in the Democratic newspapers, and never in the local newspapers. Frightful as are the constantly recurring political and other butcheries of the negroes of the South, yet that section is not so lost to all shame that there does not exist a desire to keep such brutal deeds out of the newspapers of the vicinity. Hence they usually come to public view in newspapers that are distant from the occurrences, to which papers some letter or telegram has found its way, and which venture to publish facts which the local papers dare not mention. For instance, I find in the Washington Critic of August 20, 1888, the following telegram:

NEGROES KILLED BY A MOB.

NEW ORLEANS, August 20.

News is received of the killing of two negroes by a mob at Sylvarena jail, in Smith County, Mississippi, last Friday night. Four negroes were under arrest for killing a white man named Lee. The mob broke into the jail, but were unable to get into the cage where the accused negroes were confined, so they thrust their guns through the bars and shot two of the prisoners to death.

I undertake to say that there will be no account of that transaction in the Democratic paper of Smith County or of Sylvarena, and yet it happened there last Friday night. That murder of these negroes took place under precisely the same circumstances as those under which were slaughtered Judge William Wallace Chisolm and his son and daughter. They were imprisoned in jail, and a mob broke into the jail, thrust their guns through the bars of the cell, and shot this innocent father, this son, and this daughter to bloody death, and the local papers of Mississippi said nothing upon the subject, but the information came by telegraph to some metropolitan journal.

I find in the Sunday Herald, published in this city on August 19—last Sunday—the two following telegrams. There seems to be an epidemic of negro killing going on at the South about this time, and it prevails there to a much greater extent than does either cholera or yellow fever:

SHOT HIM TO DEATH.

APALACHICOLA, FLA., August 18.

A lynching took place at Ocheekhee, Calhoun County, Wednesday. Nash Griffin, a negro, wrote an insulting note to a young white lady, Miss Kimmie Griffin. She showed the note to white men, who caught Griffin, gave him one hundred lashes, and ordered him to leave the county. He did not go, when forty masked men caught and shot him to death. No arrests have been made.

Undoubtedly Griffin ought not to have written the note, if he did write such, but that is not the way to measure out justice.

I read the next:

NEGROES SLAUGHTERED BY REGULATORS.

NEW ORLEANS, August 18.

Reports from Freetown and from other sources indicate that more than twenty negroes were killed on Thursday by regulators, and that several others were severely injured.

Now, I believe that not in any local paper published at Apalachicola will there be any account of the shooting to death of Nash Griffin, nor will there be at Freetown, or in any of the local papers published in that vicinity, any account of the negro killing, but they come out in several directions, sent on to metropolitan or to Northern newspapers.

Here is an item from the Washington Star of August 18 last:

TWENTY NEGROES KILLED BY REGULATORS.

NEW YORK—

Meaning New Orleans—

August 18.

Reports from Freetown and from other sources indicate that more than twenty negroes were killed on Thursday by regulators, and that several others were severely wounded. A special dispatch to the Picayune from Shreveport says: "A reliable report has been received here that on Tuesday last a negro was hanged by a mob near Big Cypress Bayou, in Bossier Parish, for breaking into a store and stealing a sum of money."

Bossier Parish is one of the bulldozed parishes of Louisiana, and that negro was not killed for breaking into a store and stealing a sum of money, atrocious as it would be to kill him for that reason, but he was killed as a preparation for the fall election; and I believe it can never be shown that the local newspapers at Shreveport published any report of that transaction.

The Washington Post of August 18 (that was Saturday last) has an account of the Freetown transaction, which is as follows:

A WAR OF RACES—EIGHT NEGROES AND ONE WHITE KILLED IN LOUISIANA.

NEW ORLEANS, August 17.

E. P. Smith, a civil engineer of New Iberia, was killed yesterday at Freetown by citizens of that place for stirring up trouble among the negroes.

It will appear in a later account of the transaction that that statement is incorrect.

The affair grows out of the whipping of some disreputable parties at Abbeville on Friday by regulators. * * * The worthless negroes who had been ordered out of Iberia took refuge at Freetown, where they armed themselves and prepared for war. On Thursday the property owners ordered the negroes to disperse and surrender their arms. Some obeyed, but others went to Rev. H. Nora's house, in his absence, and defied the whites.

That is, these terrible negroes who had been ordered out of one place, and, as the dispatch says, "prepared for war," took refuge in the house of their pastor, a negro preacher.

They were given twenty minutes to lay down their arms. Finally a volley was fired into the house. Smith left the attacking party to enter the house and was slain. The negroes finally became panic-stricken and fled. The bodies of eight negroes lay on the floor of the house when the firing ceased.

There will never be any account of that butchery in the local newspapers of that county.

I find in the Weekly Pelican, of New Orleans, Saturday, August 4, this account from the State of Georgia:

HORRIBLE.

The telegraph brings the information from Jackson, Ga., that a colored man named Sanders was attacked in his house on Thursday night, July 26, by a mob of eight or ten masked men.

Breaking down the door, they rushed in, and laying hold of Sanders, his wife, and son, a boy of twelve years, beat them almost to death before the woman and boy could make their escape to give the alarm. Sanders is a cripple, having been shot last fall by two white men so badly that his leg had to be amputated. The men were to be tried and Sanders was the only witness against them. In June last Sanders's home was attacked by a masked mob, who, after beating him and his family, gave him fifteen days to leave the county under penalty of death, stating that he should never testify against the men who shot him.

On Thursday night the mob beat the old negro almost to death. Being a cripple and old and helpless he fell an easy prey to the disguised demons, who never left the house until they were notified by watchmen, whom they had stationed around the house, that the alarm had been given, and that the people of the town were being awakened. They quietly withdrew, leaving the old negro covered in blood and in a failing condition, while his wife and child ran from house to house calling for help as the blood flowed copiously from every part of their bodies.

There is no account of that bloody deed, I undertake to say, in the newspapers of Jackson, Ga., but it was telegraphed to New Orleans and published in the Pelican. Doubtless Mr. Sanders will become converted to the principles of the Democratic party, and vote for Cleveland next November.

But notwithstanding the difficulty in ascertaining the facts in relation to the frauds, false countings, and political murders at the South, there is some obtainable evidence concerning the vote in Louisiana in April, as returned or finally counted by the secretary of state. We have, first, the statement published by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] in his speech of May 1, 1888. That was published in the New Orleans Bee of April 24, and the Senator from Kansas, while giving it to the Senate, remarked that the returns "were still coming in;" and they did continue to come in.

The statement in the Bee gave Nicholls 131,899 votes and Warmoth 48,699 votes, a majority for Nicholls of 83,200.

The New Orleans Bee is a newspaper printed in the French language. I have been unable to find the full canvass of the votes of the State in any Democratic newspaper, but in the Weekly Pelican of May 12, a New Orleans newspaper of which John L. Minor is the managing editor, I find the following:

THE VOTE AS RETURNED.

The entire vote of the State, as counted for Nicholls and Warmoth, and officially promulgated by the secretary of state, Oscar Arroyo, is as follows:

Nicholls's majority, 84,753.

I said that the first fact which will justify an investigation is the face of the returns. I do not know that the Senator from Louisiana or any other Senator will venture to assert on the floor of the Senate that there were actually cast 136,746 votes on the 17th of April last in the State of Louisiana for Francis T. Nicholls. I doubt whether any Senator will say that he honestly believes that that number of votes for Nicholls found their way into the ballot-boxes and that the result returned proceeds from an honest and fair count.

Be that as it may, I denounce that pretended vote as false, fraudulent, and fictitious beyond all known records of manufactured majorities. I denounce it as the result of a deliberate conspiracy of wrong and crime on the part of Governor Samuel D. McEnery and Governor Francis T. Nicholls, two stupendous criminals against free suffrage; two instigators of the intimidation and murder of voters; two guilty leaders of thousands of reckless, law-breaking election officers and desperate, cruel, brutal torturers and murderers of black citizens of their own State. I denounce this return of 136,746 votes as a crime against the Republicans of Louisiana, not only against those who are living, but against those who are dead, butchered by bloody ruffians, agents of the State governments of McEnery and Nicholls, in order to make a Democratic victory. I denounce it as a crime against republican government, which it tends to destroy; as a subversion of the Senate of the United States, which is to be invaded as one of its results; as an outrage upon humanity, which is being degraded and dishonored by the frauds, forgeries, whippings and killings of innocent citizens of our country of boasted freedom and liberty in order that Grover Cleveland may be again President of the United States.

Mr. President, compare the apparent result in Louisiana on the 17th of April last with the results of elections in previous years in the State of Louisiana.

I have here a statement of the votes cast in all previous elections since 1852, which I will insert in the RECORD:

* Vote returned larger than the whole number of registered voters.

It is not, however, necessary to rest the demand for an investigation upon the face of the returns, which I have already exhibited, although it seems to me that so far as the country is concerned, so far as the Senate is concerned, and so far as the common sense of every intelligent citizen is concerned, it must be apparent that an investigation is justifiable on the presumption that no such vote as 136,746 was ever honestly cast and properly counted for Francis T. Nicholls.

But, in addition, Mr. President, I have here a large mass of evidence which ought to convince any one of the true character of the pretended election in Louisiana on the 17th of April. We will take first the parish of which gave 4,213 votes for Nicholls and only 95 votes for Warmoth according to the returns, there being 1,002 white voters in the parish and 2,600 colored voters.

A statement of Mr. B. F. O'Neal is as follows:

Vote polled at Democratic primary election held by wards December 21, 1887, to elect delegates for gubernatorial convention.

Ward.	Nicholls vote.	McEnery vote.	Total.	Regular white voters.	Regular colored voters.

Memorandum and copy of vote at Democratic primary election held March 20, 1888—a close contest for district judge and for Legislature.

Ward.	For Legislature.			District judge.
	Curry.	Boggs.	Total.	Snider.	Druse.	Boon.	Total.
1	1	25	26	22	4	.....	26
2	78	45	123	68	55	2	125

Total	365	334	699	373	310	25	708
Majority	31	.....	.....	63	.....	.....	.....

In the primary, 21st December, 1887, a full vote was polled, the full strength of the Democratic party proper.

The contest was very strong and exciting in the election of December 21. Nicholls's popular majority in the parish was 25 votes. In the primary of the 20th of March Boggs and Curry were run on the issue that Boggs was a McEnery man and Curry a Nicholls man in the contest for governor; and also, if elected, that Curry would support BLANCHARD for United States Senator, while Boggs was for Jonas. Curry's popular majority was 31 against 25. The following vote was returned and promulgated at the general election as between McEnery and Stevenson for governor, April 1884:

Ward.	McEnery vote.	Stevenson vote.	Total.
1	354	.....	354
2	913	214	1,127
3	234	71	305
4	194	46	240
5	443	36	479
6	207	319	526
Total	2,346	685	3,031
Majority	1,661	.....	.....

The full Democratic strength of Bossier Parish is less than 800. The vote polled April, 1884 (total, 3,031), shows this parish to have 2,231 Republican voters, if we admit that all Democrats voted in 1884 who vote in the Democratic primary elections. It is openly admitted by the masses of the Democratic party that they manipulated the votes in all of the wards except Ward 6. It can be seen that Ward 6 is the largest white ward of the parish, and, being the court-house ward, has 200 whites and 450 blacks. It voted 526 votes at the general election in 1884, 112 Republican majority, and polled 319 Republican votes out of 685 which was returned for the whole parish. Col. J. A. Snider and Judge R. C. Druse were both candidates before the people at the general election in 1884, and the Republican tickets were divided between them equally. Out of 6,000 tickets ordered for the parish, 3,000 were for Snider, judge, and 3,000 for Druse, judge.

It was hoped that when these tickets were taken from the ballot-box they would be counted for Stevenson as governor, as well as for Snider or Druse, whoever was so lucky as to get the Republican ticket voted with his name on; but this was not done. The friends of Snider and Druse watched closely for Druse and Snider names and counted every one voted for them, whether it was on the Republican or Democratic ticket, at some of the boxes, and at others they divided the Republican tickets equally between Snider and Druse, and threw the Republican tickets out and put in Democratic tickets. These facts are made known publicly in contending for the claims of Druse and Snider by their friends. I simply state these facts to show that combination can not amount to much for the Republican ticket and a fair count where the Republicans are so largely in majority and their success so certain, if a fair chance is given them.

Respectfully, etc.,

B. F. O'NEAL.

This was before the election.

On April 6 Mr. O'Neal writes again:

BELLEVUE, LA., April 6, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We have lost all hopes of forming any combination with the Democrats or indorsing any man as our independent candidate who would assist us to secure us a fair count of the ballots for the Republican ticket. The campaign throughout North Louisiana, and especially here (in Bossier Parish) is being conducted by the Democrats on the color or race issue, claiming none but known white Democrats shall control the affairs of the local or State government.

The Republicans in this parish have no representation on the registration or at any of the voting places, and our success is left entirely to the tender mercies of the Democratic party, who claim the whole management to themselves. Our sheriff, Maj. R. E. Wyche, and, in fact, every Democrat of this parish, speak out bodly and tell the Republicans that while they counted out the Republican ticket at last general election in 1884, giving Stevenson but 685 votes in this parish, they do not wish to deceive the Republicans by telling them they will not do the same thing again. And Sheriff Wyche says that it makes no difference whether the negro registers or not or goes to the poll or not the Democrats will vote him all the same, and as to our complaints that we only got 685 votes returned for Stevenson and the Republican ticket in 1884, he will tell us now very plainly that Warmoth may not get as many allowed him. It depends upon what vote his party (the Democrats) want returned from Bossier.

What they would give Warmoth? They may give him 1,000, or more, as the case requires. These are the exact words of Maj. R. C. Wyche, sheriff, and is also the true sentiment of the Democracy of Bossier Parish. I state these facts so you may fully appreciate the situation here and know what to expect. There is a great interest felt by the negroes, and I fear some excitement or trouble may occur at any time—though there is no objection to the negro going to register and vote; the Democrats know they have the counting and returning of the whole matter to themselves, and therefore they feel no danger of a defeat. But if the negroes should become dissatisfied at the result or want to contend for a fair count, they would be put down at once. Rev. James Marks called on me and left a few tickets. We will want about four thousand more. Send us some by mail. They will be given to the voters, whether counted out or not.

Yours, very respectfully,

B. F. O'NEAL.

Hon. ANDREW HERO, Jr.,
New Orleans, La.

On the 19th of April Mr. O'Neal wrote a letter, which is to be found in the speech of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], which shows the result, as follows:

BELLEVUE, LA., April 19, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I have just wired you the returns of Bossier Parish. Total vote returned, 4,308. Nicholls, 4,213; Warmoth, 95; total, 4,308.

There was a large turnout, and a full Republican vote was polled. There seemed to be no trouble or hinderance about the negro voting the Republican ticket, and it is safe to say at least 3,500 votes were polled for Governor Warmoth and the Republican ticket, but they were counted out.

The work and proceedings of stuffing the boxes is no secret here; the Democrats talk plainly and boldly about how they did it.

Yours, respectfully, etc.,

B. F. O'NEAL.

Hon. ANDREW HERO, Jr.,
New Orleans, La.

Here is a letter from the same parish from L. W. Williams:

PANDURA STORE PLANTATION, April 19, 1888.

MR. HERO:

I will say one word to you. The Benton ward, Bossier Parish, Louisiana, gave you every black vote that was cast, and that was six hundred and some odd, and the white people took them all out and put in Democrat tickets and said we all voted Democrat ticket; but I will say that they did not cast one Democrat ticket, and I can give you the names of one hundred right here, not far from me—you can reach them—and they will say the same thing; and I will say if you let that pass I am done. They did the same thing at Rochia. You can write or send some to see and you will find out that all the tickets that are cast by the blacks are Republican. We don't want our tickets counted out, as we are not Democrats. Let me hear from you at once.

L. W. WILLIAMS.

Shreveport, La., is my post-office now.

Here is a letter from a number of voters of Bossier Parish:

BENTON, LA., April 19, 1888.

Governor HENRY CLAY WARMOTH:

We want to hear from you at once. The tickets we voted were for you. The Democrats took them out, and we have some of them at the house. We cast not less than 500 votes at Benton, Bossier Parish, and now they say that we thought we were voting the Republican ticket, but it was the Democratic ticket, and you ask the following if it is true:

Lewis Williams, West Scruggan, Carrol Scott, Allen James, Bob Williams, Bill Smith, Jim Rodgers, Ed. Reed, Hy. Adam, Dozier Williams, Dick Adkins, Henry Mercuria, Levry Williams, Robt. Dickson, G. W. Cooper, Martin Craper, J. S. Stokes, Willis Rochellia, S. Feller, Carter Williams, L. Hill, Adrien McNeal, William Jamison, Bill Escuse, Hy. McNeal, Jim Beck, Mitchel Marshall, Hy. Marshall, Geo. Duckett, A. J. Cooper, A. J. Miller, J. A. Cooper, Bob. Johnson, Luke Ware, Sam. Edward, Lewis Thimes, Jeff. Johnson, Mc. Austin, Ben. Escuse, Lewis Bell, Jeff. Gadser, Buck Garder.

Now take the parish of

which returns 2,425 for Nicholls, 1,310 for Warmoth; there being in the parish 2,290 white voters and 2,235 colored voters. I will read a letter from Westley Coleman:

EOLA, LA., April 20, 1888.

DEAR SIR: There were 304 votes polled at Bunkie. We had two men that stood near the door to keep an account of every man's ticket. Every one of our voters voted the straight Republican ticket, which gave us a majority of 196 over the Democrats. Now, after the polls were closed and our two talesmen went inside of the building to keep account with the commissioners, they were ordered to go on the outside, and were not allowed to look on to see their rights. So they refused to obey them, and they were forced by the sheriff to the outside, and the box counted for the Democrats, so it gave them a majority of 196 votes over us at Bunkie.

Yours,

WESTLEY COLEMAN.

Hon. P. F. HERWIG.

And here is a letter from Mr. James H. Ducote:

MARKSVILLE, LA., April 19, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find statement of votes as compiled by the returning officer of Avoyelles. At three of our strongest precincts the ballot-boxes in which the voting was done was substituted by stuffed boxes prepared beforehand for the occasion, and were counted as genuine. At the Hamburg precinct, where there are but 23 Democratic voters, they returned 183 votes for the Democratic ticket and 21 votes for ours. At the Evergreen precinct there are 160 Democratic votes; they returned 320 for their ticket and 54 for ours.

At the Holmesville precinct an effort was made by the Democrats to prevent an election taking place, but Judge Cullom held the election and our ticket got 150 majority, all of which were counted out by the returning officer. Never were frauds so openly and boldly perpetrated. In all the Democratic precincts no frauds were committed, and the result shows that one-third of the Democratic voters supported and voted our ticket. It was only by substituting our majorities to their ticket that they defeated us. All of the above are facts which can be proven if necessary. The vote really cast for governor is as follows: Nicholls, 1,907; Warmoth, 1,975.

The Republican parish ticket ran 300 or 400 votes ahead of the State ticket. Let me know as soon as possible what we should do in the premises. If you wish any more information or particulars let me know.

Yours, truly,

JAS. H. DUCOTE.

Maj. ANDREW HERO, Jr.

Now take the parish of

in which the vote was for Nicholls 2,715, for Warmoth 1,334, there being in the parish 1,520 white voters and 2,987 colored voters.

LANE POST-OFFICE, LA., April 19, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We write this to you to let you know something concerning our election in our ward (ninth), parish of Ascension. First, we had not one commissioner on our side of the house at the box. Secondly, the Democrats had fourteen deputies on their side; we were ignored, we had no say at all. We can take a solemn oath that there were 175 cast for Governor Warmoth and J. J. Sullivan. Now, look at the tally sheet, only giving about 12 or 13 for Warmoth and two for Sullivan. Sir, our votes were taken from us, and therefore we appeal to you and the rest of the State Republican men that are at the front of the Republican party. No representation at the box. The box was placed back into a small room and no one allowed in there but Democrats. Sir, the colored people of our ward did not sell out as they will allege. We just may as well leave and go out of the State if our voices can not be heard. We never before saw the Republicans perform their duty as they did last Tuesday at the box, and to our surprise we were robbed totally. I would write more but we are excited and do not know what to do. This is the true state of affairs in this ward.

HANDY WATSON.
R. H. BUTLER.

Mr. VIGERS.

In the parish of

WEST FELICIANA,

there were returned 2,038 for Nicholls, 377 for Warmoth; when there were 557 white voters and 2,091 colored voters. The following shows how it happened:

ROW LANDING, April 21, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I write you a few lines to let you know how things went on here at Row Landing poll. Two hundred and fourteen votes cast for our ticket. At the Raccourci Island poll they robbed the box; they took 80 or 90 votes from the Republicans. At 2 o'clock 105 votes were polled, about 70 or 80 of them Republican votes. We had four men from our side of the river to work at that poll. They worked faithfully for the party. One hundred and thirteen votes were polled, and they gave us only 5 votes. The Democrats stole our votes all over the parish.

Respectfully,

CLEM. SEWELL, Chairman.

Hon. P. F. HERWIG.

RAPIDES PARISH.

Here the vote returned was 4,678 for Nicholls, 449 for Warmoth, from 2,455 white voters and 2,739 colored voters. I have here a letter taken from the remarks of the Senator from Kansas in which Mr. George Y. Kelso states the case:

ALEXANDRIA, LA., April 20, 1888.

SIR: The election passed off quietly. We being without representation at any of the polls, the Democrats could make up the returns to suit themselves.

At the Alexandria box it was situated in a room in the court-house with a door opening in a hall, which was easy of access; the box was placed on a table and two or three gentlemen (Democrats) sat upon the table by the box from the time that the polls opened until they closed, and when a Republican voted in nearly every case one of the commissioners would take his ballot to put it in the box; but very few, if any, ever were put in the box. They were generally put on the table behind the box, and towards the closing of the polls the floor under the table was covered with the tickets taken from the colored voters by the commissioners to put in the box, which they failed to do; there were but few colored men allowed to deposit their votes.

At Cheneyville Mr. Barrett, the Republican candidate for State senator, distributed 180 votes to colored men, and they voted the tickets he gave them, and about half past 5 o'clock in the morning Mr. Barrett went to get a drink of water. He was absent from the poll about five minutes, and when he returned he saw a small crowd of white men enter the room where the ballot-boxes were; and when he inquired what was the matter he was told that the polls had closed and that the commissioners were about to commence the counting of the votes; it was then a few minutes after 6 o'clock. Mr. Barrett staid until 9.15 p. m.; up to that time 300 votes had been counted, all straight Democrats, and not one Republican vote.

This Mr. Barrett could not understand, as he and a friend had kept a tally all day and had been absent but five minutes, and according to their tally there were but 260 votes cast, and 180 of them Republican; but the commissioners returned six hundred odd Democratic majority, though there were not 300 votes in the box. At Lamourie, out of a vote of over 300, they give us but 44. They had about 45 voters, but the commissioners gave them a majority of 300, and the same can be said about Wiel's Store; only a few of our voters voted. At Boyce I am told that the whole poll-list was counted of that ward as a majority for the Democrats.

Truly, etc.,

GEORGE Y. KELSO.

Maj. A. HERO, Jr.

I come next to

WEST BATON ROUGE.

I insert a letter from I. S. Tappin, chairman, which shows the stuffing of the ballot-box in that parish, where 1,712 votes were returned for Nicholls and 454 for Warmoth.

PARISH OF WEST BATON ROUGE, FOURTH WARD,
State of Louisiana, April 17, 1888.

We, the undersigned, committee appointed on the above date to assist or witness the counting of the votes cast for both Nicholls and Warmoth and the remainder of the two tickets, declare that the commissioners closed the doors for about fifteen minutes, at which time the ballot-box was stuffed with Democratic tickets, and they made away with all the Republican tickets but 34, and counted themselves or their State ticket 409, which is more votes than are in the ward.

E. Tappins and A. J. Jadot tallied every vote, both white and colored; we therefore enter our solemn protest against the Fourth ward of the parish aforesaid, and we, the voters, are willing to come down at any time and swear to the above statement.

I remain, yours, respectfully,

I. S. TAPPIN, Chairman.

In the parish of

ASCENSION,

2,715 votes for Nicholls were returned, 1,334 for Warmoth. At the court-house in this parish the count was openly carried on by tallying 25 or 50 votes for Warmoth as so many votes for Nicholls. The vote is just reversed; in the return instead of Warmoth 1,334; Nicholls 2,715, it should be Warmoth 2,715; Nicholls 1,334.

In

ST. MARY'S PARISH,

2,885 were returned for Nicholls and 1,614 for Warmoth, where there are only 1,942 white voters and 4,887 colored voters.

Dr. Chester B. Darrall, ex-member of Congress, well known to many Senators on this floor, writes:

A statement will be prepared showing how the fraud was perpetrated. We could only guard the vote at three polls and our vote was the largest ever polled. We can show that we put in the box over 3,000 votes for our ticket, more than half of which they counted for Nicholls. I have the written refusal of the returning officer to give us any showing in the count.

I will here insert a copy of a petition of B. F. Winchester, of St. Mary's Parish, who was candidate for judge of the nineteenth judicial court, at the election on the 17th of April, in which he shows how he was counted out and shows by what means the large colored parish of St. Mary's was made to show a Democratic majority:

To the honorable the judge of the nineteenth judicial district of the State of Louisiana, holding session in and for the parish of St. Mary:

The petition of Benjamin Felix Winchester, who resides in the parish of St. Mary, raspectfully represents, that at the general State election held in the State on the 17th day of April, A. D. 1888, he was a candidate for the office of judge of the nineteenth judicial district, composed of the parishes of St. Mary and Terrebonne, and that he was duly and legally elected judge of said district for the office of judge of said district, that A. C. Allen, who resides in the parish of St. Mary, his opponent, the present defendant, who was defeated at said election, he fears and alleges will be returned elected and put in possession and enjoyment of the office and its emoluments through fraud and ill practices on the part of the returning officer, the commissioner of elections, the clerks of election, and other officers and persons.

Petitioner avers that as soon as he became aware of who were to be the commissioners of election for the parish of St. Mary he called on Emmett O'Neill, the returning officer, and complained that some dozen persons were put by him as commissioners of election who could not write nor read, and suggested the names of intelligent, honest persons able to write and read, without regard to party, and that the returning officer refused petitioner's request. Petitioner shows that though he was a Democratic candidate for the office of judge of the nineteenth judicial district, he was also indorsed by the Republican party, and that C. B. Darrall, the chairman of the Republican campaign committee for the parish of St. Mary, in the interest of fair play and the law, called on Returning Officer O'Neill, and asked to have other commissioners appointed instead of the incompetent commissioners, which again was refused by said O'Neill. All to the injury and wronging of petitioner.

Petitioner avers that the commissioner and clerk at the Pattersonville poll (Fifth ward) conspired together to defraud your petitioner and placed over 500 ballots in the box which were never voted, and counted said fraudulent votes for A. C. Allen and against your petitioner. That the commissioner and clerk at the Julien poll (Seventh ward) voted and counted 150 illegal and fraudulent votes for A. C. Allen which were never voted, and refused to count 35 votes received and voted for petitioner. Petitioner avers that the commissioner and clerk made false and fraudulent returns of the vote cast at the Baldwin poll, where petitioner received 220 votes and his opponent, A. C. Allen, only received 15 votes; that the returns from the Glencoe poll were false and fraudulent, for your petitioner actually received three-fourths of all the votes cast at said poll. Petitioner avers that he received over 50 votes at the Kramer poll when the returns only show 1 vote for petitioner, and that the return of said poll was false and fraudulent, and that the aforementioned several polls if counted correctly would give the return of the election in favor of petitioner and against the defendant by a large majority as will be shown on trial.

Petitioner avers that for some time before the election and up to the close of the election the friends of petitioner's opponent inaugurated a reign of terror in the parish of St. Mary, except in the Sixth ward; that certain colored leaders were whipped, others made to leave the parish, when suspected of supporting your petitioner or of distributing tickets for him, and that the whole machinery of election had become converted into a means of defeating the popular will, thereby depriving your petitioner of 1,000 votes; that the colored voters in the Third ward at the Franklin precinct were not allowed to vote without exhibiting the ticket to parties adverse to petitioner, whereby many tickets for petitioner were changed, some destroyed, and all freedom to vote freely was absolutely nullified under the reign of terror carried on in the interest of petitioner's opponent, A. C. Allen, the defendant named herein, and that the threats and intimidations practiced on the colored voters in the Second, Third, and Fifth wards deprived your petitioner of over 800 votes that he should and would have received from the colored Republican voters in the parish, and who were prevented by fear, threats, and intimidation from voting as they desired.

Petitioner says he would have obtained at a legal, fair, independent, and peaceful election 1,000 votes majority over his opponent aforesaid, and that the short time to prepare this contest prevents petitioner from adding further detail of the fraud and ill-practices, but which will be more fully set forth in a supplemental petition hereafter to be filed, and of which notice is here given to defendant.

Wherefore, the premises considered, petitioner prays that A. C. Allen be duly cited to answer this petition, and after due hearing there be judgment in favor of your petitioner and against the defendant, A. C. Allen, declaring Benjamin Felix Winchester to have been duly elected judge of the nineteenth judicial district, at the general election held on the 17th day of April, 1888, and that he is entitled to the dignity and emoluments of said office; that A. C. Allen be declared not elected to the office of judge of the nineteenth judicial district, and that he pay the costs of this suit, and petitioner further prays for all other general and equitable relief in the premises as in duty bound.

B. F. WINCHESTER,
Attorney for Petitioner.

CLERK'S OFFICE, St. Mary's Parish, Louisiana, April 26, 1888.

I certify the above and foregoing to be a true and correct copy of the original petition in suit B. F. Winchester vs. A. C. Allen, No. 8514, of the docket of the nineteenth judicial district court, on file and making part of the record of my office, filed therein April 26, 1888.

[SEAL OF COURT.] J. B. VERDUN, JR., Clerk.

CONCORDIA.

This parish was returned 4,219 for Nicholls and 145 for Warmoth, with 448 white voters and 3,753 colored voters in the parish. The statement that has been furnished me says that—

We had at each poll citizens who tallied the vote as cast, each voter casting an open ticket, and their returns under their signatures show in six polls out of eleven as follows:

Voting place.	Warmoth.	Nicholls.
Rivers poll	295	32
Forest poll	390	12
Home place	321	20
Vidalia	375	53
Black Hawk	231	10
Poll 9	270	37
Total	1,882	164

Yet Warmoth is only given 145, while 4,219 were returned for Nicholls.

I will read a letter from Andrew Hero, jr., dated July 9, 1888, addressed to myself:

NEW ORLEANS, July 9, 1888.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: Herein find postal of C. G. Wade of date April 18, 1888, asserting that 231 votes were cast for Republican ticket at Black Hawk poll, in Concordia Parish. The Democratic returns only award 145 for the entire parish.

The postal card which I have is as follows. It is addressed to—

Hon. D. Young, on board T. P. Leathers, lying at Black Hawk, La.

BLACK HAWK, LA.

DEAR SIR: Election free and fair.

Warmoth's vote	231
Nicholls's vote	10
Warmoth's majority	221

S. Lemeurier, clerk, will try to have box thrown out, because 37 voters were allowed to vote under oath. They are all registered voters, but Clayton left their names off the poll-book. Everything passed off peaceably.

C. G. WADE.

APRIL 18, 1888.

Mr. Hero proceeds:

I send by express three memorandum books, which were kept at three other precincts in Concordia Parish by Republicans who tallied each ballot as it was deposited, and have each signed their respective books, showing at Vidalia: Republican vote, 375; Democratic, 53. At Poll 9: Republican vote, 270; Democratic, 37. At Rivers poll: Republican vote, 295; Democratic, 32. And at Forest poll the actual vote was: Republican vote, 390; Democratic, 12.

Yours, etc.,

ANDREW HERO, JR.

I have in my hands the three tally-books which were kept by the Republicans, forwarded to Major Hero, and sent to me. Here are the books. [Exhibiting.] One is as follows:

RIVERS POLL, THIRD WARD, CONCORDIA PARISH.

Rivers poll, Third ward:

	Tallies.
Warmoth's vote	295
Democratic vote	32

T. P. JACKSON.
JAKE JONES.

The next is the original tally-book of poll No. 9, and I have made a copy of it, thus:

CONCORDIA, POLL 9.

Tuesday, April 17, 1888.

For governor:

	Tallies.
H. C. Warmoth	270
Francis T. Nicholls	37

ALEXANDER BUSH.

The Vidalia tally-book I have here, and I have made a copy of that:

VIDALIA VOTE.

	Tallies.
Warmoth	375
Nicholls	53

That is on the cover.

Republicans, Vidalia:

	Tallies.
R	375
D	53

C. H. SHUMAKER.

These tally-books were forwarded, as Major Hero states, from the men who kept them to him, he being one of the candidates on the State ticket. And notwithstanding all these proofs which I have given of the votes actually cast, Concordia Parish was only allowed by the Democratic canvassers 145 votes for Warmoth.

I come next to

THE PARISH OF IBERIA.

The following statement has been furnished me as showing the true condition of affairs in the parish which was returned 1,923 for Nicholls, 590 for Warmoth:

In the parish of Iberia Governor McEnery made a revolutionary speech one week before the election. He said, in substance, that the negroes should not be permitted to vote; and if they did vote, such vote should not be counted; that there was danger of Warmoth's election, and that the white people ought to stand firmly together and roll up a majority against him.

From the day after this revolutionary speech a reign of terror commenced and bulldozers went out every night armed with Winchester rifles belonging to the State militia and terrorized the negroes. This continued up to and including the night before the election. Many leading negroes were ordered either to leave the parish or vote the Democratic ticket.

On the Sunday before election a prominent negro leader, the son of a well-to-do negro planter, Joseph Barabin, jr., was waited on at Jeanerette and offered money to support the Democratic ticket, which he declined. That evening he boarded the up train for New Iberia, and on his starting to get off the train at New Iberia he was met by some eight or ten bulldozers, who, after assaulting him with a stick, ordered him to get back on the train and leave the parish. He went to an adjoining parish, returned to his home the next day, and was again visited by the bulldozers, on whom he fired, wounding one of them and killing two horses. This caused a stampede, and when the force was renewed Barabin had managed to get out of the way, and he is now a refugee from his home and family.

On the morning of the election it was evident that no Republican votes would be counted as cast. The returning officers appointed the commissioners of election only the night before election day. These commissioners turned up and were only known to the Republicans when they seated themselves in the polling places on the morning of the election. They were all Democrats and of the lowest order. No representation was allowed the Republicans in or around the polling places. At the New Iberia poll the State militia, under command of Capt. Dudley Avery, were present under arms for the ostensible purpose of protecting the Democratic commissioner of election. Voting commenced at 7 o'clock a. m.; a large crowd of negroes were present desiring to vote. The commissioners commenced by delaying the voting by taking from ten to twenty minutes to find the name of the proffered voter on the poll-book and in many cases by refusing the vote on the ground that the name was not on the poll-book. This practice was kept up until about 10 o'clock, when bulldozing commenced at the poll and negroes were clubbed and abused and were run off.

About 11 o'clock, finding that the negroes persisted in trying to vote, another plan was adopted and effectually carried out. That plan was this: Some Democrat would fire off a large fire-cracker sounding like a pistol-shot in the court-house where the polling-place was located, and, upon this signal being given, the State militia would rush to the windows of the court-house and point their Winchester rifles at the crowd of negroes below them.

This conduct, which was repeated several times, had the desired effect, and nearly all the negroes left the court-house yard, and were told later in the day by their white Republican friends to go home and not attempt to vote any more. Notwithstanding the fact that only about half the registered vote of the ward was actually polled, when the count was made it showed a full registered vote, all polled for the Democratic State and parish ticket.

To further illustrate the situation, it may be stated that Mr. Merchant, a prominent lawyer and banker, was running on the Republican ticket for State senator against Mr. Avery, a planter and Democrat. At the poll above referred to the commissioners give Mr. Avery 484 votes and Mr. Merchant 80 votes. It can be conclusively shown that Mr. Merchant received more Democratic votes than his opponent and a solid Republican vote.

In the Fifth ward of Iberia Parish, where Capt. C. T. Cade, another militia commander, was in charge—

And I ask Senators who do me the honor of listening to me to mark the name Capt. C. T. Cade, for we shall presently hear from his operations on Friday last—the bulldozers took a colored ward-leader by the name of Robertson Coleman, stripped and whipped him in the presence of the voters who had assembled to vote, then put him in a chicken-coop, kept him there near the poll under guard until evening, when they made him vote the Democratic ticket. A negro was beaten nearly to death for offering to distribute Republican tickets.

This sort of conduct was carried on all over the parish, and the election was a complete mockery, fraud, and count-out.

On the morning after the election Mr. Merchant stated openly that he intended to contest and show up the frauds. The evening of that day he was waited on at his banking-house by Captain Cade, of the State militia, and some of his strikers, and told that he had twenty-four hours in which to close his business and leave the parish. Captain Cade refused to give any reason for his act other than that he represented others in the matter.

Mr. Merchant notified the Democrats who had supported him at the election of what had occurred, and on Thursday morning they, about forty in number, armed themselves and went to Captain Cade and his strikers and demanded their reason for their conduct towards Mr. Merchant, and upon their refusal to give any they were informed that they must retract their order and apologize for their conduct, which they did under pressure. Mr. Merchant has made up his mind to close up his business at any sacrifice and leave the State.

He has held many offices of profit and trust, among others that of postmaster at New Orleans, and his personal and official record is beyond reproach His only crime is that of being a pronounced Republican, and for that he is boycotted in his business and not given any chance.

Mr. Merchant has emigrated to El Paso, Tex., and has gone into business there. I imagine that he is safe there if he does not make his Republicanism very pronounced. If he does, it is most likely that he will have to leave Texas as he had to leave Louisiana.

Mr. SPOONER. Is a white man safe there?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think they prefer, as an election method in Texas, to hang negroes rather than whites, and that if the Texas Democrats were left to their own minds they would kill negroes in preference to white men. I think, therefore, that Mr. Merchant is safe for a little while at El Paso, Tex., if he does not meddle with politics.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. I am surprised at the statement just made by the Senator from New Hampshire. I live in a county where the population is about equally divided between blacks and whites. There has never been a disturbance at an election in that county since the negroes have been free. Republicans all over the State take their position and discuss the issues just as they would do in New Hampshire or anywhere else, and they are as free from molestation as they would be in New Hampshire. If the gentleman knew the facts he certainly would not make such a statement as he makes here now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In what county is that?

Mr. REAGAN. Anderson.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not Washington?

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose the Senator from Texas does not refer to Washington County, Texas. If he does he is entirely mistaken. The Republicans of Texas, in a Democratic county which they do not try to carry Republican, are tolerably safe from murder, but whenever there is a Republican county which remains Republican in a Southern State, enough killing is pretty sure, after awhile, to be done to change it from Republican to Democratic. That was exactly the case in Washington County, Texas.

The Senator knows very well that at the last election held there, in November, 1886, when there was a large Republican majority, three negroes, Shadrach Felder, Alfred Jones, and Stewart Jones, were taken from jail by a mob and hanged, exactly as Judge Chisolm was put in jail and murdered, strictly in accordance with the favorite Southern method of getting rid of Republicans, which is this: First get up a false charge against the Republicans, put them in jail, and then break into jail and murder them. The Senator probably did not have Washington County, Texas, in mind when he said that Republicans were just as free to make speeches and to vote in Texas as they are at the North.

Mr. REAGAN. I know that there was a disturbance in Washington County, but I am not advised of the actual facts connected with it. In order that the Senate may understand the recklessness with which the Senator from New Hampshire speaks, I will state that there are perhaps twenty or twenty-five counties in Texas where there are negro majorities and where they vote majorities habitually at all the elections.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator how many Republican counties there are in Texas that remain firmly and continuously Republican counties?

Mr. REAGAN. I can not enumerate them all now, but I will tell the Senator some of them. Harrison is Republican by about 1,100 majority, and there has never been anybody killed or hung or hurt there for voting. And there are Montgomery, Walker, Fort Bend, and Brazoria Counties, and two or three counties below Brazoria. I do not recall the names now, but there are more than twenty counties with habitual Republican majorities.

Mr. CHANDLER. How many, may I ask?

Mr. REAGAN. I can not give the specific number, but I tell the Senator——

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator not know the number of counties in his own State? How many counties are there in the whole State?

Mr. REAGAN. About one hundred and eighty.

Mr. CHANDLER. And of that number there are twenty Republican counties. Will the Senator tell us about how many colored voters there are in the State of Texas?

Mr. REAGAN. That I can not say, but perhaps nearly one-third of the voters of Texas are colored voters—more than one-fourth of them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the Senator through?

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that the colored population of the State is in a part of the State that was settled a good while back. A very large part of the State has been settled since the war, and in that part of the State the colored population is very limited. In El Paso I suppose there may be some colored people, but I do not know whether there are or not.

Mr. CHANDLER. The State of Texas, I think, almost comes up in its returned majorities to the State of Louisiana. I think the State of Texas returns a majority of about 136,000. I will concede to the Senator from Texas that it is not quite so dishonest as the 84,000 returned for Nicholls in Louisiana.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator is reckless, and falsifies the facts when he talks about illegal voting in Texas as a rule.

Mr. CHANDLER. As the Senator has admitted that he does not know anything about this Washington County outrage, which has been under investigation by the Senate here for a year and a half, I think it would be well for him to make an investigation, and then he will be able to tell, when he is asked about it, all the facts as he understands them.

Mr. REAGAN. I live remote from Washington County, and I have never seen a witness or a line of testimony on the subject yet.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no idea the Senator wants to, either.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator ought not to exercise such reckless impudence in making a speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas transcends the bounds of parliamentary propriety and order in debate when he applies epithets like those to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. REAGAN. I am willing to withdraw them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Am I at liberty to reply to the use of the word "impudence?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is not, unless he proceeds in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall endeavor to rest comfortably under the infliction. I am glad that I can not be subject to any worse stigma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Texas to withdraw his language.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly; I will yield to anybody from a State where negroes are murdered on account of their politics.

Mr. COKE. I desire to say that I have quite an intimate acquaintance with the transactions in Washington County, which have been under investigation by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections. The testimony has been taken by the committee, but it has not yet been published, it has not yet been laid with the report upon it on the desks of the Senators, and I submit that it is hardly fair to comment upon the transactions involved in that testimony until it is published and until a report is made upon it. Whenever a report is made upon it, and whenever that testimony is laid before the Senate, I am prepared to show that the election in Washington County has not been such as it is represented to have been by the Senator from New Hampshire, and I am prepared to vindicate Washington County and the State of Texas against the aspersions that are being cast upon them.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. I quite agree to the proposition made by the Senator from Texas, that before the incoming of the report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the alleged outrages in Washington County, Texas, the discussion of transactions there ought to be deferred. I regret that the Senator from Texas did not content himself with that statement instead of going beyond that to notify the Senate and the world what he would do when the time came by way of defending Washington County and the State of Texas against any imputation upon the fairness of her elections.

I do not intend to go into any elaborate discussion of the alleged outrages—I withdraw from this time forth the word "alleged," which by politeness has been used thus far in connection with the election in Washington County, Texas—the outrages I will say. But when the Senator says he proposes to vindicate that county and State from the charge of gross outrages upon the elective franchise and upon the rights of citizens, he undertakes to do what no mortal man can do.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; I will.

Mr. COKE. I will say, Mr. President, that whenever the testimony taken in that investigation is laid before the Senate and a report made upon it, and the Senate is asked to consider it, I can and will show by comparison with reports of investigations which have been made by the Senate and the House into elections in many other States that the election in Washington County is not more liable to criticism than the elections in numerous counties in New York, in Massachusetts, in Rhode Island, in Connecticut, and in other States. I do not pretend to say that I can defend the transactions in Washington County which have been investigated, wherein the law is alleged to have been violated. I do not intend to attempt a defense of anything unlawful in Washington County.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. COKE. But I can show and I shall show that the hands of the people of Washington County are as clean in that regard as are those of the people of a hundred counties in Northern and Eastern States which have undergone similar investigations.

In other words, Mr. President, I propose to show, and I can show by the testimony, that the people of Texas are exactly like other people, neither better nor worse, and that the elective franchise in Texas is exercised as it is elsewhere, and that the violations of law in this respect are no greater than they have been in every age of the world, in every country where the elective franchise has been enjoyed.

That is all I have to say until the matter comes legitimately before the Senate. I am willing to put the Texas record by the side of the record of New York, of Massachusetts, of Rhode Island, and of Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator mean to be understood as saying that there has been any investigation of elections in Connecticut by Congress?

Mr. COKE. I think there has been. I will not be positive.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me——

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; I thought you were through.

Mr. COKE. I simply say I can show that there is no peculiar wrong in Texas that does not exist commonly in the States of this Union where the right of suffrage is concerned, and that while a few instances are shown where force and violence have been used in Texas elections, I can and will show a great many more instances in which fraud and intimidation have been used in the elections in the Eastern and Northern States of this Union. Fraud and force are classed together in all the law-books.

Mr. SPOONER. They existed together in Washington County.

Mr. COKE. They are equally odious. For every instance of force that you can show in Washington County I can show twenty instances of fraud and intimidation in counties in Massachusetts, in Rhode Island, in New York, and in Pennsylvania. A comparison of Washington County with counties in these States will vindicate Washington County in respect to the charges made against her people.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Texas to give notice that when he came properly to speak upon the Texas investigation he would vindicate the State of Texas and the county of Washington against the charge that the elective franchise had been trampled upon and outraged in that State and in that county. I understand him now to say that he does not expect to undertake that herculean task; that he will not attempt to justify what took place in Washington County so far as it constituted an infraction of the law; that his attempt will be to show that the State of Texas, including the county of Washington, is comparatively decent in its treatment of Republican voters; that is to say, by comparison with other States——

Mr. COKE. We do not pretend to be better.

Mr. SPOONER. That by comparison with other States it will be found that the State of Texas is as good as to the purity and peacefulness of its elections as those other States. The Senator may show by a comparison with some other States conditions as bad in those States as were shown to exist in Washington County, Texas; but I beg to inform him that if he succeeds in doing that he will be obliged to limit his comparison to States south of Mason and Dixon's line.

Mr. COKE. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. SPOONER. I am not through yet.

Mr. COKE. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator says that he will find frauds in the elections in Northern States with which he can successfully compare the frauds in Texas. I admit it, perhaps. He will find Democratic frauds year after year, at election after election, in the great city of New York which I think even Texas will be powerless to excel; but he can not compare with any Northern State, or any election which ever occurred in any Northern State, what transpired in Washington County, Texas. That was not simply fraud in the count. I do not know that at that election there was any fraud in the count. There was force in Washington County, Texas. There was bloodshed in Washington County, Texas. There was murder in Washington County, Texas.

Where at any election north of Mason and Dixon's line can you find these elements? I have known of none. In Washington County, Texas, three men were taken out and hanged, in the gray of the morning, without having committed offense except that they were colored and that they were Republicans. Poll after poll in Washington county, Texas, was raided and the ballot-boxes and ballots forcibly taken.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. The Senator's statement is not correct. There was a negro, perhaps two negroes——

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, three negroes.

Mr. COKE. Three negroes.

Mr. SPOONER. You see the Senator evidently does not know as much about it as I do. The Senator does not even remember the number of negroes hung; a trifling matter, however.

Mr. COKE. They were taken out of jail in the town of Brenham, in Washington County, and hanged by a mob, not because they were Republicans, not because they were negroes, but because they had murdered in cold blood a white man, Young Bolton, at one of the election precincts in Washington County.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has had before him every line and word of the testimony which has been taken by the committee, and I am astounded that he should assert that those men were guilty, or in good faith charged with being guilty, of killing this man Bolton, who was shot down, as he ought to have been shot down, and as more men just like him ought to be shot down, when he sought at the threshold of the polls, when they were counting the vote in a peaceable and quiet way, to wrest by force from the officers of the election the poll-list and the ballots in order that the latter might not be counted and returned, he and his associates being in disguise.

But beyond all that, sir, murder and the robbery of the ballot-boxes, there is more and almost worse. Three men whose names were signed to that petition, upon whose prayer this testimony was taken, are today exiled from the law-abiding State of Texas, one of them living in Los Angeles, Cal.; another living in your own State, Mr. President, and engaged in business there, succeeding well at Topeka, who could not even live in Washington County, Texas. Those men are just as completely exiled from that State, precluded from living there with their families, as if they were fugitives from justice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because they had petitioned?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, because they had petitioned for one reason, and next because they dared to be Republicans and to make Republican speeches in that county.

I did not intend to speak at all upon the Washington County outrage matter until the testimony had been laid before the Senate accompanied by the report, and have been led to do so thus briefly only by the Senator's promise in advance of a complete vindication. I have been speaking in the time of the Senator from New Hamphire, for which I really owe him an apology. I simply desire to say further that I hope within a very short time that testimony and the report will be laid before the Senate and the country in order that they may judge between the Senator from Texas and the committee. I shall then present this case with some care, and it will interest the Senate, I am certain.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator does not want to be long?

Mr. COKE. Just a moment. I only desire to say that the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin with reference to the three persons who filed a memorial here is incorrect.

Mr. SPOONER. How is that?

Mr. COKE. I say that your statement with reference to those three persons who signed and presented a memorial upon which the investigation of Washington County was based is incorrect, when you speak of them as being good citizens and prominent men.

Mr. SPOONER. Every Democratic witness who was examined before that committee, brought here by my friend from Texas, testified to the good character for citizenship and integrity of one of those men, Mr. J. L. Moore.

Mr. COKE. I know that, as to Moore.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; and I had a letter from him last night lamenting that, being an American citizen, he yet could not go back to his old home in Texas and live there. He is with the rest as much a fugitive as if he had been expelled upon a charge.

Mr. COKE. I simply have this to say in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin, that this man Moore is absent by his own choice. He had been trying to sell his property in order to move to California for more than a year before this election trouble occurred, and he is not supposed by anybody in Washington County to want to go back. Hundreds and even thousands of Republicans live in peace in Washington County, and why could not this man Moore do the same?

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. EVARTS. If the Senator will allow me, I do not propose to trespass upon any of the proprieties in a discussion on what will be undoubtedly fully discussed in the Senate upon the report on the Washington County outrage; but I am unwilling that there should go for one moment an impression that these unfortunate colored men were hanged by a mob because even a mob thought that they had been engaged in an act of violence against a white man.

Five of these colored men were seized by authority of law and imprisoned with no charge at all against them, and then, thus inclosed, they were not defended against a mob by the authorities; and three of them were taken out and hanged because they proved that Bolton, the white man, was not slain in pursuance of any peaceful right of his. For that reason they were secured, and for that reason they were not saved from the mob, and for that reason they were hanged, that they might not speak the truth in the evidence that should be given.

Mr. REAGAN. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to yield a moment? I know nothing about the transaction referred to in Washington County. What I wish to say is that I have a very extensive acquaintance with the people of Texas and their action, and if it be taken for true that there were violence, wrong, and murders committed there, I do not think it justifies the wholesale slandering of the State of Texas and charging the whole State with actions of a particular kind.

Mr. SPOONER. I agree with that.

Mr. REAGAN. Taking the whole State together I doubt not it is as orderly, as law abiding a State as there is in the American Union.

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. In this connection I desire to say one thing further about this case. The evidence can not be disputed and will not be disputed, that these negroes were hanged by a mob. I doubt if any man who hears me could read what they said when they were led out to die without shedding copious tears, if he has any heart or soul in him.

It appeared from the testimony of all the witnesses, including ex-Governor Ireland, who was governor of the State at the time those negroes were murdered, and including the county judge, Kirk, in office then, in office now, who was the boss devil of the whole business, that no effort had been made to apprehend the men who committed these murders.

Although the fact had been brought to the attention of the governor, no reward, he testified, had been offered for their discovery and conviction. The testimony showed that in the county neither the prosecuting attorney, nor any of the magistrates, nor any one had taken any step towards the discovery of the men who had hung those colored men, towards bringing them to justice.

Mr. DAVIS. Did the grand jury investigate it?

Mr. SPOONER. Did the grand jury investigate it? No; it never was brought before a grand jury of the county, and no more attention was paid to it after a farcical inquest than if three little dogs had been shot down in the streets of Brenham, and everybody glad to get rid of them.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, just allow me to say——

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly; this Texas debate, Mr. President, may go on until the end, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not quite through. I sought in the examination of a large number of witnesses to ascertain why it was that these white men, the petitioners to the Senate, were to be driven from Washington County, Texas, why it was that they could no longer live in safety there, what they had done, and the universal answer was that they had made incendiary speeches to the negroes and had sought to hold them to vote the Republican ticket.

This was a strong Republican county and these precincts which were raided were strong Republican precincts. I examined those witnesses in order to ascertain what constituted in their opinion an incendiary speech, and none of them gave a definition of an incendiary speech. I asked them, "What did these men say to the negroes at the meetings that you consider incendiary?" Among other things some testified, "Why they told the negroes that if the Democratic party succeeded their wages and the price of cotton would go down, and if the Republican party succeeded their wages would not go down."

Down there in Washington County, Texas (which, I believe, has the honor of being a constituency of Hon. ROGER Q. MILLS, the great economic statesman), it is a crime to discuss protection at a negro gathering. It is incendiary for a white man, no matter how sincere he may be, to say in a public speech to a colored audience that his interest and his well-being in a material sense lie in the direction of the success of the Republican party.

Principally, as I remember it, the test as to what constituted an incendiary speech, as given by these witnesses, was that they were appealed to to stand by the Republican party in the interest of high wages and a better condition and more liberty, as against the Democratic party in the interest of low wages and a lower prosperity, and that that tended to make the negroes discontented with their situation.

Mr. COKE rose.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BLAIR. I was only going to observe that I hoped this discussion would impress upon the Senators from Texas the necessity of the passage of the educational bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. COKE. All I desire to say at this time in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin is that the testimony from which he quotes, in my judgment, utterly fails to justify any such conclusion as he draws, and I think I shall be able to show the truth of that assertion whenever the case comes up for debate. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. SPOONER. I am willing to stand trial on that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, about the only thing in connection with the State of Texas which the Senator from that State, who interrupted me, does not seem to know is this transaction in Washington County. I hope that before long he will find out and tell the Senate why it was that on the 2d day of December, 1886, Shadrach Felder, Alfred Jones, and Stewart Jones were taken from the jail in Brenham and hanged.

Mr. President, we will pass from the killing of colored people, because they are Republicans, in Texas, to a renewed consideration of the killing of Republicans in Louisiana because they are Republicans. I have in my hand the Times-Democrat, of New Orleans, of Saturday, August 18. I find a notice of myself in that sheet, and I ask the particular attention of Senators to three extracts from this journal of Saturday last.

[Special to the Times-Democrat.]

WASHINGTON, August 17.

The bloody shirt will once more wave in the Senate on Wednesday. Mr. CHANDLER gives notice that he will call up for consideration his resolution in regard to the investigation of the Louisiana elections. He proposes to make a speech in support of his resolution, but no one suspects him of a desire to have the investigation started.

We will see about that when we get to a vote.

As the matter stands at present, it gives Mr. CHANDLER an opportunity to repeat all those old time-worn stories about Southern "outrages." He thinks that during this campaign the Republican party will be benefited by the digging up of those old bones, and thereby, in effect, admits that the G. O. P. is in a mighty poor way, and needs all the props and supports it can possibly secure, even though some of them are rotten.

I turn to the left side of this same sheet which speaks of these stories as time-worn and rotten, and as old bones, and will read an extract:

Opelousas is in St. Landry Parish. It returned 3,909 votes for Nicholls and 3,278 for Warmoth. The white voters numbered 5,507, and the black voters numbered 4,659. St. Landry is a parish where the black voters are trying to hold their own. This is the extract:

ON TRIAL FOR MURDER.

[Special to the Times-Democrat.]

OPELOUSAS, August 17.

Before District Judge Lewis to-day the case of Deputy Sheriff John W. Seeley, Louis Young, Alfred Young, Riviere Richardson (colored), Valle Bellare, and Lucien Chapman, charged with the murder of George Anderson and the shooting and stabbing of Louis Jackson, both colored, came up for a hearing on a writ of habeas corpus to show cause why they should not be admitted to bail.

At the close of this report proceedings were still pending and will probably continue another day.

According to the testimony elicited before Coroner Dr. Littell and Judge Lewis, it transpires that the two men were arrested in Bellaire Cove, near Ville Platte, charged with violating the hoodlum act, in other words, disturbing the peace.

I undertake to say from what I know of such transactions that those men were charged with no substantial offense whatever.

Deputy Sheriff Seeley executed the warrant, and with his prisoners tied and bound, and accompanied by Richardson and Chapman, whom he had pressed into service, proceeded in a hack on the way to jail at Opelousas. When about 7 miles from town, on the Ville Platte road, the party was stopped and both prisoners shot, Jackson being also stabbed. The wounded men were then continued on their way to jail and incarcerated by the deputy sheriff, who gave no explanation of the affair or made no report to the sheriff.

Anderson subsequently died, and in his dying declaration charged Seeley—

That is, the deputy sheriff—

with the shooting, just to please Louis Young.

The other victim, who is dangerously wounded, in his testimony implicates Seeley and the Youngs, with whom he about a year ago had a previous difficulty before Judge Lewis.

Richardson made a clean breast of his share in the business by telling, among other things, that he shot Frank Caroline, a colored man, who, with his family, they met on the road in a buggy. He swears that the deputy sheriff had nothing to do with it.

Considerable indignation is felt in this community and the act is severely denounced, despite the previous good standing of the accused. The idea of prisoners, tied and helpless, being shot while in custody so stirred up the people that during last night the jail was guarded for the protection of the accused.

The attacks on the prisoners is attributed to the combined influences of liquor and an alleged old grudge of the Youngs against Jackson, growing out of a previous difficulty over a game of cards where Young, senior, got the worst of it.

Mr. President, I make the prediction that nobody will ever be punished for that dastardly, and I believe, premeditated murder of those two negroes against whom a false charge was made and who were arrested in order that they might be killed by the very officer of justice who arrested them.

Mr. BUTLER. What paper is that?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Times-Democrat of Saturday, August 18.

Mr. BUTLER. Published at New Orleans?

Mr. CHANDLER. Published at New Orleans.

Now, on the outside of this same paper, which says it is my intention to bring up rotten and time-worn stories of Southern outrages, I find an account written for this Democratic newspaper by a reporter whom it sent to the spot for the purpose of making a report, and who was undoubtedly a Democrat, of the New Iberia outrage, to which I called the attention of the Senate when I first commenced my remarks; and in connection with this extract before it is read I want Senators to recall the fact that Capt. C. T. Cade was the man who drove William B. Merchant out of the parish of Iberia, and compelled him to take refuge in the tender mercies of the peace-loving and orderly citizens of the State of Texas.

I will ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to read the article in the Times-Democrat of August 18, headed "Eleven men killed." This was only last Thursday.

Mr. FRYE read as follows:

ELEVEN MEN KILLED. FIGHT BETWEEN A SHERIFF'S POSSE AND NEGROES IN IBERIA. THE NEGROES OPEN FIRE ON THE POSSE, AND KILL MR. E. PAYSON SMITH—THE FIRE RETURNED, AND A SHARP BATTLE ENSUES—TEN NEGROES KILLED, AND ONE WOUNDED.

[Special to the Times-Democrat.]

NEW IBERIA, August 17.

The funeral of E. P. Smith, who was killed at Freetown on Thursday, took place here to-day. His remains were exposed in the Episcopal Church, on Main street, and at 5 o'clock, the hour fixed for the funeral, the church was crowded to its utmost capacity. Rev. Mr. Kramer officiated. The remains were interred in the Episcopal cemetery, the funeral cortegé including the Iberia Guards, Lieutenant Burkhart in command; the Attakapas Rangers, Lieutenant Smedes; Phœnix Bucket Fire Company, of which deceased was a member; and the entire fire department. The floral offerings were numerous and beautiful.

Mr. Smith came to New Iberia in 1869 and embarked in land speculations. He was a native of the city of Chicago. At one time he was in partnership with J. C. M. Robinson, but the partnership was dissolved some years ago.

Mr. Smith, who was forty-two years of age, was unmarried and had no relatives in this section of the country. He was an active member of the Iberia Guards, and a national Republican, but in all local issues he voted the Democratic ticket and was an active worker for that party.

The causes which led to the sad and untimely taking off of the deceased were briefly narrated in Thursday morning's Times-Democrat, and with a view of obtaining the full particulars of the fight a staff correspondent of the Times-Democrat was dispatched to the scene, arriving in due time at New Iberia, where very little difficulty was experienced in obtaining the particulars of the deplorable tragedy.

So as to make the story clear to those unacquainted with this section of the country and give them a proper conception of the situation, it is necessary to begin with the organization of the "regulators," which took place some weeks ago.

The objects of the association are to punish the wicked by whipping parties found guilty of improper conduct. In all the Attakapas parishes the regulators grew and flourished until they became quite strong, so strong, in fact, that to resist them seems to be an impossibility. They claimed that they were a necessity, as the morals of the lower class of whites and blacks were becoming terribly bad.

Near New Iberia, about 10 miles to the westward, is situated the little village of Freetown, a place occupied entirely by colored people, who own property, raise crops, and live very much as they please. Some of these colored people are quite respectable and wealthy, while it is alleged that others are decidedly bad.

When the attempt was made to regulate affairs at Abbeville, Vermilion Parish, on August 10, some of the refugees from that place went, so it is said, to Freetown, where the bad negroes agreed to protect them from the regulators. They openly made threats that they would protect any and all colored refugees, and would regulate the whites if they attempted to regulate them.

These are the reports which reached New Iberia and other towns, and the whites began to feel that it was time to act. During the beginning of the week the complaints from Freetown became more frequent and alarming, and it was reported that the colored people were drilling every night, riding rough-shod over people's places, and in other ways conducting themselves in a manner considered very objectionable. This was the condition of affairs when the following letter was received by Captain Cade:

"POTEAU, PARISH OF IBERIA, August 15.

"To Capt. C. T. CADE, New Iberia, La.

"DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned citizens and residents of the Fifth ward of the parish of Iberia, Louisiana, do respectfully beg you to come out with your company on the nearest future day to preserve the peace in our neighborhood among the negroes. They are all under arms and ready to do some bad work among the whites. We assure you that they are all armed and ready for fighting, especially in Freetown and at old Tom Simons's place.

"Awaiting to be helped, yours."

Captain Cade, who is a deputy sheriff, showed the letter to numerous influential citizens, and after discussing the matter thoroughly he concluded to go with a posse and demand the surrender of guns and arms held by the negroes. The party consisted of eight men, and Captain Cade left New Iberia at 1 a. m. on Thursday, August 16, and reached a point beyond at 11 o'clock.

In passing near Freetown Captain Cade was informed that assistance would soon join him. After a wait of some minutes Captain Cade was joined by squads of armed men from Vermilion and Lafayette Parishes. Thus augmented, the posse numbered about one hundred and fifty men. A brief consultation resulted in a plan of action, and the posse was divided into two squads and rode into town.

It was now just 1 o'clock and very few negroes were found in the streets. Thomas Simon, one of the most respectable negroes in this section, was sent for and he came to the posse. Simon was sixty-five years of age, had a large family, and owned property. He was friendly, or pretended to be, to Captain Cade, and Captain Cade asked him to call the negroes out and get them to surrender their arms, promising if they did so that no harm would come to them. Simon had a consultation with the negroes, who had congregated in a large two-story house owned by Celestin Nore, a preacher. Old Simon returned from his trip with the information that the negroes had scattered and could not be found. He said that the posse would have to come some other day if they wanted to see the negroes.

While this conversation was going on one of Captain Cade's men saw a number of powder-horns, guns, etc., in the house, and so informed the captain. Simon then left the captain, but lingered in the vicinity.

A negro named Kokee was then pressed into service. He was sent into the house by Captain Cade with instructions to tell the negroes that they would be given five minutes in which to surrender their arms, promising if they did so that no harm would come to them.

The five minutes elapsed and then Kokee came to the door with one negro, who stated he was willing to surrender. The posse had been in front and around the house for over two hours. They had used every effort to get the negroes to surrender their weapons, but apparently without effect.

The one negro who appeared at the door with Kokee held his gun in his hand. One of Captain Cade's men call out to him to drop the gun. He did it, and as he did the negroes in the house opened fire. The fire was returned by the posse. Volley after volley was exchanged.

Then the fire became more ragged, but for over thirty minutes was kept up. Then the responses from the house where the negroes were surrounded began to grow faint and finally ceased entirely. Captain Cade approached the house and attempted to push aside a window-curtain so as to see inside. As he did so he was fired on, but retreated unhurt.

Then E. Payson Smith and Alfred Lasalle approached the door. Captain Cade ordered them to return, but they persisted. His commands were unheeded, and the men boldly rushed into the house to ascertain the result of the fire of their comrades. Just as they entered they were fired on.

A cloud of smoke filled the doorway and Lasalle emerged out into the open air, pistol in hand, firing into the house as he retreated. Smith was not with him, and at once it flashed through the minds of the posse that he had been killed. Smith's name was called again and again, but no answer was received. Lasalle said he thought Smith had been killed.

At this moment a number of negroes from the other end of town came up and surrendered their guns. They were not molested. One of them, Marshall Degas, was directed by Captain Cade to enter the house and bring out Smith's body. The firing had stopped on both sides and not a sound emanated from the building.

Degas did not enter. He looked in at the window and saw that Smith was dead. He reported that fact to Captain Cade, and, as he was not strong enough to carry the body out, asked for help.

Another negro was sent to his assistance, and they brought the dead body out. It was found out that one-half of Smith's face had been shot off and that his heart was filled with buckshot. His weapons had been taken from him. The same negroes who had previously entered the house were ordered to go back again and draw the curtain, so that the posse could see how to fire into the room.

As the negro entered two negroes jumped out and ran into the field. They were shot down as they ran. By this time the negroes, who had been so ordered, pulled down the curtain, and the posse saw that the window was covered on the inside by a feather mattress. The mattress was seen to move, and in an instant it was riddled with bullets.

Death, certain and instantaneous, came to those behind it. It was now growing late, and the house was still surrounded, but its batteries appeared to be silenced. Celestin Nore, the owner of the house, arrived at this time and was sent by Cade into the house to ascertain if any one was still alive.

Celestin is a colored preacher, and he entered fearlessly. He came out and said that all were dead. It was not considered safe to believe him, however, and he was ordered to take other negroes to assist him and to bring out the corpses. This he did, and soon what appeared to be the bodies of five dead negroes were laid out in the grass. The posse congregated around the bodies.

One of Captain Cade's men thought he detected signs of life in one of them. He said: "Captain, here is a negro shamming; he ain't hurt." The body was turned over and over and examined carefully, but not a scratch could be found.

All this time the supposed corpse remained perfectly motionless. One of Captain Cade's men raised his heavy riding whip and it fell with stinging force on the body. Unable to stand the pain, the negro, who had taken such desperate chances for his life, sprang to his feet and was instantly riddled with bullets. There being no longer any doubt as the fate of the negroes, the posse began collecting the arms, and secured twenty rifles and guns and any number of pistols. The negroes who had been captured were given their liberty; they, of course, turning over their arms to the posse.

A list of the killed among the colored is as follows: Sam Kokee, Thomas Simon, Antonio Michel, alias Smith; Ramson Livingston, jr.; John Simon, Peter Simon, and four others, whose names could not be learned.

Only one negro, Alexis Lade, was wounded. His injuries are not serious.

In speaking with Captain Cade as to the causes which led to the organization of the regulators and to the subsequent trouble, it was learned that shortly after the regulators were organized a colored man was whipped for unbecoming conduct at a point 2 miles from Freetown.

Then two men, one named Alcee and the other François Brouare, were ordered to leave the parish. The negroes then became aroused. Two weeks ago Captain Cade was asked by old Simon to regulate his own boys, as they would not work or do anything. The idea with them seemed to be that they were going to be ordered to leave town. Captain Cade assured Simon that he would not be troubled, nor would his sons be.

Of late the blacks at Freetown, Captain Cade said, had been growing very dangerous, and at night they would commit numerous depredations, fire guns, etc. They defied the white people residing in the vicinity. This caused the letter to Captain Cade, and the row ensued as stated above, Captain Cade holding that he was simply acting as a deputy sheriff.

Freetown is situated on a small hill. Its population is composed of colored people exclusively. It was founded by Celestin Nore, Thomas Simon, old man Nelson, and Romson Livingston and others. Livingston purchased the land and sold it to the other colored people who wanted to purchase small farms. The settlement dates its beginning some time in 1870. Its present population is about 300 all told. The voters number from 75 to 100. The seventh ward of Iberia Parish includes Freetown. It is about 4 miles from Royville, the same distance from Cade Station, and 10 miles from New Iberia.

During the evening it was rumored that the negroes at Petit Anse had armed, and an excursion in that direction at one time seemed to be in preparation. Later, during the evening, negotiations were opened with Captain Cade, and all the negroes in Petit Anse agreed to surrender their arms, provided they would not be molested or whipped.

Deputy sheriffs will go out in the morning and get the guns and weapons of the negroes.

The coroner's jury late at night returned to Iberia from Freetown. The report of ten negroes being killed was verified. Their bodies, with the exception of one, had been buried before the jury, which left New Iberia at 2 p. m., arrived.

The dead negroes were interred by their friends and relatives. Alexis Lade, the only one wounded during the fight, stated to the coroner that the firing was begun from the house by the negroes. He is the man who came out of the house and surrendered when the shooting began. All is quiet here now.

Mr. CHANDLER. "Old bones," Mr. President; "time-worn stories!" Why, the quivering flesh and the fresh blood of these negroes is to be found in the streets of Freetown this very day. This occurred but last Thursday, and this murder of negroes was as atrocious almost as any one that can be found in all the annals of this bloody business of keeping the South solidly Democratic; it is as damnable as the murder of eight negroes in Spanish Camp, Tex., the facts of which I hope will be presented to the Senate at some time by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and I commend to the Senators from Texas an investigation, if they want to know what is going on in their State, of the bloody butchery, the shooting down, near a cabin where they had taken refuge and from which they were driven by setting it on fire, of nine negroes, about February 28, 1883, at Spanish Camp, Wharton County, Texas.

Mr. President, these negroes at Freetown, La., were peaceable; they were doing nothing wrong, yet they were to be subjected to the processes of what are called "the regulators," who are engaged in the business of whipping negroes in Iberia Parish in order that they may be in such a state of intimidation that next November they will not attempt to go to the polls and vote for Cleveland.

Mr. SPOONER. You mean Harrison.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, for Harrison; but according to the modern Democratic theory, they are all dying to vote the Democratic ticket; certainly a good many of them are dying without doing it.

Take the facts in this case. This gang of Captain Cade, which is engaged in bulldozing Iberia Parish, it appears from the statement which the Senator from Maine read, killed Thomas Simon, and the meanest and most dastardly and wicked thing of all is that they killed this very Sam Kokee, whom they pressed into the service and sent into the house. Among the list of the killed we have Sam Kokee, Thomas Simon, Antonio Michel, Ramson Livingston, jr., John Simon, Peter Simon, and four others.

Here was a settlement of colored people owned by Thomas Simon mainly, and these negroes, hunted for no cause, while exercising only the rights which they are supposed to have as American citizens, took refuge in the house of the clergyman, their pastor, and were shot to death, as this Democratic reporter states in the report which he makes to a Democratic newspaper, and this is called "raking up old stories!" Why, Mr. President, this sort of business is a political movement, a perpetual political movement of the Democratic party in the Southern States, especially in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina, and it is carried on for the purpose of keeping the South solid while violating and annihilating the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

I come now, Mr. President, to

which was returned as casting 2,680 votes for Nicholls and 285 votes for Warmoth. The white voters registered in the parish are 233; blacks, 2,343. These 233 whites, if the color line was drawn, cast 2,680 votes, while 2,343 colored voters were only able to cast 285 votes!

The following statement as to the condition of affairs in East Carroll has been furnished me by a person of the highest character, whose name I will give to the committee of investigation:

If the voters of the Northern States are willing to submit to this condition of things, I say their Southern masters ought to take charge of them and make them slaves for life. We are powerless to do anything here. There is no pretense of any honesty in elections in Louisiana. At our election in April there was at no one place in this parish any connection whatever between the votes cast and those counted—no attempt to influence voters, and no attempt to disguise the fact that they count out of a different box. For instance, in one ward where there are about 260 voters, about 11 of whom are Democrats, the Republicans had tickets printed with red letters instead of black, and the votes went in about as above; but when they took the ballots out to count them there were only about 10 red tickets in the box, and the balance, about 250, were straight Democratic votes.

In one little far-back precinct, where there are only 43 registered voters, 2 of whom are Democrats, they returned 123 votes for the Democratic ticket and none for the opposition. None but registered voters have the right to vote. The law requires a list of voters to be brought from each polling-place and deposited with the clerk; but from no one place was this brought in, though demanded of each set of commissioners.

So, you see, they do not pretend honesty in elections here. You see in the papers that the negroes are turning to be Democrats, and some of our local papers commented on this just after the election. Those who read such articles here recognize them as jokes. When my attention was called to some such article I remarked that there could be no harm in mixing up a little plain lying with the greater felonies that are being committed.

There are about 2,500 voters in this parish, 313 of whom are Democrats and the balance Republicans; and the Democratic State ticket received 2,785 votes. What I hope for is to see the thing rebuked by a solid North, and the election of Harrison. I think this question overtops all others before the people, and feel that such a towering outrage on popular government can not always be allowed to exist.

In my hand I have the Democrat, the "legal organ of the parish of East Carroll" and "the official organ of the town of Providence," published in Providence, and dated Saturday, April 7, 1888, which has the State Democratic ticket headed by Governor Nicholls at the head of its columns. The leading editorial is headed "Dangerous and damaging doings."

DANGEROUS AND DAMAGING DOINGS.

The threatened "revolution" has already been inaugurated by driving from their homes several prominent negroes in Madison Parish, with the warning that they must not return until after the election on the 17th of April.

The lawlessness of such doings is beyond question, and every law-abiding citizen will denounce such high-handed measures as unjust and destructive of the best interests of the people.

Taken from the same number of the Democrat, I ask the Secretary to read the letter of E. J. Delony, candidate for judge in that judicial district, giving the appeal that he makes for a fair election on the approaching 17th of April.

The Secretary read as follows:

TO MY FRIENDS IN EAST CARROLL.

I have been called upon during the past few days by several of my white friends and a member of the Democratic campaign committee and requested to withdraw my candidacy for the office of judge in this judicial district. These requests have been based upon the grounds that I would not be given the votes which would be cast for me; in other words, that though I might receive a large majority of the votes cast, they would not be counted for me, but given to my opponent. It was also intimated to me that it I went to any polling-place and interposed when I saw that the ballot-boxes were about to be stuffed or exchanged, I would put my life in danger. I was also informed that if I did not withdraw I would be injured in my private business in the future.

In answer to the gentlemen who made these statements, I replied that I would not withdraw and that I would continue my candidacy, even if I should be swindled out of every vote cast for me.

It is certainly a terrible condition of affairs if in this boasted land of freedom and under the ægis of the great Democratic party a citizen is not to be allowed to apply for office unless he does so through a Democratic convention, and if he does apply and receives a majority of the votes cast he is not allowed them, but they are taken from him and counted for his opponent. And yet this seems to be the plan of carrying the election on the 17th of this month by the Democrats of East Carroll; and I am informed it is indorsed by nine-tenths of the property-owners in the parish.

It is nothing more nor less than a declaration of political slavery to every man who does not yield to the behests of the so-called Democratic leaders of the parish and vote for and support the Democratic ticket.

The commissioners of election can prevent fraud at the election if they desire, and no man or set of men can take the ballot-boxes from them and put others in their places unless it is done by violence or their consent.

Therefore I desire to say to my friends and supporters to go quietly and peaceably to the polling places on the day of election and deposit their ballots in the box and not allow others to put them in for them, for you have the right to do this for yourselves; then when the election is over I want every man who voted for me to send me his name and the precinct at which he voted, and I shall endeavor to find out why the votes were not counted for me. I do not intend to be robbed out of the votes cast for me without making an effort to expose the parties guilty of the robbery, even if I jeopardize my life in doing so.

Respectfully,

E. J. DELONY.

Mr. CHANDLER. At the time that letter was written Mr. Delony, who was an independent candidate for district judge, thought that he might be able to run as a candidate, but a little later he concluded that it would not be safe for him to run and he addressed the letter, which I ask the Secretary to read, addressed to his colored friends in East Carroll. This judicial district consists of the parishes of East Carroll and Madison.

The Secretary read as follows:

To my colored friends in East Carroll:

It is with sincere regret I announce to you my honest convictions that it will be utterly impossible to have a free and fair election on Tuesday next, the 17th of this month.

I firmly believed at one time that our good, intelligent, and law-abiding citizens would see and appreciate the fact that the deprivation of any voter of his right of suffrage, whether by violence or fraud, would be liable to disturb the peaceable and quiet condition of affairs which have existed for several years in the parish, and they would so openly and positively disapprove and discountenance such methods of carrying the election as to deter the reckless and lawless persons who might desire to practice them; but I am sorry to say that in this I am disappointed, and from all information I have been able to gather you are to be deprived of your votes for me or any candidate, and the ballots you may cast will be counted against you unless they be given for the nominees of the Democrats from governor to coroner. Therefore, under the circumstances, it will be utter folly for you to go to the polls and vote; and should you do so, you would to some extent be a party to the frauds to be committed by allowing those who commit them to use your name on the list of voters to fraudulently increase the vote of the Democratic candidates.

I know that I am almost your unanimous choice for re-election to the office of district judge, but being an independent candidate I am not to be allowed to receive your votes, notwithstanding the fact that I am a Democrat, and have been ever since I have been a voter, now about thirty years.

This is a sad state of affairs, but I am compelled to recognize the fact that it is so, and to say that I am powerless to prevent it without at least the moral support of the substantial citizens of the parish.

Therefore, under these circumstances I shall withdraw as a candidate and advise you to remain at home and not go to the polls on the day of the election. Be quiet, peaceable, and orderly, and show to the white people of your parish that you are law-abiding and will not create trouble even though you are deprived of your political rights.

If you do not go to the polls those who would commit frauds and violate the law will not be able to do so and in that way you will contribute to an observance of the law by removing the pretext for its violation.

I thank you for the kind feelings you have exhibited towards me, and assure you I shall always appreciate the support which you have tendered me (unsought upon my part) during this campaign.

I address this to you that you may understand why I have withdrawn, and that my reasons for doing so may not be misrepresented to you.

Respectfully,

E. J. DELONY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have in my hand the Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean of Saturday, July 7, 1888, which contains a letter from W. Herman Dinkgrave, dated at Topeka, Kans. Topeka, Kans., seems to be a favorite refuge for Republicans who are driven out of the South because of their politics. Mr. Dinkgrave is, I think, a brother of Dr. B. H. Dinkgrave, and I desire to state that Dr. B. H. Dinkgrave was one of the Louisiana victims. I quote from reliable authority:

That leading white Republican of Ouachita Parish was Dr. B. H. Dinkgrave, a native Louisianian, son-in-law of the chief-justice of the State—and a man of spotless character and fearless courage. He was notified that if he did not desist from organizing Republican clubs harm would happen to him.

That was, I think, Chief-Justice Ludeling—

This was in 1875, I think.

He disregarded the warning. On the 30th of August on the highway, at noon, on his way to dinner, he was shot dead by a disguised assassin, who rode off unmolested and unpursued, protected by the sympathies of the Democrats at Ouachita.

The letter, to which I have referred, of Mr. W. Herman Dinkgrave, published in the Inter-Ocean of July 7, 1888, is as follows:

PLAIN TALK—A NATIVE LOUISIANIAN ON THE FRAUDS AT THE ELECTION IN THAT STATE—BOURBONS DO NOT CONCEAL THEIR INTENTION TO COUNT OUT AND RESORT TO FRAUD—METHODS PUT IN FORCE WHICH WOULD MAKE MACKINS AND M'COYS BLUSH WITH SHAME—STARTLING REVELATIONS.

TOPEKA, KANS., June 26.

TO THE EDITOR: In answer to certain questions that have been submitted to me (as to the political situation in the South generally, and in Louisiana particularly), I will say: If I can in any honorable way be the means of enlightening the fair-minded voters of the nation as to the real condition of political affairs at the South, and of bringing them to a realization of the importance of doing their duty and overthrowing the political slavery that exists in the South by the forcible and fraudulent suppression of the Republican vote, I consider it my duty as a citizen who believes in the supremacy and enforcement of the laws to do whatever I can to effect this result. I am frequently asked if the reports of ballot-box stuffing and bulldozing at the recent election in Louisiana are true.

In reply, I will as briefly as possible give some facts concerning that election, it being one for State and parish officers, and was held in April last.

I am a native of Louisiana and have up to this time lived there all my life. At the time of this election I was a resident and a voter of the parish of East Carroll, which is one of the large cotton parishes lying on the Mississippi River—

Which is the same parish from which Mr. Delony wrote his letter—

the voting population consists of about 3,000 negroes and 350 to 400 white men. Like all the parishes of the State where the negroes predominate, it is by right largely Republican, for I assert without fear of successful contradiction that the colored voter is almost unanimously, by conviction, by education, and by sentiment, a Republican, and, if not prevented by force or fraud, votes with that party. It does not need much reasoning to understand this. He knows that it was the Republican party that advocated and gave him his freedom, and which favored and passed the laws which at the time were deemed sufficient to guaranty and protect him in the exercise of that right, and he knows, too, that the Democratic party has always, on every occasion, opposed these measures.

The registered vote of my parish (East Carroll) was (in round numbers) about 3,000. Out of this the whole vote amounted to not quite 400. That the negroes voted the Republican ticket solidly even the Democrats down there do not pretend to deny, and one of their United States Senators, in the recent debate on this subject in the Senate, could find no other answer to the question except "that it was none of the business of the North" how the elections in Louisiana were carried.

The "plan of campaign" differed in different parishes. In some the negroes were permitted to go to the polls and vote as they chose, and then the ballot-boxes were stuffed and substituted, and the Republican votes counted out; in others a system of intimidation was resorted to, prominent negroes were driven from their homes by armed men, and such a reign of terror inaugurated that the Republican voters would not go the polls at all, and in some counties like Ouachita—the home of Governor McEnery—they were actually so completely terrorized and demoralized that they went to the polls and voted the Democratic ticket.

Taking East Carroll Parish for example, after the governor of the State had publicly proclaimed that the "law should be suspended until the danger was passed," and had issued his now notoriously official letter to the returning officers of the different parishes, to wit: "Warmoth is developing too much strength; see to it that your parish is returned strongly Democratic at all hazards." No attempt even to conceal their intention to count out and resort to fraud was made; in fact it was boldly admitted that they intended to resort to such methods, and they did, by counting out the Republican majority of 2,800 and substituting one for the Democratic ticket of some 2,900 majority. It was in this parish that Judge E. J. Delony, a life-long Democrat, at the time district judge of the State court and an independent candidate for re-election, gave astounding evidence of the truth of what I assert by issuing a few days before the election a letter under his signature, addressed to the colored voters, in which he, an officer of the State, a conservator of the peace, makes the startling admission that he is convinced "that a fair and free election can not be held; advises the negroes to abstain from voting, as their votes will not only not be counted as cast, but be counted against them," and frankly says "that while such a condition of affairs is to be deplored, he is powerless to prevent it," stating further "that he had even been warned that if he persisted in running as an independent he might jeopardize his life, and announcing for these reasons his withdrawal as a candidate."

It was in this parish—East Carroll—that a member of the Legislature, a prominent citizen and attorney-at-law of Lake Providence, La., Mr. J. M. Kennedy, and the acknowledged leader of the Democratic party in that parish, frankly stated that the Republican votes would be counted out, and that it was the intention of the Democrats to do so.

On the day of the election a clergyman of the county seat of my parish called on me at my residence, and as a friend begged me not to go to the polls and attempt to secure a fair count, saying that armed men were then being sent to that particular box to enforce their programme, "at all hazards," and I would risk my life in any endeavors to thwart their plans. The armed men did come to this box—Benhams, East Carroll—and remained until the pretended count was completed, and although at this box there were actually cast some 280 or 290 Republican votes, and but about 15 Democratic ones, the vote as returned gave the Republican ticket but 35 votes, and a Democratic majority of about 255!

An undeniable evidence of the frauds perpetrated at this box was that the Republicans voted tickets printed on white paper in red ink, and yet when the box—pretended to be the one in which the votes were cast—was opened and counted, there was not one single red ticket in it, and the 35 Republican votes found therein were all printed in black ink, thus showing conclusively that a stuffed box had been substituted.

This was done in every ward of this parish; and thus a Republican majority of 2,800 was converted into one for the Democratic ticket of 2,900.

In the adjoining county—that of Madison—colored men were whipped and driven from their homes. Armed men were imported into the parish, who rode over it and terrorized the voters, and though having more than 3,000 colored voters, not a Republican vote was returned.

It is too lengthy to copy in full, but as part of my authority for this statement I refer you to a letter by H. B. Holmes, the sheriff of that parish, an independent candidate for re-election, and a Democrat, published in the New Orleans Pelican of April 28, 1888, which he closes thus: "The governor of the State proclaimed that the law should be suspended until what that official was pleased to term 'the danger was passed.'" Following this remarkable utterance of the chief executive of the State armed men were introduced into the parish and have been kept here ever since without, so far as I could see, the slightest cause or necessity, the negroes being perfectly quiet and seeming to seek nothing but to be protected. My only chance to succeed would be to follow the advice of his excellency the governor of the State and suspend the law until after the election, and meet force with force. In short, by bringing on civil war. Rather than do this I have concluded to give up my rights and withdraw from the race."

Now, bear in mind this is a Democrat who wrote the above.

With such a state of affairs is it to be wondered that not a single Republican vote was returned? This fraud or violence or both was practiced all over the State, especially in all the parishes where the negroes largely outnumbered the white voters, and the unprecedented majority of 83,200 for the Democratic ticket was returned. Now, what is the North going to do about it? What are the Republicans and the patriotic citizens of other parties, even outsiders of the Southern States, going to do?

Will they rest content with Senator EUSTIS's reply that it is none of their business?

Is it none of their business that the rights of the millions of American citizens in these States are denied them and that liberty and freedom of speech is a farce?

Is it none of their business that by these illegal and un-American methods a Democratic majority in Congress is made possible?

Is it none of their business that the vote of one Democrat in the South calls for as much as that of ten in the other States of the Union?

Is it none of their business that by these frauds and this suppression of the Republican votes the electoral votes of States like Louisiana, Mississippi, etc., are prevented from being cast for the Republican candidates, where they of right belong?

Is it none of their business that the guaranties under the United States Constitution are ruthlessly violated, and the protection which that document is supposed to cast around each and every American citizen, is, in the South, a vain mockery?

Senator INGALLS believed it was some of the business of the people outside of Louisiana, and the spirit manifested at the Chicago convention, together with the platform, shows that the nation thinks so, too!

In closing now, I desire to distinctly say that I do not wish it to be inferred that all the people of Louisiana approve or condone this lawlessness and these outrages. On the contrary, there are hundreds, yea, thousands of good law-abiding citizens, and Democrats, too, who are not in favor of such methods, but because they fear that any open opposition will draw on themselves the displeasure of this organized autocratic minority and injure their business, or because they lack the moral courage to openly resist, they remain silent and inactive—as they did in 1860, when, notwithstanding the State voted largely against secession, it was carried out of the Union.

I believe that this class of citizens will be glad to see a change occur, be glad to see law and order prevail, and will be glad to see the time come when a free ballot and a fair count shall be had, because they know that this above all other inducements will bring to Louisiana's fair domain that wealth, energy, and enterprise that come with capital and immigration, and which her unparalleled soil, her delightful climate, and her unlimited resources entitle her to.

W. HERMAN DINKGRAVE.

I now come to the parish of Terre Bonne——

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from New Hampshire will yield, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 23, 1888, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 22, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. T. H. B. BROWNE, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEPHENSON, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HAYES, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky, indefinitely, on account of ill health.

To Mr. BROWER, indefinitely.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled the bill (H. R. 11062) for the removal of the political disability of Gustavus W. Smith; when the Speaker signed the same.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, in replying yesterday to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY], who stated that some member on the floor had been attorney for some French spoliation claimants, I stated that I "represented none of them." I intended to convey the idea that I was not attorney for any of them, not that there were no persons among my constituency who were interested in the matter. I am satisfied that some of my constituency have presented claims to the Court of Claims under the act of 1885. I know nothing of the particulars of their claims as I have not been their attorney; but I make this statement so that my remark may not be misinterpreted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration House bill 5009.

Mr. MARTIN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to present a conference report, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10234) "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 12, 18, 19, 22, 24, and 27.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 23, 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 34, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert, after the word "change," in line 19, page 5 of the bill, the words "or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads;" strike out, in line 21, same page, the words "last-named railroad" and insert in lieu thereof the word "railroads;" and in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said Senate amendment insert the following:

"And provided further, That the transportation furnished by the Quartermaster's Department to officers traveling without troops shall be limited to transportation in kind, not including sleeping or parlor car accommodations, over said free roads, over bond-aided Pacific railroads, and by conveyance belonging to the said Department."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$42,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 5 of said amendment, the words "and increased facilities for their manufacture;" and strike out, in line 12, the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in lines 12 and 13 of section 2 of said amendment, the words "three Army officers and three" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the superintendent of the Military Academy and two;" and strike out, in lines 20 and 21 of said section, the words "War Department" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Army;" strike out all after the words "New York," in section 3 of said amendment, down to the end of said section, and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the words "$700,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" in lieu of the sum named in section 4 of said amendment insert "$3,500,000;" insert, after the word "shall" where it occurs the second time, in line 8 of section 5 of said amendment, the words "have or;" strike out section 6 of said amendment; change the number of section 7 of said amendment to section 6; and strike out section 8 of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 7. The appropriations provided for in sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 shall be available until expended, and shall be expended under the direct supervision of a board, to consist of the commanding general of the Army, an officer of ordnance, and an officer of artillery, to be selected by the Secretary of War; and said board shall be under the direction and control of the Secretary of War and subject to his supervision in all respects."

R. W. TOWNSHEND,
LEVI MAISH,
JAMES LAIRD,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. B. ALLISON,
P. B. PLUMB,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees, submitted under the rule, was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10234) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended on the Senate amendments as compared with the bill as it passed the House:

On amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4: Limits the pay and traveling expenses of contract surgeons, hospital matrons, and veterinary surgeons to not exceeding $50, $160, and $14, respectively, and reduces the appropriation therefor from $100,000, as provided by the House, to $85,000.

On amendment numbered 5: Limits the number of paymasters' messengers to not exceeding thirty.

On amendment numbered 6: Restores the House provision for payment of a clerk attendant on the collection and classification of military information from abroad, $1,500, and authorizing the officers detailed to obtain the same to receive mileage and transportation and commutation of quarters while on this duty.

On amendments numbered 7, 8, and 9: Limiting the mileage to officers when traveling on duty without troops to cases where authorized by law only, and to the shortest usually-traveled routes, and makes the appropriation $150,000 instead of $100,000, as provided by the House.

On amendments numbered 10 and 11: Provides for limiting the transportation to be furnished by the Quartermaster's Department to officers traveling without troops to transportation in kind over free railroads and bond-aided Pacific railroads and by conveyance belonging to said Department.

On amendment numbered 12: Makes a verbal change only.

On amendments numbered 13, 14, and 15: Strikes out the provision providing for commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men competing in rifle contests at places of contest, and limits the amount for payment of civilian employés of the Subsistence Department to $110,000 instead of $120,000, as provided by the House.

On amendments numbered 18 and 19: Restores the provision of the House allowing the hire and transportation of the necessary agents and employés of the Army.

On amendment numbered 20: Reduces the amount for Army transportation from $2,800,000 to $2,700,000.

On amendment numbered 21: Strikes out the following proviso in House bill: "That no expenditure authorized by this act from the appropriations made herein for the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, including the transportation of troops and their supplies, and the expenses incident thereto, shall be made except by the Quartermaster-General, under the direction of the Secretary of War, unless an emergency exists that demands immediate action; and in such case the expenditure necessary to meet the emergency may be made upon the order in writing of the general commanding the Army, or upon the order in writing of a division or department commander in whose jurisdiction the emergency arises; but every such order from a division or department commander shall certify that an emergency exists requiring immediate expenditure, stating the emergency necessary to be met."

On amendments numbered 22, 23, 24, and 25: Provides under the medical and hospital department for general sanitation instead of limiting to post sanitation, includes medical supplies for the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, reduces the appropriation for Medical Department from $205,000 to $200,000, and limits the amount which may be expended for civilian employés to $42,000.

On amendment numbered 26: Provides an appropriation of $2,500 for repairs to sea-wall and wharf at Willets Point, New York.

On amendment numbered 27: Strikes out the proposed appropriation of $1,000 for repairs to the works on old Fort Barrancas, Florida.

On amendment numbered 28: Provides for horse equipments for artillery as well as for cavalry.

On amendment numbered 29: Provides for the manufacture, repair, and issue of arms at national armories, instead of the National Armory.

On amendment numbered 30: Provides that the cost to the Ordnance Department of all ordnance and ordnance stores issued to the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, under the act of February 12, 1887, shall be credited to the appropriation for "manufacture of arms at national armories," which appropriation for 1889 and thereafter shall be available until exhausted.

On amendment numbered 31: Provides that the pneumatic dynamite guns and carriages to be purchased shall be all complete and mounted in place ready for military use.

On amendment numbered 32: Excludes from examination and test of the ordnance, etc., provided for in the amended paragraph, plants for gun-carriages, etc., and includes aerial torpedoes.

On amendment numbered 33: Makes provision for the following:

For the manufacture, or purchase, and test of cannon and carriages, including two 10-inch carriages maneuvered by power, one of which shall be a disappearing carriage, and also including those for the field and siege services; for the alteration of carriages on hand to adapt them to improved service guns; for projectiles, powders, fuses, and implements, their trial and proof; for experiments in the means of protecting torpedo lines; for compensation of draughtsmen while employed in the Army Ordnance Bureau on ordnance construction, and for the necessary expenses of ordnance officers while temporarily employed at the proving-ground and absent from their proper stations, at the rate of $2.50 per diem while so employed, $500,000: Provided, That all purchases of materials under this provision, excepting samples, shall be of American manufacture: Provided, That of the above sum $10,000 may be used for increasing facilities for the manufacture of projectiles.

On amendment numbered 34: Provides for an appropriation of $5,000 for the Signal Service of the Army in lieu of $3,000 as proposed by the House.

On amendment numbered 35: Makes provision for the following purposes:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be authorized to enter into negotiations for the purchase of the 225 acres of land on the Hudson River, directly south of the military reservation at West Point, belonging to the estate of Edward V. Kinsley, or so much thereof as he may deem necessary for the purposes of the Military Academy, and to receive offers for the sale of their interest in such land from such of the heirs of said Kinsley as are competent and willing to sell such interests; and the Secretary of War is authorized to submit all offers so made and the question of the value of said 225 acres to a board to consist of the Superintendent of the Military Academy and two competent civilians, who shall make due investigation and report concerning said value; and the Secretary of War shall submit said offers and the report of said board, with his opinion, to Congress, at its next session. The expenses of said board and compensation at the rate of $10 a day for not more than ten days for each of the civilian members shall be paid from the appropriation for contingencies of the Army.

SEC. 3. For the erection, purchase, or manufacture of the necessary buildings and other structures, machinery, tools, and fixtures for an army gun factory for finishing and assembling heavy ordnance, to be erected at the Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y., $700,000; or so much thereof as may be necessary.

SEC. 4. For the purchase of rough-finished, oil-tempered, and annealed steel for high-power coast-defense guns of 8, 10, and 12 inch caliber, in quality and dimensions conforming to specifications, subject to inspection at each stage of the manufacture, and including all the parts of each caliber, $3,500,000: Provided, That no money shall be expended except for steel accepted and delivered.

SEC. 5. The material for the guns provided for in section 4 shall be purchased in accordance with section 3709, Revised Statutes, for which purpose the Secretary of War is authorized to make contracts with responsible steel manufacturers, after proper advertisement, continuing not less than thirty days in the newspapers most likely to reach the said manufacturers: Provided, That each bidder with whom such contracts shall be made shall have or agree to erect in the United States a suitable plant, including the best modern appliances, capable of making all the steel required, and of finishing it in accordance with the contracts, and shall further agree to deliver yearly a specified quantity of each caliber, the time of the delivery of the steel for the smaller calibers of heavy guns to commence at the expiration of not more than eighteen months, and that for the largest calibers specified in the advertisement, at the expiration of not more than three years from the date of the acceptance of the contracts; and that all the material for said guns shall be manufactured in the United States.

SEC. 6. For the purchase of submarine controllable torpedoes or torpedoes and torpedo-boats controllable from shore and adapted to coast defense, $100,000.

SEC. 7. The appropriations provided for in sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 shall be available until expended, and shall be expended under the direct supervision of a board, to consist of the Commanding General of the Army, an officer of ordnance, and an officer of artillery, to be selected by the Secretary of War, and said board shall be under the direction and control of the Secretary of War, and subject to his supervision in all respects.

Amount of the bill as passed the House	$24,639,300
Amount of the bill as passed the Senate	31,531,800
Amount of the bill as agreed to in conference	29,381,300

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, is not this subject to be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will agree that the report shall be printed and go over.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has the right to make a point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to make the point of order that this matter ought first to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled. This is a conference report. And these amendments have all been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAND. Then I hope that the gentleman will agree that the report be printed and go over till to-morrow.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not interrupt me except by a point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I simply desired to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not yielded the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move the adoption of the report. Before proceeding to debate it, I will say that if no other gentleman desires to enter upon its discussion, I shall move the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. I move to postpone the consideration of the subject——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor for the present.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I repeat that unless there be a disposition to discuss the report, I shall move the previous question. If no other member desires to discuss it, I certainly shall do so.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he will not consent to have the report published in the RECORD for the information of the House, and that this matter may be considered to-morrow morning. It is a privileged question and can be called up at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that proposition will be agreed to. This is a long report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If my friend from Texas wishes to discuss it——

Mr. SAYERS. I would have no objection to discussing the question awhile to-day; but I desire that the report be published in the RECORD before it is finally acted on.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will consent to that course, and I also trust that there will be some agreement as to the length of time during which the matter shall be considered to-morrow—say, a couple of hours.

The SPEAKER (after a pause). The question is upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no desire to press this matter at present, if it is the desire of gentlemen here that it shall go over till to-morrow, so that members may see the report in print. I, however, desire that some agreement be made as to the length of time to be occupied.

Mr. SAYERS. I would suggest that at least three hours be allowed for the discussion of this report.

Mr. HOLMAN. An hour and a half on each side.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. I do not know why we should undertake to limit the discussion before we enter upon it. We can determine to-morrow the time that shall be occupied in discussion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am willing that an agreement be made——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects, as the Chair understands, to any agreement in advance as to limitation of discussion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This report will be printed in the RECORD; will it not?

The SPEAKER. It will be.

Mr. SPRINGER. And this being a privileged matter, it can be called up at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so decided repeatedly.

Mr. SPRINGER. So that if the report be now withdrawn, it can be called up at any time hereafter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois does not propose to withdraw the report, but simply to let it lie over.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the time fixed for the consideration of this report will be Friday next, so that notice can be given to the country, as a yea-and-nay vote will undoubtedly be demanded upon it, and if forced to a vote in the present condition of the House the fact of no quorum will most likely be developed. I also desire, there being to-morrow, as I hope, no appropriation bill in the way, to proceed with the consideration of the bill providing for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma. That bill has been pending for some time, and to-morrow it will be the regular order except as to appropriation bills. I suggest, therefore, that the time fixed for the consideration of this report on the Army bill will be such as not to interfere with the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. SAYERS. After a conference with the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the consideration of this report, we have agreed, for the purpose of submitting it to the House for its ratification, that a limited discussion will take place upon the report this morning, and that the report shall then be printed in the RECORD, and go over to be called up to-morrow morning.

Mr. ROGERS. Why not say Friday?

Mr. SAYERS. We have agreed on to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Texas to indicate what length of time was to be consumed this morning, or whether there was any intimation of the time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The understanding between the gentleman from Texas and myself is to the effect that the debate is to proceed for a limited time, not to exceed an hour, neither of us having much desire to occupy the attention of the House this morning more than to make a brief explanation of the views we entertain about the various amendments adopted in conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman means to limit the time this morning?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think my friend from Texas and myself will be able to agree upon that without any further controversy. I shall make but a brief statement myself. It is agreed between us that there shall be debate not exceeding one hour this morning, and the bill then go over until to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Being a privileged report, it can be called up at any time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] desires thirty minutes of the hour this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois with reference to the disposition of this report?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

A bill (H. R. 3902) for the relief of Sophia B. Moore;

A bill (H. R. 3055) for the relief of A. F. Saint Sure Lindefelt; and

A bill (H. R. 3480) for the relief of John D. Munnerlyn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2590) granting a pension to George L. Sanders;

A bill (S. 2765) granting a pension to Adaline A. Smyth;

A bill (S. 3047) granting a pension to William Bittinger;

A bill (S. 3083) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Florian Lischewsky;

A bill (S. 3085) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, minor child of Richard Monohan, deceased;

A bill (S. 3086) granting a pension to Victor, Gertrude, Margaret, and Helen, minor children of Lieut. George R. McGuire;

A bill (S. 3087) granting a pension to Mary A. Pfeiffer;

A bill (S. 3091) granting a pension to John Corr;

A bill (S. 3109) granting a pension to D. G. Rummel;

A bill (S. 3112) granting an increase of pension to William H. Marston;

A bill (S. 3114) granting a pension to Joseph H. Harwood;

A bill (S. 3201) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wilson;

A bill (S. 3208) granting a pension to William S. Bradshaw;

A bill (S. 3236) granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn, late major Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers;

A bill (S. 3249) for the relief of Zo. S. Cook;

A bill (S. 3269) granting a pension to Theresa Fichter;

A bill (S. 3283) granting a pension to Reuben Ash;

A bill (S. 3306) granting a pension to Mary K. Richards;

A bill (S. 3325) granting an increase of pension to Julia M. Edie;

A bill (S. 3335) granting a pension to Thompson D. Hatfield;

A bill (S. 3339) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Moore;

A bill (S. 3349) granting a pension to David Myers;

A bill (S. 3358) for the relief of M. S. Hellman, of Canyon City, Oregon;

A bill (S. 3414) granting a pension to Emma Matilda Selfridge;

A bill (S. 3421) granting a pension to Mary B. McVean;

A bill (S. 3422) granting a pension to Kate C. Van Arnum;

A bill (S. 2110) granting the right of way for the construction of a railroad through the Hot Springs reservation, State of Arkansas;

A bill (S. 2863) to provide for the erection of a public building in the town of Smyrna, Del.; and

A bill (S. 3420) authorizing the Secretary of War to ascertain what amount of money has been expended by the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for military purposes in aid of the Government of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed on the 21st instant bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 8592) for the erection of a public building at Jackson, Mich.;

An act (H. R. 6233) for the relief of Jesse Coe;

An act (H. R. 422) for the relief of William Gray;

An act (H. R. 6110) for the relief of William Lavery; and

An act (H. R. 6232) for the relief of Nancy G. Alexander.

The message also announced that the bill (H. R. 10165) for improving the mouth of the Brazos River, Texas, had been presented to the President on the 9th instant, and not having been returned by him to the House in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, had become a law without his signature.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 102) appropriating $200,000 to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States.

The message also requested that the House return to the Senate bill H. R. 4792, to pension J. W. Porter.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, at this time I shall state very briefly the facts in regard to the amendments which were discussed and disposed of in the conference on the Army appropriation bill, so that the House may learn the nature of the amendments and the agreements which have been reached in regard to them.

This bill when it left the House made an appropriation of $24,639,300, which is somewhere in the neighborhood of a half million dollars more than the amount appropriated last year.

The bill as it passed the Senate provided an appropriation of $31,531,800, being an increase of $6,892,500 on the bill as it left the House. The House conferees were successful in securing a reduction of the amount placed on the bill in the Senate to the extent of $2,150,000, reducing thereby the total appropriations of the Senate to $29,381,300. As the bill stands now there is an increase over the amount as it left the House of $4,742,000. The increase to which I have referred is entirely occasioned by the amendments which were attached in the Senate relating to the establishment of a gun factory and the purchase of steel forgings for the manufacture of heavy ordnance. There were thirty-five amendments placed upon the bill by the Senate, of which number four, I think, relate to the question of the gun foundry and the steel forgings referred to. The other amendments relate to the ordinary details of the military establishment, and upon them—thirty-one in number—the bill as it stands now makes a reduction of $58,000 in the amount that it carried when it went to the Senate; so that there is practically a reduction upon the bill, outside of the ordnance amendments, of the amount I have named.

The ordnance amendments, as I have stated, aggregate $4,742,000. Those amendments provide for the establishment of the gun foundry and the purchase of the steel forgings. The Senate appropriated $750,000 in one of its amendments for a gun factory, upon which a reduction was obtained in conference of $50,000. Another amendment that was attached to the bill by the Senate provided for the purchase of $5,000,000 of steel forgings out of which heavy ordnance should be fabricated. The House conferees secured a reduction of that to $3,500,000. My desire, I can say, acting for myself, was that the amount should be reduced at least $1,000,000 more, leaving the appropriation for this purpose at $2,500,000. But the final amount agreed upon in conference, after full discussion, was $3,500,000, which is now recommended for adoption.

I have no desire further to occupy the time of the House this morning, but will wait until I hear from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and others who may participate in the debate.

I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY].

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, if we analyze the opposition to the acceptance of this report, we will find it composed, first, of those who see with regret that this subject is being intrusted to any other than the Appropriations Committee; second, by those who dislike to vote for large appropriations for any purpose; third, by those who believe there is no likelihood of our being attacked, and who think we may as well trust to the chances of getting on without coast defenses; and, fourth, by those who are willing that large sums be expended, but want private enterprises encouraged especially, and who profess to have no confidence in the ability of the Ordnance Department of the Army. During the discussions which have already taken place the members of the Committee on Military Affairs have called the attention of the House to the fact that the amendments practically originated here, and are but portions of a bill which early in the session was unanimously presented with a favorable report by the House Committee on Military Affairs. It was further urged that since to that committee were referred questions of public defense and appropriations, therefore the House could with propriety permit the committee to at once dispose of this vexatious subject by settling it in conference if possible, for these several amendments certainly have to do with public defense.

To the gentlemen who oppose large appropriations, and to those who think that we should run along taking the chances of no war coming on, and to those who, living at a distance from the coast, are disposed to feel but little concern about this question as not being one of interest to their constituents, I extend an earnest request for attention to the reasons which may be given why their duty to the entire country calls upon them to accept this report.

It is probable that in all the cities on the coast and throughout the country adjacent to these cities the entire population will gratefully appreciate action by this body that will at once give some relief from the anxiety felt as to possible losses in case of any foreign government sending war-ships to bombard our ports.

I can not understand why so many of our members feel that there is practically no danger. Were we in a position to be defiant it would be natural to have this sense of security. But why should we assume that other powers who are well aware of our defenseless condition and their ability to work us injury will readily yield on any point? Will any one assert that our people would be satisfied if the Government, knowing our danger, were from timidity to concede all questions in dispute? We know well that an outburst of indignation throughout the whole country would follow close upon the action indicating want of courage on the part of our Government. No, Mr. Speaker, we must admit that if the honor of our country is at stake, this very House of Representatives must even vote to declare war. In that event do we discover danger from attack? We do indeed. England, France, Germany, Russia, Italy, Turkey, Austria, Denmark, Holland, Spain, Brazil, Japan, and Chili, each has war ships that could destroy our cities, and we could do nothing to prevent.

What consolation would it be for us to march into Canada or capture Cuba as an offset to great disasters? Let us estimate the possible losses that could be inflicted upon us by hostile fleets. In New York City property could be destroyed worth more than $1,800,000,000; Jersey City, $100,000,000; Portland, Me., $33,000,000; Boston and Cambridge, $531,000,000; Baltimore, $220,000,000; San Francisco, $181,000,000; Newport, $24,000,000; Philadelphia, $790,000,000; New Orleans, $175,000,000; and in New London, Wilmington, Savannah, Mobile, Galveston, Portsmouth, New Haven, Norfolk, Charleston, St. Augustine, San Diego, Portland, Oregon, and important points on the Great Lakes an aggregate of about two billions more, making about $6,000,000,000 worth of destructible property.

Many will claim that these comparatively small amounts we are appropriating will not give means to effect any formidable defense. Mr. Speaker, we must do the best we can. I have given careful examination to this subject and can see that, while a perfect system of fortifications would necessitate an expenditure of more than a hundred millions, it will not require many millions to provide guns and other instruments of defense mentioned in this bill in sufficient quantity to place our coast cities in comparative security and to make the several governments heretofore alluded to cautious in pressing unreasonable demands.

I want to give some attention to those who are opponents of these amendments and who distrust the Army. The assertion is made that the Ordnance Department discourages private enterprises, and that measures should be taken to have this subject handled by commissions independent of the War Department. I find by investigation that a few years ago the enemies of the Ordnance Department stated that both the Navy and Army were unfortunate in not having capacity to do the work of finishing and assembling the guns at Government gun factories. It was then asserted that private enterprise was alone competent to give the Government a complete gun.

These establishments, to be sure, wanted a little help. They asked that the Government issue bonds, as it had done in the cases of the Pacific railroads, and that it thus supply funds to the private establishments.

This did not find favor with the Army officials, and the Gun Foundry Board, in its report in 1884, page 49, says:

> With Government gun factories established for both the Army and the Navy, there will be still needed the hearty co-operation of the private industries of the country. This can not be aroused unless there is held out to them a fair prospect of remuneration. The board does not approve of a partnership in business between the Government and private firms. All history warns against such a course. But it does believe that joint, and at the same time independent, action between them can be made to work harmoniously towards the common national purpose.

Later on, following vigorous efforts made by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE], gentlemen, among whom was my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], secured such amounts on the Navy appropriation bill as enabled the Navy Department to give satisfactory evidence that its ordnance officers were competent to attend to all duties assigned them. This once demonstrated, the advocates of independent private enterprises ceased their attacks and centered all their abuse upon the Army.

It would be quite extraordinary if this corps were not well adapted to attend to all ordnance duties. The officers are gentlemen who graduate at West Point, serve a time in some other branch of the Army, and after passing a severe competitive examination, are placed in the Ordnance Department. They are obliged, in line of their duty, to often report upon proposals made to the Department, give evidence before Congressional committees and to faithfully report the result of their investigations and tests of new inventions.

In the performance of these duties it has not been possible to avoid offending disappointed inventors and persons seeking to force the Government to adopt schemes which would not benefit it, but would enrich the proposers. The consequence has been that malicious reports have been spread, and even members of Congress have been induced to charge waste and inefficiency upon this department. It has been stated that many millions have been appropriated during the past twenty years and no guns made. The facts are that during the period of twenty years from July 1, 1866, to July 1, 1886, there was expended by the War Department less than $1,500,000 for the manufacture and purchase of cannon, including field guns and all larger calibers. This includes the cost to the Government for the procurement, preparatory to test, of the very considerable number of experimental guns authorized by Congress during the period, and also the cost of three hundred and eighteen cannon which are now in use or available for service, to wit:

One 20-inch and twenty-six 15-inch Rodman smooth bores; one 12½-inch muzzle-loading rifle, tubed; five 11-inch, one 10-inch and two hundred and ten 8-inch muzzle-loading converted rifles, tubed with wrought iron or steel; four 8-inch breech-loading converted rifles; one 12-inch muzzle-loading rifled mortar; one 8-inch breech-loading steel rifle; seven $3\frac{2}{10}$-inch breech-loading converted rifles; twenty-five $3\frac{2}{10}$-inch breech-loading steel rifles; thirty-six Hotchkiss breech-loading mountain guns, steel.

The millions referred to were judiciously expended for the purposes to which they were only applicable. The money could not be used in any other ways than those specifically stated, as I here give the statement:

Amounts appropriated in general appropriation bills to be expended under the direction of Ordnance Bureau.

1881	300,000.00	Total	4,101,000.00

For manufacture, at national armories, of the new model breech-loading musket and carbine, adopted for the military service on recommendation of the board of officers convened under act of June 6, 1872.

PURCHASE OF GUNPOWDER AND LEAD.

Nothing.

TESTS OF HEAVY RIFLED ORDNANCE.

1873	$270,000.00
1874	50,000.00
Total	320,000.00

For testing three models of heavy ordnance selected by a board under act of June 6, 1872. Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 261.

TESTS OF IRON AND STEEL.

1874	$25,000.00

Applied to the purchase of the testing machine now at Watertown arsenal.

EXAMINATION OF HEAVY ORDNANCE AND PROJECTILES.

1882	$25,000.00

Expenses of the Board on Heavy Ordnance under act of March 3, 1881.

MACHINE GUNS.

I wish to call to the attention of the committee that the desire of the Army is in this matter of gun-making to do precisely what is being done by the Navy, i. e., to purchase the steel forgings from manufacturers and to only finish and assemble the guns at the gun foundry. A different impression may have been given by gentlemen speaking carelessly in opposition to this bill.

The extract I read from the Gun Foundry Board report shows that objection is not made to encouraging private enterprises nor to outside establishments finally being allowed to make complete guns; but it is of the utmost importance that the Government should be in a position not to allow private parties to obtain excessive profits. At times, in emergencies, the Government may deem it wise to pay an extra amount to obtain necessary work, as, for instance, at present the Navy Department is having some guns finished and assembled on trial at a cost of $3,600 each, while it does the same work itself at an expense of but $2,000 a gun.

Two draughts of fortifications bills have been pressed upon the Senate and House committees. One was introduced in the Senate as an amendment to this Army appropriation bill, but voted down. In both these bills among other provisions we find the following:

That if any gun or guns made principally of steel or principally of cast-iron shall be provided which withstand the prescribed test of two hundred rounds with the prescribed weight and velocity of the projectile, at least twenty rounds of which were fired consecutively within two hours, all such guns shall, if the producer of the gun desires, be further tested at the expense of the Government, under the joint direction of the party producing such gun or guns and the said board, until it is fully determined which of the steel guns and which of the cast-iron guns are the most durable and serviceable, and that the steel gun so selected and the cast-iron gun so selected as the best of its kind shall be contracted for by the said board with the party or parties producing such steel gun and such cast-iron gun, the contracts to be for fifty of the steel guns and thirty of the cast-iron guns. And the test of the trial gun or guns so selected must be such as to make it reasonably certain that firing from service guns made on any such system twenty rounds in two hours, of the standard weight of projectiles, with a velocity of 2,000 feet per second, would not disable the service gun. In case of two guns of equal endurance, as shown by their tests, that one shall have preference for contract which has shown the best degree of accuracy as determined by the test for accuracy at different ranges, while being tested for accuracy, range, and endurance. The contract for the fifty steel guns to be made at a price not exceeding $75,000 each, with a carriage suitable for each gun, to be delivered therewith, the price of the carriage to be one-third that of the gun, the carriage to be bought of the party who produces the gun, provided he or they will furnish such carriages suitable in all respects for use therewith. The contracts to include some projectiles for each of these guns, to be of such kind and number as the board shall determine, and shall be furnished by the party who furnishes these service guns, on condition that the board can make satisfactory contract therefor.

* * * * * * * *

That when the tests for endurance of guns, which may be made for test under the provisions of this section, have been completed for the guns of any of the specified 14-inch, 16-inch, or 20-inch calibers, a contract shall be made by the said board with that party or parties who shall have made the best 14-inch, 16-inch, or 20-inch guns, respectively, which gun or guns has been fired at least two hundred rounds with the prescribed charges, and as shown, by all the tests thereof for endurance and accuracy, made as herein provided, that it is superior to all other competing guns of its class. The contract for these guns of either class to be for twenty, which shall be equal in all respects to the trial gun tested, on which test the contract is or may be based. And the said board shall also contract for a gun-carriage suitable for use for each such gun contracted for, and for a few projectiles for each of said guns. The carriages shall be furnished by the party or parties who furnish the guns for which they are made, provided such party or parties will furnish carriages suitable for use of their guns; and that party furnishing any such service gun shall furnish the projectiles therefor, provided the said board can make suitable contract with them therefor.

That the prices of said service guns shall be as follows: For 14-inch rifle guns, not to exceed $135,000 each; for 16-inch rifle guns, not to exceed $225,000 each; and for 20-inch rifle guns, not to exceed $510,000 each; and the prices of the carriages for each of these respective guns shall be one-third of the price of the gun for which it is or shall be furnished.

It will be clear to all that the gun having been accepted the maker could demand the maximum price.

The Ordnance Corps having been called upon for a criticism of this draught produced it; and I find that, after touching matters generally, it gives the following CONCLUDING REMARKS.

Twenty-inch guns are not considered a necessity to-day. Indeed, for most purposes, the 12-inch gun is sufficient; although in exceptional cases and for the most important ports they should be supplemented by 16-inch guns. This was the verdict of the Fortifications Board. The maximum thickness of armor afloat to-day does not exceed 24 inches of wrought iron, the belt of the Inflexible; or 21.7 inches of steel, the belt the Duilio. There are under construction two ships having 29.5 inches thickness of steel on the turrets for Italy.

The penetration of the 12-inch rifle is about 26 inches of wrought iron at the muzzle, 23 inches at 1,000 yards, and 17.5 inches at 3,500 yards; the penetration of the Krupp 15½-inch gun is about 35 inches of wrought iron at muzzle and 30 inches at 3,500 yards.

To commence at once with the fabrication of the largest calibers means that the Government shall bear the total expense, and all at once, for the entire plant, probably for the production of the steel as well as the finishing of the guns. On the other hand, should the work begin with the smaller calibers in the gradual development of the plant, much outside work would be done, as the production of shafting, marine work, etc., so that the cost of the plant would be more evenly distributed amongst the consumers.

Taking the highest price for gun-steel to-day, say from 38 to 40 cents per pound, and allowing about two-fifths of the cost of the material as the proportional cost for finishing, we obtain for the cost of 14-inch, 16-inch, and 20-inch guns of the weights named in the bill the following, namely:

	14-inch.	16-inch.	20-inch.
Cost	$93,632	$144,000	$289,000
The prices named in the bill are	135,000	225,000	510,000
Differences	41,368	81,000	221,000

Making a total difference for the sixty guns proposed in the bill of $6,867,000 (nearly), which allows about (more) than three times what the Foundry Board estimated was necessary for the establishment of the two separate plants for the production of the steel and the finishing of the guns.

Thus the effect of this bill is to compel the Government to erect expensive steel and gun plants largely for the benefit of private manufacturers, besides being at the additional expense of establishing a gun factory for the Navy and another for the Army, while it is believed that the creation of the board proposed in the bill is tantamount to the creation of a new Ordnance Bureau.

The prejudice against the Army is so strong on the part of some members that they might be disposed to dispute the accuracy of these figures. I have therefore procured estimates from the Navy Department, and they corroborate the statements of the Army experts.

COMMENTS ON A PROPOSED FORTIFICATIONS BILL, DATED JULY 7, 1888.

The Navy estimates on steel guns, as based on the manufacture of the 10-inch steel gun at Washington navy-yard, are as follows: For assembling and finishing guns at the navy-yard gun factory, the steel being furnished at about 33 cents per pound—the present price for 12-inch rifle forgings under the Navy contract with the Bethlehem Works—in the following quantities, and to be completed within five years, namely:

Caliber.	Number.	Cost per gun.
12 inches	10	$50,700
14 inches	6	80,300
16 inches	6	119,900
20 inches	3	235,800

The estimated cost, if the work is done by outside parties—the steel being procured as before at about 33 cents per pound, the plant valued at $1,500,000 and allowing the high rate of 6 per cent. interest thereon—would be as follows:

Caliber.	Number.	Cost per gun.
12 inches	10	$69,800
14 inches	6	106,200
16 inches	6	153,900
20 inches	3	288,900

The difference in cost arises from the fact that the Government is assumed to own a plant, with all facilities for working, and to pay no rent, taxes, or insurance; receive no profit or interest on money invested—all of which is directly the reverse with private parties.

The Navy estimate $22,000 per gun as an approximate price for 12-inch breech loading cast-iron guns, as against $20,000 per gun estimated by the Ordnance Department.

The estimates for steel guns, furnished by the Ordnance Department to the House subcommittee on the fortifications bill, were as follows:

Caliber.	Number.	Cost per gun.
12 inches	50	$55,000
14 inches	20	93,632
16 inches	20	144,000
20 inches	20	289,000

The above price for the 12-inch steel gun was based on the price of the 12-inch Krupp rifle, which has been published as about $53,000. The prices for the larger calibers were arrived at as follows:

To the finished weight of the gun 20 per cent. was added for the weight of the rough-finished forgings; the price per pound was assumed at about 33½ cents, or a little more than that paid for 12-inch rifle forgings under the Navy contract with Bethlehem, and which allows for a good profit on the rough-finished forgings; then to the cost of the rough forgings was added two-fifths, or 40 per cent., of their cost for the finishing and assembling. These figures are thought to be fair, for the allowance on gross weight is much greater than the actual—it being only 17 per cent. of the finished weight for a 12-inch gun, and much less as the caliber increases. The cost per pound is about the same price as was bid under a call by the Navy Department, involving the small sum of only about $852,000* for gun forgings, and under which the bidders were obliged to erect the necessary plant for its production; the price allowed for finishing is probably nearly double the actual cost, or 40 per cent., against 25 per cent., of the cost of rough forgings. The figures given are therefore believed to cover all risks, etc., and to insure fair profits.

The estimates of the Department, on which the House fortifications bill is based, were even more liberal than the above, and are as follows:

Caliber.	Number.	Cost per gun.
12 inches	50	$64,346
14 inches	20	105,177
16 inches	20	154,405

which are almost identical for the 14-inch and 16-inch guns with the estimates furnished by the Navy Department, where the work was to be done by outsiders, but where a very much less number of guns, namely, twelve against forty, were involved.

But attention is invited to the much lower cost of the guns, as shown by the Navy estimates, when made at a Government factory than at private shops. It is, for the different calibers, as follows:

Caliber.	Difference in cost per gun.	Number of guns required in bill.	Total difference in cost for number of guns required in bill.
12 inches	$19,100	50	$995,000
14 inches	25,900	20	518,000
16 inches	34,000	20	680,000
20 inches	53,000	20	1,062,000
Total difference			3,215,000

And yet using the estimates allowed by the Navy Department, where these guns are made by outside parties and in very limited number, as compared with the number proposed in the bill, the difference between the total amount for the 12-inch, 14-inch, 16-inch, and 20-inch rifles and that proposed in the bill is still $6,680,000—or, omitting the 12-inch guns, $6,420,000—which represents the excessive profits permissible under the bill.

But the fact that the Navy Department can make guns for less than outside parties must operate to bring down the prices charged by outside parties to about the same figures. This is the case in England. The Royal Gun Factory at Woolwich turns out a finished 12-inch breech-loading rifle for about $35,000, and the Elswick Works furnish a similar gun for the same price; while the low prices for all other calibers made at the Elswick Works show the influence of the Royal Gun Factory competition. Thus the price charged for the Elswick 110-ton gun of 16½ inches caliber is only $95,000.

Mr. Speaker, I deem it fortunate that the Government has an Ordnance Department so upright and conscientious and careful of the interests of the Government as to, when called upon, give statements correctly as quoted, and that does this knowing well that the officers will incur the hatred thereby of disappointed schemers. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] said that the fortification bill had been prepared two months ago. I think if he reflects he will remember that a bill carrying these obnoxious provisions was the bill of two months ago and not the fortification bill which passed.

It has been insinuated that my interest in urging appropriations is due to the fact that guns are being made at the Watervliet arsenal and the gun factory is located there. The conference committee has seen fit to reduce the amount to a smaller sum than the fortification bill allows. I know that this reduction will make it more difficult to complete the works at Watervliet, but I willingly accept it rather than take the chances of what I feel sure will happen in the Senate in the way of efforts being made to load the fortification bill with such schemes as the ordnance officers thwarted in the House, thanks to the evidence given by them at the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. The amount of three millions and a half for steel forgings is a suitable sum for the proper placing of contracts; but I regret that the conference committee did not make it smaller, so as to satisfy many

*This was the bid of the Cambria Steel Works who bid on gun forgings alone; the Bethlehem Works bid, in addition to gun forgings, on steel armor-plates to the amount of about $3,610,707, making a total bid of $4,462,221.

gentlemen here. We should not deceive ourselves. Mr. Speaker, the case is clear. Putting aside all question of committee rights, or even admitting that the Appropriations Committee has the right to include all the provisions they have embodied in their fortification bill, we find before us an opportunity, properly and in order, by our vote now to give the country what it calls for.

The fortification bill would be a good bill were it not for the fact that the point of order striking out the part allowing the money for steel purchases to be available until 1893 destroys the bill. I know it will be said the Senate can correct this defect; but who can say what its fate may be in the Senate? It has gone there to meet the efforts of men who declare they will never let it pass unless these private-enterprise schemes are ingrafted upon it. When it comes back here it will have been amended; we are sure of that. We can then decide how to meet it. The responsibility for failure to avail ourselves of the opportunity now presented will rest with members of the House of Representatives, and those who vote against accepting the report can not shield themselves by quibbling about rights of committees and dignity of the House. No, Mr. Speaker, they can not escape the consequences of, by their action, having delayed the work of coast defense.

The location of the gun foundry having been fixed in this bill, I would make no allusion to it were it not for the fact that I am aware that members have been urged to prevent legislation in this Congress so as to give an opportunity to have the location changed from Watervliet to Pittsburgh.

I can assure the member from Pennsylvania that efforts of this kind will only prevent sales of steel forgings by their manufacturers and do no good to Pittsburgh. I will give some reasons for this conclusion.

Watervliet arsenal, at West Troy, N. Y., is centrally situated, and has the immense advantage as a location for machine finishing shops on gun work of being located on tide-water. No other Government arsenal affords at the same time a place more secure from hostile operations and possessing such advantages for both rail and water transportation to the seacoasts and the Great Lakes. The Delaware and Hudson Railroad passes close by the grounds, and will give an easy grade into the shops of the arsenal. Within the distance of a few miles it connects with the great railroad center at Albany. The Erie Canal passes through the grounds, and shipments can be made direct to or from the Great Lakes or pass through the outlet of the canal into the Hudson River by this cheap means of transportation. In addition to this, the arsenal has a wharf upon tide-water in the Hudson River. The finished guns can be transported with but little trouble and expense to the testing grounds at Sandy Hook.

The Government factory to be erected will not include plant for forging or casting steel or other metals for guns. These products, it is clearly understood, are to be left to private manufacturers.

The Government factory is to be a finishing shop where the parts of guns made at various other places in private shops are to be finished and put together. Note, also, that the guns to be made there are principally intended to arm the coasts. Let us suppose a point far in the interior, such as Pittsburgh, to have been selected. Then, the parts of guns made in Massachusetts or New Hampshire, at Cleveland, Ohio, or Philadelphia, Bethlehem, or Johnstown, Pa., must be transported once to Pittsburgh and afterwards back again as finished guns over substantially the same ground to reach their destination in the forts on the seacoast. Even for the material for guns furnished in Pittsburgh it can be readily seen that it is much easier to provide rail transportation to the seaboard for the separate parts of guns than for the heavy and cumbersome weights found in the complete guns.

It is by no means clear that rail transportation can be used for shipping the completed guns of the heaviest types that will be called for. A 16-inch gun will weigh about 120 tons, and a 20-inch gun (if such be ever made) will weigh about 230 tons, whilst the very best equipped railroads in the country will not now undertake to carry a piece weighing more than 80 tons.

The water-power used at the Watervliet arsenal reduces the amount of fuel required for making power, and the Legislature of the State of New York has recently passed an act to give such increased water facilities as may be needed.

Watervliet arsenal is safe from hostile operations; it has never yet been in possession of an enemy, although it has been on the line of hostile operations in two wars with Great Britain. In 1777 Burgoyne surrendered at Saratoga, and in 1814 the advance was stopped by our victory on Lake Champlain. If we succeeded then in keeping the enemy away, how much more easily can it be done now with our organized militia and vast population to draw upon? The arsenal proper needs no defensive works; we are seeking to fortify our exposed coasts. No one believes or fears that an enemy can successfully carry out an incursion with a field force over a distance of 200 miles into our territory, especially along the line from the Canadian frontier to Albany, which, on our side, can be so readily covered by the concentration of available forces.

The Allegheny arsenal, at Pittsburgh, Pa., and the Watervliet arsenal, at West Troy, N. Y., have each been examined by the same board with reference to the selection of a site for a Government gun factory. The Gun Foundry Board visited both places in 1884 for this purpose and decided in favor of Watervliet. This board was composed of Navy officers, and engineer, ordnance, and artillery officers of the Army, and in the same tour of inspection visited nearly all the principal gun factories in Europe. When the Flagler board was organized in 1887, and again chose Watervliet, there was no question of the selection of Allegheny arsenal, for it had been passed over by the previous board. The Government land at Allegheny arsenal comprises but 36 acres, which is hemmed in by the environments of a large city and is cut in two by one of its main thoroughfares; and great expense would be incurred in grading the present ground for a large factory and in purchasing adjoining lands for a suitable extension of the present property. This arsenal has no wharfage facilities whatever, and must depend entirely upon railroad transportation for direct shipments. The uncertain and very limited water transportation from the city of Pittsburgh bears no comparison in facilities or directness in shipments to points where the completed guns must be delivered with that which is afforded at the Watervliet arsenal.

Watervliet arsenal is sufficiently near the centers of trade to make it unobjectionable on that ground, and is yet properly isolated from a large city and gives ample room for building purposes. The arsenal grounds comprise over 100 acres. About one-fourth of this land, lying between the canal and Hudson River, is subject to partial overflow by the spring floods. The present shops are principally located on that area, but have been in operation for many years without serious detriment from any overflow. However, the new gun shop is on the high ground west of the canal and the new buildings for an extension of the gun factory would also be placed there upon good building sites with rock foundations.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy the attention of the House but for a very few moments this morning, reserving for to-morrow the remainder of the time to which I may be entitled. For some time past the question has been before the House as to whether the amendments of the Senate which are embraced in the report under consideration should have been attached to the Army or to the Fortifications bill. The decisions of the constituted authorities of this House have been adverse to the Army bill, and there has been no appeal from these decisions. But it would be well for the House to know why it was that these amendments are before us in their present shape. A gentleman whose opinions are entitled to the highest credit has—elsewhere than in this House—given us the reason, and that, too, in a plain, straightforward manner. What he has said upon the subject is to be found on page 8376 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] makes a very proper and wise suggestion, in which I very heartily concur, concerning the loading of appropriation bills with legislation that does not pertain directly to expenditures under existing laws. But nobody is better aware than one with that Senator's experience, that both Houses of Congress have come to resort to that course in despair in many cases as the only way of getting important public business done. That is not the fault of this branch; I do not say whose fault it is. I have known a legislative department in which it has been systematically the practice to bury things they did not quite like, and not to give their own body a chance to vote upon them.

I will suppose a case. I will suppose that these very amendments that I offered to the Army appropriation bill were pending in the form of an independent bill in the other House, and suppose that there was to be no chance whatever for them there as an independent bill and that we here thought that as they were entirely germane to an Army bill we would place them, in the form of an amendment, on the Army appropriation bill. In an ideal Congress that perhaps would not be the wisest way always to let such amendments be considered in connection with an appropriation bill, but in a practical Congress we have found it a practical way of getting at the result, to put on an appropriation bill some wise and indispensable legislation because that train was going through anyhow and we did not know whether we could catch a freight train or not. That is the vicious way that Congress has sometimes to legislate.

Mr. SAYERS. This gentleman says he is the author of these amendments; he makes known his motives for seeking to have them placed on the Army bill; he acknowledges it to be a vicious way of legislation. At the same time, however, he takes care to throw the responsibility upon a legislative department, not the one which he was then addressing.

But, sir, it is due to this House; it is due to the Committee on Appropriations; it is due to gentlemen upon this floor to say that, at the very time these utterances were being delivered, a House bill embracing the subject-matter of these amendments was then pending in the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. He said that the remarks which have just been read were uttered by some one other than a member of this House. I want to know if they were not uttered by a Senator?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman knows that that is entirely out of order. I have allowed the gentleman from Texas to quote this matter and use it in his own way; but now when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] attempts to bring out a statement which he knows is entirely unparliamentary——

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes. The unparliamentary course began elsewhere, and the only point I want to bring out is the fact that a Senator has announced that the purpose is to force this House to the consideration of this matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, I make the point of order, and I thought the gentleman from Georgia had been here long enough to know that his question was entirely out of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Georgia has been here long enough to conduct himself properly without instructions from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I make the point of order that the gentleman from Georgia has asked a question that is not in order. He has inquired in reference to a debate which he says occurred in the Senate, and the rules of this House peremptorily forbid the quotation in debate here of anything which has taken place in the current session of the Senate. I leave that point for the Chair to determine.

Mr. BLOUNT. In determining it I trust the Chair will determine whether it is a proper thing for this House to consider a violation of its privileges and its dignity by the declaration of a Senator that there has been a purpose on the part of the Senate to force the House to the consideration of a measure which can not be reached under its own rules or by a mode of procedure prescribed by itself. I trust the Chair will consider that view of the matter as well as the one suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, if the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois to the interrogatory propounded by the gentleman from Georgia be not sustained, I am perfectly willing to answer the question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I submit that the Chair should rule upon the inquiry as to whether it be in order or not.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not desire to keep anything back. I would like for the House and the country to be fully informed as to the methods adopted for securing the appropriations covered by the pending report.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, as it is a great secret where these utterances were made, I will withdraw my question. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman has discovered that I am right and he is wrong.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order, but that is unnecessary, as the question is withdrawn.

Mr. SAYERS. Sir, it is enough for me to call the attention of the House to what has just been read by the Clerk. Further criticism, even if it were proper, would not be necessary. The language speaks for itself. It is too explicit to be misunderstood. It plainly discloses what has heretofore been but a matter of suspicion. It is a full, a frank, and an unsought confession of the motives which underlie this extraordinary attempt to secure these appropriations in defiance of and contrary to the rules of the House and in a manner wholly at variance with a proper method of legislation. It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that while the fortifications bill was under consideration in the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] raised points of order upon the following provisions in the bill:

That the sums of money appropriated in this section and in section 4 of this act shall remain available for expenditure until and including the fiscal year 1893.

* * * * * * *

That the President of the United States shall appoint a board on defense, advisory to the Secretary of War, to consist of three officers of the Army, etc.

These points of order were sustained and the provisions complained of were stricken from the bill.

But what follows? Directly after this action of the presiding officer, the gentleman goes to the conference committee between the two Houses on the Army bill and assents to if he does not procure the following amendment to that bill:

The appropriations provided for in sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 shall be available until expended, and shall be expended under the direct supervision of a board, to consist of the commanding general of the Army, an officer of ordnance, and an officer of artillery, to be selected by the Secretary of War; and said board shall be under the direction and control of the Secretary of War and subject to his supervision in all respects.

It is proper to say that this provision was not in the Army bill when it went into the hands of the conference committee. It has been entirely an afterthought upon the part of those who are engaged in pushing the Senate amendments through Congress.

What a demonstration of parliamentary skill!

Now, I submit that the House conferees in their deliberations ought to have observed the rules of the body which they were representing. They should have followed the practice of the Senate conferees, who, as stated by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Appropriation Committee, are always guided more by the wishes of the Senate than by their own individual opinions.

A few words, Mr. Speaker, as to the amounts involved in this report and which will be appropriated if it should be adopted.

This House, a few days since, passed a fortifications bill, and in order that the members may be fully informed as to the difference between that bill and the pending measure, I ask leave to read the following tabular statement:

Items of appropriation.	Fortifications bill as it passed the House and now in the Senate.	Senate amendments to Army bill.	Senate amendments to the Army bill as agreed on in conference.
Protection, etc., of fortifications	$100,000	$1,000	.....
For sea-walls	117,000	3,500	$2,500
For torpedoes	200,000	600,000	100,000
Manufacture and test of cannon, etc	400,000	600,000	500,000
To complete, under fabrication	158,000	.....	.....
Gun foundry at Watervliet	750,000	750,000	700,000
Purchase of gun steel	1,500,000	5,000,000	3,500,000
For mortars	500,000	.....	.....
Total	3,725,000	6,954,500	4,802,500

I earnestly invite the attention of the House to the relative merits of these two measures, and am quite sure that the fortification bill will successfully endure the comparison.

But the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] has delivered a carefully prepared speech, in which he very properly criticised a certain bill now pending in the Senate. That bill is not at all like the one reported from the House Committee on Appropriations and which has passed the House. It is a very different measure, and I am glad that he has brought it to the attention of the House and the country, though foreign to the present discussion.

Now let us see how the pending report presents the matter, and contrast it with the provisions of the fortification bill. It will be remembered that no fortification bill has passed Congress for four years. The fortification bill as passed this session by the House appropriates for necessary repairs of fortifications—for instance, at Fort Niagara and other places—$100,000. The Army appropriation bill makes no provision for that purpose. For sea-walls—such as Governor's Island—the fortification bill, following the estimates sent in by the War Department, makes an appropriation of $117,000, whereas the Army bill as agreed on in the conference report makes provision for an expenditure of only $2,500 for this purpose. The evident object in cutting down or abandoning the appropriations for these particular purposes was to preserve as far as possible this appropriation of $5,000,000 for the purchase of steel, so that we have now in this report a recommendation that Congress appropriate $3,500,000 for the purchase of steel. Sir, one of the best officers in the Ordnance Bureau, a gentleman of high intelligence, of experience, and of industry, has told the Committee on Appropriations that if the Watervliet arsenal should be operated energetically and to its utmost extent it could not possibly consume more than $100,000 worth of steel per annum.

Mr. TRACEY. Only $100,000 worth?

Mr. SAYERS. One hundred thousand dollars' worth of steel per annum. I call the gentleman's attention to page 103 of the notes of hearings before the Committee on Appropriations upon the fortification bill. When Capt. C. S. Smith, of the Ordnance Bureau, was before the committee, I put to him this question:

In the present circumstances, how large an amount in value of steel forgings could be used within the next two years, the work at the arsenal being constant and effective?

Answer. About $200,000 worth in value of steel forgings.

Mr. TRACEY. The gentleman from Texas will allow me to say that when Captain Smith made that statement he alluded to the present condition of the Watervliet arsenal.

Mr. SAYERS. That is so. But, Mr. Speaker, it will take at least three if not five years within which to expend the $700,000 upon Watervliet arsenal so as to equip it to manufacture 10-inch and 12-inch guns. Congress convenes every year, and when this arsenal shall get into a condition to consume a greater quantity of steel, other appropriations for the purchase of steel can and will be made.

Mr. TRACEY. How long will it take to prepare the steel forgings? Will it not take just about the same time?

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir; it will not take that time. It may take that time to prepare three and one-half million dollars' worth; but we do not want so much.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the appropriation of $3,500,000 for the purchase of steel may be a very small matter as compared with the annual revenues which flow into the Treasury; but, sir, I submit that if this House undertakes to adopt this report covering such an appropriation it will be knowingly guilty of an extravagance which is entirely unwarranted by the circumstances which surround us. The purchase of three and a half million dollars of steel, when our appliances, present and for years to come, will not permit us to consume effectively more than $100,000 worth per annum, will be a reckless and an unnecessary expenditure. I do not wish to offend the feelings of any gentleman or to violate parliamentary courtesy, but I do say that it will amount to little less than a robbery to appropriate three and a half million dollars for the benefit of a few steel manufacturing establishments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, a word in reply to the gentleman from Texas. At this time there is but one establishment in the country which can furnish these steel forgings——

Mr. SAYERS. Allow me to say to the gentleman that when the Secretary of the Navy published his advertisement inviting proposals or bids in this matter, there were three competing establishments——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, I know that.

Mr. SAYERS. There were three competing establishments for the furnishing of steel to the amount of $1,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend, however, will not deny this statement—that there is but one establishment in this country that is equipped for making these heavy steel forgings; that is the establishment at South Bethlehem, which has already the contract for making steel forgings for the Navy Department. If, then, the amount should be reduced to one and a half million dollars, the sum which the fortification bill proposes, it would be practically, as I said the other day, a vote in favor of putting that sum of money into the possession of the only establishment in the country which can produce those forgings. If the amount be reduced to the sum which the gentleman from Texas has insisted upon, it would be practically a vote in favor of creating a monopoly in this country for the manufacture of steel forgings, and the Government would be compelled to yield to the demands of that monopoly. By offering to purchase a larger amount, which will be needed later on, we shall create competition.

It requires a cost of half a million to a million of dollars to create a plant which will enable these steel manufacturers to make these heavy steel forgings. If your call is only for a million and a half or a million you will keep off the capitalists from establishing new plants to come into competition with the one now in existence, whereas if a larger amount of steel were to be purchased instead of to the value of a half million or a million of dollars (and it takes half a million or a million of dollars to establish such a plant), then there would be an inducement on the part of the capitalists of the country to establish such plants and provide competition with the existing establishment.

Now the object of the War Department and the object of the Senate was that the Government might offer for such an amount of steel to be supplied as would stimulate other establishments in the country to build plants and thereby cause competition between these various establishments, and thus enable the Government to purchase this steel at a much lower sum than it will be able to do it if we assign it to the amount which the gentleman from Texas demands.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Permit me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman will not go on and make a speech I will yield to him for a question; I wish to close the debate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand this is to go over and be voted on to-morrow.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If one of the competing establishments, by reason of superior advantages, can crowd the others out on the margin they can make on $1,500,000, they could do the same thing more certainly if the sum is increased and the time extended.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not agree with my friend from Ohio. If the amount be three and a half millions of dollars the establishment would take into consideration the cost of building up a plant. If there is such inducement, the South Bethlehem Works will not be able to prevent competition. If these manufacturers are going to have a large demand for these heavy steel forgings, sufficient to enable them to build up new plants, I do not believe that the South Bethlehem Iron Works will be able to crowd them out.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I only want to add a word in addition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The object of the War Department, of the Senate, of the committee is to avoid putting the Government entirely into the power of the present plant and to create a monopoly in the country in reference to the supply of these steel forgings. What we wish to accomplish is to encourage the building up of other steel factories. We will thereby prevent jobbery. Talk about jobbery! The jobbery is in offering them so small an amount that no other establishments will compete with the existing establishment. There is where the jobbery is. There is the jobbery to-day in the manufacture of steel forgings. What we wish to do is to strike down that monopoly and to bring about a competition which will enable the Government to get its supply at a much lower price.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to submit another question or proposition. The bids for a million dollars' worth of steel brought into the field three competitors. Now it is clear if you solicit bids for $1,500,000 worth, other competitors will enter the field, in view of the fact that additional quantities of steel will be required in the near future. But if at this time you solicit bids for three and one-half millions, and that supply will last ten or twelve years, what will there be to invite or create competition? Will not the establishment the gentleman refers to crowd out all competitors?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman is going over the same road which has already been traveled in this debate.

It is true at that time the Government only offered to purchase $1,000,000 worth of steel forgings for guns, but it was made known that $3,000,000 worth more would be bought for steel armor for ships. And that is the inducement which led two or three establishments to compete for it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time limited for this debate has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent to call attention to another fact. I wish it to go to the country. I ask only five minutes——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think it is best to let it go over, as the subject itself has been postponed until to-morrow, when we can have this matter debated on both sides.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I will ask for unanimous consent to extend the remarks which I have already submitted when they come to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection to that.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would like to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY in the chair). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand this report will come up to-morrow as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a conference report, and being privileged can be called up at any time.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I submit the report of the conference committee on the bill H. R. 10556, being the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10556) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 46, 47, 48, 55, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 14, 15, 18, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 49, 51, 57, 59, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72, 73, and 74, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "same" in line 9, page 4, of the bill the following: "and to enable the Naval War College to be conducted at said island up to January 1, 1889;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add to the end of said amendment the following: "after said date;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$625,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,367,156.47;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$67,325.53;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$825,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 20, page 26 of the bill, strike out "fifty-one" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-one;" and in lines 21 and 22, same page, strike out "one-hundred and ninety-eight" and insert in lieu thereof "two hundred and eighteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,494.20;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "674,080.20;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$917,213.77;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 63 and 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted and stricken out by said amendments insert the following:

"One armored cruiser of about 7,500 tons displacement, to cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $3,500,000; and three gunboats, or cruisers, neither of which shall exceed 2,000 tons in displacement nor $700,000 in cost, excluding any premium that may be paid for increased speed and the cost of armament; said three gunboats, or cruisers, to be built either wholly of steel or with steel frames."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment numbered 69, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Substitute for said House amendments to said Senate amendment the following:

Page 33, line 26 of the bill, strike out the word "on" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Page 33, line 26 of the bill, after word "Congress," insert the following: "with their engines, boilers, and machinery."

Page 34, line 1 of the bill, strike out the word "on" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Page 34, line 3 of the bill, strike out the word "on" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "Vessel or vessels;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the Senate amendment numbered 75, and agree to the same.

H. A. HERBERT,
WM. McADOO,
JOHN R. THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
C. B. FARWELL,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses beg leave to submit the following statement as to the effect of the recommendations of the conference report:

Of the amendments from which the Senate recedes the following do not involve any increase or decrease of appropriations, but the changes made are in phraseology, 6, 8, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 48. Some of the above relate to totals affected by other amendments.

No. 5: Senate receded from No. 5, which increased by $700 the amount of appropriation for clerk at Coasters' Harbor Island.

No. 7: Amendment appropriating for torpedoes, $100,000. Senate receded.

No. 46: Amendment increasing appropriation for steam machinery, Bureau of Steam Engineering, $30,000. Senate receded.

No. 47: Amendment increasing appropriation for purchase and handling materials, Bureau Steam Engineering, by $50,000. Senate receded.

No. 55: Amendment increasing pay of chief clerk in office quartermaster of marines. Senate receded.

No. 56: Increase of pay of clerk in office of quartermaster at Philadelphia. Senate receded.

Of the amendments from which the conferees recommend that the House recede, the following do not involve any appropriations, to wit, 15, 35, 38, 40, 41, 51, 57, 59, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 73, and 74.

House recedes from its disagreements to—

No. 14: Amendment appropriates $ 0,000 to erect building in Brooklyn navy-yard destroyed by fire since annual estimates were submitted.

No. 18: Appropriates $30,000 for purchase of adjustable stern-dock.

No. 34: Increase of $5,000 for Hospital Park, Portsmouth, Va.

No. 37: Gives a clerk to Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, Washington navy-yard, $1,200.

No. 49: Gives draughtsman, Portsmouth, N. H., $1,100.

No. 72: Reduces appropriation for increase of Navy by $500,000.

With amendments:

Nos. 3 and 4: House recedes with verbal amendments.

No. 11: Amendment appropriating $50,000 additional for equipment of vessels reduced to $25,000 additional.

No. 16: An amendment in phraseology agreed upon, and the amount of the appropriation remains at $15,000, the Senate also agreeing to the insertion of the Atlantic coast.

Senate amendments:

No. 45: Increases amount for repairs of vessels by $85,000. Senate and House agree on $50,000 instead of $85,000.

No. 53: House agrees to additional $20,000 for boat-house at Naval Academy.

Nos. 58, 60, 62: Change of phraseology.

Nos. 63, 64: The Senate recedes from its objections to the armored cruiser in the House bill, and the House agrees to the three gunboats or cruisers recommended by the Senate.

No. 69: Is an amendment in phraseology.

H. A. HERBERT,
JOHN R. THOMAS.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman from Alabama commences I hope he will cure what appears to be a defect in this report by stating the exact condition of this bill as it passed the House and as it passed the Senate, and also the amount recommended by the conference committee.

Mr. HERBERT. I had intended to do that, having the figures before me.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to be omitted from the report.

Mr. HERBERT. The estimates of the Department on which the bill was based amounted to $23,003,624.12. The bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation of $20,008,074.25; as it came from the Senate, $20,188,092.03; and as reported by the conference committee to the respective Houses it carries an appropriation of $19,943,225.45, or a reduction of $240,866.58 from the amount of the Senate bill.

Now, sir, I am ready to answer any question gentlemen may desire to ask me.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will at least explain—as I gather but a faint idea of the bill from the report which has been read—what, taking the House bill as it now stands according to the report of the conference, will be the extent of the proposed increase of the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. The extent of the increase authorized is four cruisers and three gunboats, being seven in all. As the bill passed the House it provided for three unarmored cruisers and one armored cruiser, being four in all. In the Senate the armored cruiser was stricken out, and three gunboats or cruisers of 2,000 tons each added in lieu of the armored cruiser. The House conferees were very anxious to authorize the armored cruiser, but the Senate conferees insisted upon the gunboats. There was quite a long conference and two long sessions on this very question, and it was finally determined that the House should yield to the Senate and the Senate to the House, and that is the recommendation of the conference committee.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, of course I do not wish to delay the adoption of the report, and do not suppose that I could if I would; but I should be very glad to have the gentleman from Alabama state just what took place between the two Houses in reference to the question of the armored cruiser. I want to say that according to my information, which I do not pretend by any means to be general upon the subject, an armored cruiser is an anomaly in modern naval operations. I do not object to experiments, and this may be a valuable experiment; but it seems to me that the best experience of modern times has demonstrated the fact that an armored vessel is a vessel of defense and a cruiser a vessel of offense, while the armored cruiser is neither the one nor the other, and has no place in modern naval warfare at all. I do not see, unless an armored cruiser can perform some functions not ordinarily performed by war ships, why it was that the House was willing to spend $2,000,000 for that one vessel, when according to my impression the same amount of money might have provided two or three cruisers which would have served the purposes of cruisers and been equally efficient for the defense of the seaboard.

Mr. HERBERT. The remarks of the gentleman from Illinois are calculated to bring out very pointedly the questions of difference between the House and the Senate conferees on this question. The House insisted on the armored cruiser for the simple reason that experience shows, and all advanced nations have demonstrated it by their own naval construction, that an armored cruiser of that tonnage can be made to give a speed of 19 knots an hour, and it is expected that this armored cruiser will go 19 knots. It is such a vessel as might go and would go abroad in time of war as a commerce destroyer, and among unarmored cruisers it would be the monarch of the seas. With 12 inches of armor it would be superior to any unarmored cruiser afloat.

Mr. ADAMS. What is the armor proposed?

Mr. HERBERT. About 12 inches.

Mr. ADAMS. At the water line?

Mr. HERBERT. Well, yes; at the water line and for several feet above, and sloping down gradually to say 7 feet below the water line.

Mr. ADAMS. Can the gentleman state exactly the caliber of a gun which would pierce that armor at the first fire?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course any modern gun can do it.

Mr. ADAMS. I am informed that any modern gun can penetrate the armor of that thickness.

Mr. HERBERT. That is a mistake, sir. No 10-inch gun or 8 or 6 inch gun can do it unless at very close range and very squarely struck; but then it is largely matter of opinion.

Mr. ADAMS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that an 8 or 10 inch gun can not penetrate it?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; it can not; not 12-inch armor—that is to say, that though a 10-inch gun will pierce 12 inches of steel in a target yet the opinion of experts seems to be that under the varying conditions of a combat at sea 12 inches would be a protection against a 10-inch gun. It would be very rarely the case that the impact of a shot against the side of a vessel at sea would be as direct as against a target.

As to the small gun-boats or cruisers of 2,000 tons. They would have the advantage of giving employment to and training for more officers, but it is impossible to make a small vessel as small as 2,000 tons go as much as 19 knots an hour without sacrificing the capacity for coal, crew, and armament. There are vessels——

Mr. ADAMS. Then that would admit my whole question. I supposed that if you put armor on these vessels you must sacrifice something. You must either have speed or defensive power. Now, did I not understand the gentleman that an armored cruiser with 12 inches of armor and this displacement and tonnage could not only go 19 knots an hour, but that it has not sacrificed anything in carrying capacity?

Mr. HERBERT. Of course the more armor you put on the more coal-carrying capacity you sacrifice. But a vessel of 7,500 tons can carry her armor and coal enough besides to give her great endurance, besides carrying her 19 knots an hour. This is not a new experiment. Spain is now building six of between six and seven thousand tons which are to make 19 knots an hour.

Mr. ADAMS. With 12-inch armor?

Mr. HERBERT. That is probably as much as would be carried by such cruisers.

Mr. ADAMS. Would that be sufficient to resist penetration by 12-inch guns?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not know. I could not say that. But they are effectively armored, and are to go 19 knots an hour.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Are they turreted?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not know whether they are or not. Many armored cruisers are turreted.

Mr. ADAMS. An armored cruiser is not a turreted vessel.

Mr. HERBERT. It is—sometimes.

Mr. ADAMS. I supposed that it was not the custom to put turrets except upon armored ships. But one more question, and I will not interrupt the gentleman further. The cost of this vessel which will make 19 knots will make how many unarmored vessels?

Mr. HERBERT. It would pay for three vessels of 3,000 tons each, unarmored vessels.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if it would not interrupt him too much at this time. Has the gentleman examined far enough as to the penetrative qualities of modern ordnance to determine whether or not in the case of vessels the limit of flotation will not be reached before the limit of penetration?

Mr. HERBERT. I think it is agreed generally among naval experts that guns can be put on vessels that will penetrate any armor.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That can be floated.

Mr. HERBERT. That will float. But the power of guns to penetrate armor upon ships, which are perpetually shifting as they float and can not often be struck squarely, will probably when fairly tried be found very different from their power to penetrate targets. However this may be, I can safely say that the general result of the experience of experts throughout the world, so far as it has gone, is in favor of armored vessels.

Mr. ADAMS. Armored cruisers?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir; and quite a number of them are now being built.

Mr. ADAMS. I am surprised to hear that.

Mr. HERBERT. England is building a number now, or rather has just built several.

Mr. ADAMS. Armored below the water-line?

Mr. HERBERT. All that are armored are armored for some distance above and below the water-line. I have examined this question with a great deal of care, but I am not an expert and can only speak of the general results. My information is derived from the opinions of experts. There are a great many armored cruisers in the world, and their speed and sea-going qualities have been tested. We have only two armored vessels provided for before this, not counting the monitors.

The gentleman will remember that when this Administration came in we had five monitors, the Miantonomoh, Monadnock, Terror, Amphitrite, and Puritan. One of these, the Miantonomoh, was armored, except as to her turret; the other four are to be armored. They are antiquated in type and not by any means first-class, but the Administration believed that it would be better to armor them than to throw them away.

Mr. ADAMS. For harbor defense.

Mr. HERBERT. For harbor defense. They think that they would make very effective coast-defense vessels.

Now we have already authorized before this bill two armored cruisers—the Texas and the Maine. If this passes, we shall have only three.

Mr. ADAMS. Is this a mate for the other two, or of about the same capacity?

Mr. HERBERT. It is about 1,000 tons larger.

Mr. ADAMS. How nearly complete are those vessels?

Mr. HERBERT. They are not near completion. There has not been any very great progress made upon them. The armor is to be obtained under a contract with the Bethlehem Iron Works. It will require, perhaps, four years to complete those vessels. It will require possibly five years to complete this one. It will be built gradually. To sum up, then, in answer to the gentleman's question, I will state that the House conferees preferred that one cruiser to these three unarmored 2,000-ton vessels proposed by the Senate, because these little vessels will not be as fast and will not be as effective in battle; but 18 knots an hour can be obtained from these 2,000-ton vessels and that will make them fast vessels.

I have had a calculation made which shows that in the French navy and in the English navy only 9 per cent. of all their vessels will make 18 knots an hour; so that these cruisers, which the House conferees were really averse to taking, but which they finally concluded to recommend, if they make 18 knots an hour, will be fast enough to escape from 91 per cent. of all the vessels of France or of England, and therefore they will be valuable. For myself I would prefer not to build any cruiser that could not make 19 or 20 knots an hour. I believe that, commencing now as we do our modern navy, we ought to have the very best navy afloat. I think we ought to have less dead material in it than there is in any other navy, and, in point of fact, we shall have less. This Administration is making every effort to have our vessels just as fast as possible and fully up to the requirements of the age. I believe that one of the reasons why we were so successful in the war of 1812 was that when the Constitution and her sister ships were being laid down under the law of 1794, the very best shipwright in the whole country, Mr. Rumsey, of Philadelphia, was employed, and they were made a little better and a little faster than other vessels of their class.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The old Constitution never yet has been excelled in speed by a sailing vessel.

Mr. HERBERT. No. The old Constitution once made 13½ knots an hour under sail. Now, as I have said, this Administration is trying to build very fast vessels, and I would prefer not to take these small vessels; but they can be made to make 18 knots an hour, and that, too, without the sacrifice of any sea-going qualities.

There are vessels of 1,800 tons, such as the Forbin, of the French navy, that make 19 knots an hour; but they have very little armament and very little endurance, that is they can not carry a large supply of coal.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My inquiry was as to how many of those smaller vessels are carried by the bill as agreed upon in conference?

Mr. HERBERT. Only three.

Mr. CANNON. A single word, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate even to say a word on this subject, because I will state very frankly that what I do not know about the construction of cruisers would make not only a book, but a whole library. But I have some recollection that for many years I have sat as a member of this House year after year, and have seen appropriations for the Navy opposed and attacked. As to these five monitors which the gentleman [Mr. HERBERT] speaks of, and which are now being finished, I recollect that for several years it was claimed here that they were totally worthless, fit for nothing except to be broken up. I recollect that at one time the country from ocean to ocean was electrified with the statement that if one of these monitors, the Puritan, I believe, should even be launched she would sink. Still, whether they are worth anything or not, they are being finished.

So far as I have knowledge, and I have given some little attention to the subject, I believe that after we get our fast cruisers—and in my opinion it is not important that they should be heavily armored—after we get our fast cruisers, and our harbor defenses complete, through the best obtainable torpedo system with some good guns and gunboats, we shall probably have gone as far as we can go with profit now; and I very much doubt the wisdom of expending over $3,000,000 in the building of one armored cruiser. I think the money would be better expended in smaller ships less expensively built, but, as I believe, substantially as useful.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And fitted to cruise wherever American enterprise goes?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; fitted to cruise anywhere.

I suppose that this conference report will be adopted. I wanted to say this much; and having given expression to my doubts, my fears, and beliefs as to this cruiser, I wish to express my surprise at another matter. A few minutes ago I noticed sitting on the other side of the House the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], whose voice in former years, in one Congress after another, rang out like a bugle in this House, and was heard throughout the length and breadth of the country, announcing the doctrine year after year that this nation was great enough, and strong enough, and grand enough without ships and without defenses to protect herself against the other nations of the earth; and I have rarely heard as great applause as met that remark on the other side of the House. The trouble is not that we are getting a navy too fast—such a navy as we need—but that we are liable, as I believe, in this case to expend upon costly, I was about to say extravagant, experiments large amounts of money which I fear will be wasted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me to correct his impression in regard to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who I see is not now present? The objection of the gentleman from Indiana in regard to large appropriations does not apply to anything for the Navy, but has application to the Army only. It is only with reference to the Army that he apprehends the danger of extravagant and unnecessary appropriations—not with regard to the Navy.

Mr. CANNON. I know not what may be the present state of mind of the gentleman from Indiana; but I was speaking of his opinions and expressions within less than six years, as declared in this House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Did not those remarks refer to appropriations for the Army? I presume the gentleman from Indiana did not make any such remarks about the Navy.

Mr. CANNON. The remarks to which I refer had reference to naval appropriations.

Now, I believe I have said about all that I wanted to say. In conclusion, let me remark that I do not wish to criticise any proper expenditure; but I do think, at least touching this cruiser, that the appropriation might well and profitably have been omitted from this bill; and I shall be agreeably surprised if, in the future, when this cruiser is constructed, my fears shall prove to have been unfounded.

It is well enough at this time to recollect that homely old story of the Dutchman's calf. He said it was the strangest calf he ever saw. "By Chove," he said, "I had to pull dot calf's ears off to get it to suck, and den I had to pull its tail off to get it away."

Very slowly did our Democratic friends come to this question of a navy. To get them there we had almost to pull the hair and the ears from their head; but by and by they got there; and now I am not sure but that the tail-hold ought to continue a little longer so far as concerns this cruiser of doubtful expediency.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, in order to relieve the gentleman's doubts as to the propriety of building this cruiser, I will call his attention to what other nations are doing and will answer a little more specifically the question put to me by the other gentleman from Illinois. I have here (and it was appended to the report accompanying this bill) a résumé of the armed vessels built and building by other nations, together with the speed that they make. I find that England has built or is building—I shall only allude to those vessels which are fast, effective cruisers, which would be good commerce destroyers—England has seven, France two, Italy five, Russia four, making eighteen of these vessels which make 18 knots or more an hour; and Spain is building six, as I have said, which make 19 knots an hour.

And now, sir, as I have answered the gentleman's question, I hope I may be indulged in a brief retrospect, as this bill closes up the appropriations for our Navy for the first hundred years of our national existence.

In the early history of our country there was some difference of opinion among statesmen as to the extent to which we ought to maintain a navy, but events so shaped themselves as in a few years to formulate a policy on which all men agreed.

After our "quasi war" with France and our four years' war with Tripoli came the war of 1812, followed by another short war with the Barbary powers in 1815. From the close of that last war forward no party in America has ever dared to question before the bar of public opinion the duty of the Government to keep and maintain an efficient navy to aid our diplomacy in time of peace and defend our rights in war. During all these wars, except that with France, the Democratic, or, as it was then called, the Republican party, had been in power. In 1816, when peace was assured, secure in popular favor, its statesmen had ample opportunity for deliberation.

They all agreed upon the necessity of an efficient navy, and when 1820 had come their plan of gradual increase had matured into a scheme for creating and maintaining a force of 12 line-of-battle ships, 14 first-class frigates, 3 second-class frigates, and 6 sloops, in all, 35 ships of war, besides a proper number of smaller vessels. If any individual Democrat since that day has ever, for a moment, claimed that we ought not to maintain a navy it was simply because he was driven temporarily, by shockingly extravagant expenditures, into a state of such exasperation that he forgot, for the moment, the teachings of the fathers. James K. Polk, who was a typical Democrat, expressed the matured Democratic theory when, in his message of December 2, 1846, he said:

> It has never been our policy to maintain large standing armies in time of peace. They are contrary to the genius of our free institutions, would impose heavy burdens on the people, and be dangerous to public liberty. Our reliance for protection and defense on the land must be mainly on our citizen-soldiers, who will be ever ready, as they have ever been ready in times past, to rush with alacrity at the call of their country to her defense. This description of force, however, can not defend our coasts, harbors, and inland seas, nor protect our commerce on the ocean or the lakes. These must be protected by our navy. Considering an increased naval force, and especially of steam vessels, corresponding with our growth and importance as a nation, and proportioned to the increased and increasing naval power of other nations, of vast importance as regards our safety and the great and growing interests to be protected by it, I recommend the subject to the favorable consideration of Congress.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY BUILT OUR SHIPS.

There have been many acts authorizing the construction of vessels, but it so happens that all the most important laws authorizing new ships after this century began and prior to our civil war were passed under Democratic administrations. I do not undertake to cite all the laws. I mention only those that stand out prominently in the history of the Navy. Madison approved the act of April 29, 1816, appropriating for construction $1,000,000 annually for eight years, under which were built eight 74-gun ships and eight 44's. Monroe approved the act of March 3, 1821, appropriating thereafter for construction for six years $500,000 per annum, under which were built six 44's. Van Buren approved the act of March 3, 1841, which inaugurated our steam navy.

It appropriated $2,000,000 for "increase and repairs," and under this, aided, however, afterwards by $2,000,000 granted by an act signed by Tyler August 4, 1842, were built seven 22-gun sloops, five 10-gun brigs, and the Princeton, Michigan, and Massachusetts.

Polk signed the act of March 3, 1847, for the construction of the four first-class steam-ships, Susquehanna, Powhatan, Saranac, and San Jacinto. Pierce signed the act of March 3, 1857, for the Brooklyn, Lancaster, Hartford, Pensacola, and Richmond, as he had before approved the act of April 6, 1854, under which the celebrated six screw frigates were constructed. They were the Merrimac, Minnesota, Wabash, Roanoke, Colorado, and Niagara. These ships were, in their day, in hull, and rig, and machinery, and armament, the finest vessels that ever floated on the seas, and when the first one of them anchored in an English port, it not only excited the admiration of all who came to see, but naval constructors everywhere went to work to emulate and imitate, even as in later days those still greater creations of American naval genius, the iron-clad Merrimac and the indomitable little Monitor, by their great combat in Hampton Roads, made Europe to resound with the blows of the hammer and revolutionized ship-building all over the world.

AND THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY USED OUR NAVY.

And, Mr. Speaker, if in that long period that preceded our civil war it was the Democratic party that built our ships, it was still more emphatically the Democratic party that used them to hold high our flag among the nations of the earth and to maintain and to defend the rights of our citizens.

It was one of the fathers of the Democracy, James Madison, that declared war against Great Britain; it was James K. Polk that declared war against Mexico; and when in 1853 that gallant naval officer, Lieutenant-Commander Ingraham, in the presence of an Austrian marine force twice his own, cleared for action the decks of the St. Louis and saved the political refugee, Martin Koszta, from an Austrian prison, because this Austrian had taken his first steps to become an American citizen, it was a Democratic Secretary of State, William L. Marcy, and a Democratic President, Franklin Pierce, who adopted and defended the act, and succeeded by their ability and courage in ingrafting firmly upon the stock of international law the doctrine that he who has legally declared his intention to become an American citizen is entitled to and will receive the protection of the American flag.

THE NAVY IN OUR CIVIL WAR—EXHIBITION OF AMERICAN GENIUS AND COURAGE.

The Navy played a great part during our civil war. To the Union its services in blockading and depriving the Confederacy of the necessaries of life and of munitions of war were simply invaluable; and if those four years of bloody war illustrated beyond cavil any one thing, it was the genius of Federals and Confederates, Americans all, in the building of war ships and their courage and skill in fighting them.

It was the inventive genius and energy of the Confederates that raised the sunken Merrimac, armored her, sent her forth to destroy the Cumberland and the Congress, and for a time spread consternation throughout the land. A ship of war more formidable than the world had ever seen had been invented.

But American genius was on the Union side, too. It was an American that invented the Monitor; it was American enterprise that built her in ninety days; and it was an American naval officer and crew that had the courage to go down in her unto the sea that continually rolled over her decks, as she made her way to meet and confront and halt the proud Merrimac in her career of destruction.

It was the Confederates who built the Albemarle, and with her fought to a drawn battle almost all day long a whole flotilla of vessels; and it was an American naval officer, Cushing, who by an exhibition of genius and daring which, though it may somewhere in history have a parallel, certainly is not surpassed in human annals—it was this typical American sailor who with a crew of thirteen men passed at night the Confederate pickets and batteries and unobserved till he had neared the Confederate ironclad, then ran his little boat, amid a storm of shot and shell, over the defensive outwork of logs that floated around the Albemarle, lowered his torpedo, blew up the vessel, and escaped, after unheard-of adventures, to tell alone his tale of triumph twenty-four hours afterwards to the wondering officers of the Federal fleet.

It was the Confederates who, with an ingenuity and skill the world had never before seen equaled, developed the torpedo, and it was the Federal naval vessels that rode over them to victory in Mobile Bay. That four years of fratricidal strife demonstrated that our country united can make of her Navy just what she will.

LESSONS OF THE PAST.

The civil war closed in the spring of 1865. Since then we have been at peace with all the world. But gentlemen must not therefore conclude the time has come, or that it ever will come this side of the millennium, when we can count on perpetual peace. We can only judge the future by the past.

During the century of our national existence that is to close on the 4th of next March our Navy has been engaged in war with France we may count three years, with Tripoli four years, with Great Britain three years, with the Barbary powers again, and for the last time, seventy days, with Mexico two years, and in our civil war four years—in all sixteen years and more, or about one year in every six. Certainly this Government needed its Navy during every one of those years.

There is no fear now of domestic trouble and the danger of a foreign war is, I hope, afar off; but, sir, we can remove it still farther from us. We have only to prepare ourselves to command the peace.

What nation is there on this earth that will dare to refuse us our rights if only we are ready to maintain them? The moral power of a great nation like this is at all times great, but it will be greater still when we have arms in our hands or within our reach. Sir, I venture to say that this country has not had, in recent years, a diplomatist negotiating with a foreign nation—I care not whether it was Lowell or Phelps, demanding of England the rights of our fishermen, or Morton or McLane or Pendleton, protesting that no American be held to military service by a foreign power—who did not feel that he would stand on firmer ground and that he could insist on the extreme measure of our right with more of that assurance of success that ought to inspire the representative of a great nation, if there had only been a present navy behind him.

France in 1797 drove us to hostilities because she thought she could with impunity harass us into a declaration of war with Great Britain. Great Britain compelled us to declare war against her in 1812 because she had a contempt for our little Navy and believed she could easily sweep it from the seas. In these latter days we have grown great and powerful on land, but on the seas we are still weak, very weak. Counting out our few modern vessels, we are far weaker than we were thirty years ago, while other nations, formerly almost unknown upon the seas, have built up great modern navies.

In the days of wooden sailing vessels it was possible in some sense to improvise a navy to meet an emergency. Both the English and Americans in the war of 1812 built and put to sea good fighting ships from timber that thirty days before had been standing in the forests by the lakes. But this is the day of steel, and not wooden vessels; of steam, and not of sail power. It will scarcely ever be possible to build a modern vessel in less than the ninety days which Ericsson took for the Monitor, and the slowest steaming vessel in any European navy can cross the Atlantic in twenty days.

Wars in future will be short, sharp, and decisive, whether on sea or on land. Prussia humbled the power of Austria in one great battle at Sadowa, seventeen days after a declaration of war; the Germans in the Franco-Prussian war were in Paris within ninety days from the commencement of hostilities, and the French fleet destroyed the Chinese navy in the Minn River within fifteen minutes. The nation that would defend itself in future must hold itself prepared.

With the close of our civil war closed the era of wooden navies. We had demonstrated to the world that the future ship of war was to be built of iron or steel, and other nations had learned the lessons taught by our experience.

I need not cite you what these other nations have done. The power of modern navies is the wonder of the world. What have we done? How much money have we spent since the new era of iron-ship building began on our Navy and what have we to show for it? I will not speak now of the expenditures during the spring of 1865 and the year and more that followed till July 1, 1866. The fleets of the Union had wonderfully expanded during the war. There were, when hostilities ceased, over 50,000 officers and sailors in the naval service. But the time from April, 1865, to July, 1866, was or ought to have been enough to bring the Navy down to a peace footing.

By the act of July 25, 1866, the number of officers and men and boys in the Navy was limited to 10,260. This limit was never changed till August 2, 1882. Even then it was not very greatly lowered. It was made 9,549, where it has since remained. I cite these laws to show that the vast difference between the expenditures of the two decades I am about to compare did not result, except to a very limited extent, from any difference in the amounts paid out to officers and sailors. To make this still more certain I present here a table showing the amounts paid to the personnel of the Navy each year during both decades. The average difference each year was $864,202 more for the first than for the second of these two decades.

Amounts paid to personnel of the Navy.

FIRST DECADE.

July 1, 1866, to July 1, 1867	$9,023,391.32
July 1, 1867, to July 1, 1868	8,962,635.74
July 1, 1868, to July 1, 1869	8,525,952.84
July 1, 1869, to July 1, 1870	7,854,330.53
July 1, 1870, to July 1, 1871	7,093,732.07
July 1, 1871, to July 1, 1872	7,213,133.75
July 1, 1872, to July 1, 1873	7,093,929.00
July 1, 1873, to July 1, 1874	7,549,855.94
July 1, 1874, to July 1, 1875	7,248,996.83
July 1, 1875, to July 1, 1876	7,077,943.00
Total	77,643,901.02

SECOND DECADE.

July 1, 1876, to July 1, 1877	$7,021,758.45
July 1, 1877, to July 1, 1878	7,215,082.36
July 1, 1878, to July 1, 1879	6,868,275.00
July 1, 1879, to July 1, 1880	6,351,892.21
July 1, 1880, to July 1, 1881	6,903,581.35
July 1, 1881, to July 1, 1882	6,771,135.24
July 1, 1882, to July 1, 1883	6,902,777.87
July 1, 1883, to July 1, 1884	6,765,523.67
July 1, 1884, to July 1, 1885	7,249,589.41
July 1, 1885, to July 1, 1886	6,952,264.28
Total	69,001,879.84
Difference in two decades	8,642,021.18
Average annual difference	864,202.11

Now, bearing in mind this sum, which is to be deducted when we come to consider the net results of our comparison, let us look at the

DECADE FROM JULY 1, 1866, TO JULY 1, 1876.

This was an era during which there was, so far as expenditures were concerned, but one party in the Union, or rather only one party that had power to make itself felt in the councils of the Government. A Democratic House was elected in the fall of 1874, but it did not convene till December, 1875, and the first fiscal year for which it appropriated money began July 1, 1876, and ended June 30, 1877.

Now, the yearly expenditures upon the Navy during this decade—from July 1, 1866, to July 1, 1876—when Republicans had full control, of all expenditures averaged, as shown by the table I have here, in round numbers, $23,419,000.

Here it is:

Statement of expenditures for the United States Navy from the fiscal year 1867 to the year 1876, inclusive.

July 1, 1866, to June 30, 1867	$31,034,011.04
July 1, 1867, to June 30, 1868	25,775,502.72
July 1, 1868, to June 30, 1869	20,000,757.97
July 1, 1869, to June 30, 1870	21,780,229.87
July 1, 1870, to June 30, 1871	19,431,027.21
July 1, 1871, to June 30, 1872	21,249,809.99
July 1, 1872, to June 30, 1873	23,526,256.79
July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1874	30,932,587.42
July 1, 1874, to June 30, 1875	21,497,626.27
July 1, 1875, to June 30, 1876	18,963,309.82
Total	234,191,119.10

Yearly average, $23,419,111.91.

Admiral Porter, in his "Naval History of the Civil War," says on page 828:

When the war ended the United States had attained a position, as a naval power, never before reached by the Republic, and could claim to be able to meet either France or England upon the ocean.

In May, 1876, the same distinguished officer was examined before the Whitthorne committee, and he says (see page 7 of Report No. 704, first session, Forty-fourth Congress):

Our Navy, taken as a whole, is worth nothing, and the sooner the country understands that fact the better.

Commodore Nicholson, Commander Meade, and other officers testify to the same effect. Now, how was it possible that, notwithstanding an expenditure in the mean time upon it of $234,000,000, our Navy could have been brought down in ten years from the proud position which Admiral Porter says it occupied when the war closed to the pitiable plight in which he said it was when he testified before the Whitthorne committee? To emphasize and make still more startling this question, Mr. Speaker, let me call your attention to another decade, the DECADE FROM JULY 1, 1876, TO JULY 1, 1886.

This second decade of our naval history, after the close of our civil war, began with the advent of a Democratic House of Representatives at the session of 1875–'76. The expenditures of the Navy for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1876, the first year for which a Democratic House appropriated, were $4,904,274.46, in round numbers $5,000,000 less than for the previous year. The House has been Democratic in every Congress, save one, since 1875, and the decade of expenditures which began with the advent of Democratic rule here shows a saving of largely over $80,000,000. Here are the figures, and they speak for themselves. The saving in ten years has been enough to build a great navy:

Expenditures of the Navy from the year 1877 to the year 1886, inclusive.

1877	$14,059,035.36
1878	17,365,361.27
1879	15,125,126.84
1880	13,536,984.74
1881	15,686,671.66
1882	15,032,646.26
1883	15,283,437.17
1884	17,292,601.44
1885	16,021,079.67
1886	13,907,887.74
Total	153,310,832.15
Yearly average	15,331,083.21½
Total first decade, 1867 to 1876, inclusive	234,191,119.10
Total second decade, 1877 to 1886, inclusive	153,310,832.15
Difference	80,880,286.95

THE DIFFERENCE AND THE REASONS FOR IT.

If we deduct from this sum of $80,880,286.95 the sum of $8,642,019.18, which is the difference between the amounts paid in the two decades to the personnel of the Navy, we have still left the vast amount of $72,238,267.77 as the difference between the two periods, or an average of $7,223,000 saved every year after the Democrats began to have power in the Government; and I think I shall be able to show, Mr. Speaker, before I get through, that if the administration of this Government continues to be for ten years from the date when Grover Cleveland came in, such as it has been so far we shall build a good navy for a far less sum devoted each year to its increase than a Democratic House is fairly entitled to claim it actually saved to the country during the ten years ending with June, 1886.

I do not propose to go back into the facts developed by the investigations by a Democratic House of Representatives twelve years ago. To substantiate my proposition as to actual saving on the one hand and wasteful extravagance on the other I have cited the record made since that investigation, the contrast between the decades preceding and following that investigation, the figures showing the expenditures in the one and in the other, and I now need only to call attention, as samples of waste and extravagance, to a few of the legacies handed down from that first decade even to this day. These speak a language which can not be misunderstood.

One of the legacies to which this Administration succeeded is a lot of timber. We have on hand now, in our different navy-yards, live-oak timber that cost the people of this country $1,807,502.25. This is the table furnished at my request by the Bureau of Construction and Repair, showing the amounts of timber on hand in different navy-yards:

LIVE-OAK.

New York, 113,961 cubic feet, at $2	$227,922.00
Mare Island, 58,956 cubic feet, at $2	117,912.00
Portsmouth, 169,944 cubic feet, at $2	339,908.00
Boston, 425,045½ cubic feet, at $2	724,145.99
League Island, 6,601½ cubic feet, at $2	4,227.05
Washington, 44,030½ cubic feet, at $2	78,430.62
Norfolk, 233,287 cubic feet, at $2	314,956.59
Total	1,807,502.25

Here is a table that shows when that timber was purchased:

1866–'67	$168.00
1867–'68	29.50
1868–'69	1,534.75
1870–'71	99,942.23
1871–'72	264,982.58
1872–'73	561,494.99
1873–'74	464,624.75

1874–'75	$478,302.04
1875–'76	514,943.84
1876–'77	322,677.64
Total	2,708,700.32

It was practically all bought at a time, from 1870 to 1877, when all the world was passing rapidly away from wooden ships, at a time when no expert, no man of even common intelligence, could for a moment have believed it was a prudent purchase; and to-day it is absolutely worthless. It is impossible to sell it for any purpose. The manner in which money was wasted in the Bureau of Construction and Repair is further illustrated by the Secretary in his report for 1887. I read:

THE TENNESSEE.

Among the vessels dropped from the Navy Register and sold during the past year is the Tennessee.

The account of the sale is stated elsewhere.

The history of this vessel is quite interesting and most illustrative. She had a short life, but, as a consumer of money, a brilliant one. Her hull was built and she was equipped in the New York navy-yard. Her machinery was designed and built under contract by the eminent engineer, Mr. John Ericsson, costing $700,000. Her total original cost was $1,856,075.81. Upon her trial trip, in January, 1867, she ran about 1,000 miles. She attained a speed of 16 knots, and made a run of 15 knots per hour for four hours. She encountered a perilous storm, described as a hurricane, which continued over twenty-four hours. The ship suffered considerably. The report of her commander says:

"The engines moved off finely and worked perfectly during all the storm. * * * Her machinery is as perfect as it needs to be. It has undergone the severest test and not once found wanting. She is the fastest ship I have ever seen."

The chief engineer says:

"If the strength and workmanship of the machinery can not be depended upon then no reliance is to be placed upon the performance of any steam machinery with which I am acquainted."

Two years afterwards she underwent what was called "repairs," and the sum of $576,799.61 was spent upon her; all but $73,000 of this was put on her hull and equipment. It was the full price of a new wooden hull of her size at that time. This was from 1869 to 1871. She then made a cruise of three months and went into the hands of Mr. John Roach to enable him to take out the machinery and boilers of John Ericsson and substitute others of superior character. It was among other things expected to give the ship a 14½-knot speed for twenty-four hours.

When she had her trial of this new machinery in 1875 her maximum speed was 10¾ knots, and she had had put upon her an expense of $801,713.60 in addition to the value of her machinery and boilers taken in trade by Mr. Roach at $65,000. This machinery had cost $700,000; had not been in actual service six months; had never been surveyed and condemned by a board of Government officers, nor its value fixed by any Government board, but it was sold to Mr. Roach as old iron.

That is to say, between 1869 and 1875 the Tennessee had had three months' service and had cost in repairs and improvements $1,443,513.21.

This was largely in excess of a fair price for a new ship of her characteristics.

Twelve years afterwards (on April 4, 1887) she is condemned by the Statutory Board as unseaworthy and not worth repairing, and ordered sold, having had put upon her between 1875 and 1887 the additional sum of $577,716.17. She brought $34,525 at the auction sale. She had cost the Government $3,800,000 in round numbers and had done about ten years of active service, outside of repair shops and navy-yards.

Another specimen; look at a table I have here, and which I shall allude to further hereafter. It gives, among other things, the names of our present wooden vessels, the dates when they were built, and the cost per ton of displacement. The Alliance, a wooden vessel, was built from 1873–1876. She cost $446.20 per ton. The Enterprise, a wooden vessel, was built from 1873–1876. She cost $402.37 per ton. The Yantic, a wooden vessel, was built in 1864. She is the only war-built vessel remaining. She was built when, if ever, extravagance was excusable, built at a time when currency was at a much greater discount than it was from 1873 to 1876; and yet her cost was only $258.61 per ton; not much more than half the cost of the Alliance and the Enterprise.

The waste, the profligacy, was everywhere, in all the bureaus; and out of the débris left over in our navy-yards and store-houses from that first decade, the figures for which I have cited, it has been possible to effect economies even during the present Administration. To illustrate:

The first bill appropriating money for the Navy after this Administration came in was passed during the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

For the ordinary current expenditures of the Navy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, the appropriations in that bill were less by $493,136,42 than for the previous year. The amounts appropriated, however, were sufficient, for the deficiencies under the bill were less, as the results show, than $8,000, and more than that sum was turned back into the Treasury. In addition to the reductions in appropriations for that year the House Committee on Naval Affairs recommended and the Congress turned back into the Treasury moneys theretofore standing to the credit of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, and operating, because not needed, as a continuing temptation to extravagance, the sum of $250,000 from the clothing fund and $75,000 from the small-stores fund.

How these results were accomplished will be partly shown by reading some extracts from what I said on this floor in explanation of the bill when it was before the House in May, 1886. Speaking of the extravagance of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing and alluding to frauds in connection with that bureau, which had been committed many years back, but the effects of which reached down to the present, I said:

As far back as 1843 the present system was established by which the Government furnishes to sailors their clothing, charging them cost price for it, and the fund which was appropriated originally for that purpose is turned over and over again and not paid back to the Government. It is a continuous appropriation. For a long time 10 per cent. was added to the cost in order to cover waste and other expenses. Some ten or twelve years ago it was deemed this was unfair to the sailor, and the 10 per cent. was omitted, and since that time only the cost price has been charged to the sailor. There is on hand now in money belonging to this bureau for clothing $562,000; of clothing goods in store, $437,000; on shipboard, $241,000, making in all $1,242,000 in money and in clothing. We ask ourselves the question, what is the use for all this?

It turns out that the average amount of expenditures for clothing the Navy for a year is $276,000. So that here is a supply on hand of money and clothing for four years and a half. The last appropriation that was made was in 1875. All the time since that date this—all that has not been wasted—has been on hand in that bureau. Now, what has been the consequence? The answer is, waste and extravagance. There has been a loss on sales of condemned clothing in the last ten years of $272,000. And there has been a loss by the reduction in the price of clothing on hand which had to be reduced in order to adjust it to the prices ruling in a falling market, of $438,000. In other words, this Government has lost in this bureau, from these two causes, in ten years, $710,000, and this does not account for the losses on clothing now on shipboard. And the losses do not stop here. We found, on investigation, that we had 6,069 pea-jackets on hand which originally cost about $15 apiece, the present price being $11.50. We have 6,217 monkey-jackets on hand valued now at $9.50 apiece. We called for a list of the different articles on hand and the sales of each during the last fiscal year, and found that the number of pea-jackets taken by the sailors in 1885 amounted to ninety-six. If these pea-jackets could last so long and not rot and the sales should continue at the rate of ninety-six per annum, the Chief of the Bureau of Clothing might go to sleep and sleep as long as Rip Van Winkle, yes, as long as old Epimenides, his prototype, that is, fifty-seven years, and wake up and find, after his nap was finished, that he still had a year's supply of pea-jackets on hand.

But the truth is that these pea-jackets have become so worthless that the sailors refuse to take them. When the Secretary orders, as he will, a sale to clear out the worthless goods on hand the Government will pocket another loss of more than $100,000. We have on hand five and one-half years' supply of monkey-jackets, four and one-half years' supply of blue cloth trousers, three and one-half years' supply of satinet, twelve years' supply of canvas duck, four and one-half years' supply of caps, twenty years' supply of mattress covers, twenty years' supply of boots.

Again I read, further on:

We next come to the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting. The business of this bureau, as its name implies, is to provide sails, anchors, chains, ropes, and everything that goes to equip a ship. When we look into this bureau we find some things which are very astonishing, but they are things for which the present distinguished chief of the bureau is in no sense responsible. For instance, we find that there is on hand now in the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting "canvas enough to fit out the whole British navy; canvas enough to give two suits of sails and a foretopsail to the whole British navy." That is the expression of Commodore Schley. Altogether, according to the calculation which I have made upon his figures, we have enough to serve our present Navy for thirteen years. * * *

Then we find extravagance in other things. For instance there are these spectacle-irons, used in rigging sails. We have on hand of these spectacle-irons or clews 75,099 pounds. It is estimated that these are worth $18,744. Upon the estimate of a thousand to a ton and sixty to two suits of sails we have enough on hand to last us for over fifty years. These were bought a long time ago, in 1871 and 1872.

Mr. Speaker, it is well known that old and condemned property, property that has ceased to be valuable to the Government, brings very little at public sale. Now, Secretary Whitney, in order to get rid of what was utterly valueless to the Government, has had a thorough overhauling of the navy-yards made, an inventory taken, and sales have followed. During the year ending June 30 last these sales realized $313,204.16. Here is the table.

List of condemned property sold by the Navy Department during the year 1887–'88.

Old vessels	$105,665.88
Condemned marine clothing	115.88
Condemned public property	308.37
Condemned miscellaneous articles	453.11
Bureau of Yards and Docks	1,734.39
Bureau of Provisions and Clothing	20,558.94
Bureau of Construction and Repair	57,796.51
Bureau of Steam Engineering	33,492.83
Bureau of Medicine and Surgery	32.33
Bureau of Navigation	1,584.53
Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting	32,365.95
Bureau of Ordnance	59,095.44
Total	313,204.16

Now, sir, I have said enough on this point. There can be but one verdict from the public. First, that must be that the administration of naval affairs from 1866 to 1876 was absolutely indefensible. Secondly, that a Democratic House has, since 1875–'76, saved to the country enough money to build a great navy.

Now let us inquire what was the condition of our Navy at the beginning of the third decade after the close of our civil war, that decade which began, as we are counting, July 1, 1886?

DECADE BEGINNING JULY 1, 1886—CONDITION OF THE NAVY.

It is all shown here in this table, prepared in the spring of 1886, for the House Committee on Naval Affairs, by Lieutenant Rodgers of the Intelligence office. It shows first the condition of the Navy in 1886. Then it compares the Navy of 1886 with the Navy of 1861:

It will be seen that there are thirty-eight steamers classed as serviceable. Of this number eight were already in commission in 1860, and sixteen were in commission in 1865. Not one is of modern type, nor has any one of them modern machinery or armament.

The four first rates requiring extensive repairs are old steam frigates of obsolete type and quite unfit for active service. The fourteen ironclads are of the old type of monitor, ill protected, of exceedingly low speed, armed with guns long since out of date, and fit for harbor service only.

The five armored vessels launched and awaiting appropriation are the double-turreted monitors, for the completion of which appropriation is now desired.

Tugs and sailing vessels can not be counted as forming part of a nation's fleet, so that in examining our naval strength to-day we find that it consists of thirty-eight steamers of obsolete type, two-thirds of which were designed or completed before the close of the civil war.

This statement does not include the steel cruisers now approaching completion.

† The steamer displacement, 78,141 tons, was all effective and of most approved types.

‡ Of the serviceable steamer displacement, 70,685 tons, 16,275 tons belong to vessels which were in service in 1860.

⁂ Fit for harbor defense only.

This table shows that we had, all told, 84 vessels in 1860 and 86 vessels in 1886; but if we count out tenders, store-ships, and receiving-ships we had in 1860 73 vessels, and counting out the unserviceable ships we had in 1886 only 38 vessels. The tonnage of the 73 vessels we had in 1860 was 106,994; the tonnage of the 38 serviceable vessels we had in 1886 was 37,250. If we count all the vessels we had in 1886, including those in rotten row, their tonnage was only 82,000, while the tonnage of all our vessels in 1860 was 115,573.

When we take into consideration the further fact that in 1860 our guns and ships were largely of the most approved types, and that in 1886 we had not afloat a gun or vessel equal to the requirements of a modern navy, we can form some idea of what was the real situation when our new navy was begun. Since this table was made out some of these ships have gone out of service, and we have now only twenty-five of the old vessels left, and these are passing rapidly away. It is now nearly a year since the Chief Constructor said, in his report, that in six years we should have but four of our present wooden vessels left, and that in nine years they would all be gone. The Hartford is already so much decayed that she can not be repaired for 20 per cent. of her original cost, but the House of Representatives has passed a special act for her preservation. If the Senate, which has now had the bill for months, will only agree to it, she is to be kept, like the old Constitution, as a memorial, a patriotic relic of the historic past.

To give a still clearer idea of our old Navy, I have another table here, prepared in the Bureau of Construction and Repair. It is the table that shows, as I said, the cost of each of our wooden vessels. It gives also the date when each vessel was built, its cost, and the cost of repairs. In connection with this table, and as bearing on the same subject, I have here an indorsement made by Secretary Whitney in due course of business on a recommendation that he should order certain repairs on the Palos. I will not stop to read these papers now, but will publish them in the RECORD, and if gentlemen will read them there and study them I think they will justify what your committee have insisted on both in the last Congress and in this, that is, the cutting down with firm hand of the appropriations for repairing our old ships.

We have sought to exercise a wise liberality in the repair and preservation of our navy-yards, in putting three of them, the Norfolk, Brooklyn, and San Francisco yards, in condition to build and repair modern ships with modern tools; we have appropriated money enough to fully equip the Washington navy-yard to build the very best class of modern guns, but we do not believe it prudent or wise to expend large sums of money in repairing our old ships. Let gentlemen study this table and this indorsement for themselves.

NOTE.—Vessels put permanently out of commission since March 4, 1885, Powhatan, Tennessee, Shenandoah, Wachusett, Lackawanna.

[Indorsement—Palos.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, August 1, 1887.

This indorsement suggests the expenditure of the sum of about $56,000 upon the Palos.

The Palos is an iron tug of about 300 tons; twenty-two years old and is in no respect a war vessel as now understood. She cost originally, in 1865, $125,000 when iron was twice its present price, and could probably be built new now for $50,000. She has cost in repairs since she was originally built $183,248.69. She is kept on the China station as a substitute for a vessel of war on account of her light draught, which enables her to visit the rivers and shallow bays.

I do not approve of these proposed repairs. We are not responsible for the maintenance or non-maintenance of the Navy; but we are for the proper expenditure of our appropriation. The excuse that we must keep her afloat, or otherwise we shall have no vessel to take her place, is a matter for Congress. We can not justify spending $50,000 upon the old iron tug as a vessel of war, except upon the ground that Congress has not made other provision for this service, which is a matter for Congress and not for us to consider.

Nothing has done so much to defeat the appropriations as the willingness of the Department to spend money upon worthless things.

These reports show that an expenditure of about $4,000 will put the Palos in shape for another year and a half, within which time something could be built fitted for the service, and which would not disgrace the country in case of war. One good shot from even a modern machine-gun would destroy the machinery of the Palos and end her career. I do not believe in spending money on this kind. I do not fail to appreciate and credit the responsibility which the bureaus feel; but I think that by this time, after I have antagonized so often this kind of reasoning, I ought to be relieved from this sort of recommendation.

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

I have come now to the period of Democratic control of the Navy. To be entirely fair, I desire to say here that since President Cleveland came in the Republicans in both Houses of Congress have voted with the Democrats for all the appropriations for the new Navy. Now the first question this Democratic Administration had to deal with in relation to the Navy which it had determined to build up was as to what should be done with the monitors the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has spoken of. He says he has frequently heard Democrats on this floor say they were worthless and ought to be thrown away.

That, sir, was a very serious question. What should be done with them? They had been begun in 1874 and 1875 without any authority of law. After the fashion of those days, the Navy Department was a law unto itself. These vessels, when completed, would be very slow, but Secretary Whitney considered the question without reference to whether these vessels ought even to have been commenced, without any political bias, which very naturally often influenced Democrats on this floor when they were outraged at the lawlessness and extravagance of Republican administration in those days, and he decided that, while he would not have laid down or become responsible for such vessels as these, yet, as so much money had been expended upon them and as they would be effective as coast-defense vessels, slow as they were, it would be better to armor them and complete them. So he requested the House Naval Committee to have their completion lawfully authorized.

We use these vessels like we sometimes use the canvass, the canvass we have fallen heir to, even though it is not the best—use it because it is more economical and better than to throw it away.

This is a splendid illustration of the spirit that animates this Administration in all its branches—the good of the country first and all the time. We seek no advantage to party at the sacrifice of country.

When this Administration came in it also found three new steel cruisers, the Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, and a dispatch boat, the Dolphin, contracted for under Secretary Chandler and authorized by the act of March 3, 1883, well on the way towards completion. These have all been practically completed.

The Administration also found authority, under the act of March 3, 1885, to build two cruisers and two gunboats. Under this act contracts were made with Cramp & Sons, at Philadelphia, to build the cruiser Newark and the gunboat Yorktown; with the Union Iron Works, at San Francisco, to build the cruiser Charleston, and with the Columbia Iron Works, at Baltimore, to build the gunboat Petrel. The Secretary of the Navy, impressed with the conviction that an unarmored cruiser to be useful must be swift, required of the builder of the Newark, though she was of only 4,083 tons displacement, a guaranty that the engines should develop 8,500 horse-power, and for the Charleston, 3,730 tons, he required 7,000 horse-power. This, it is expected, will secure very fast vessels, vessels of, say, from 18 to 19 knots an hour.

From the gunboat Yorktown is expected at least 16, probably 17, knots speed, and from the little Petrel, of 890 tons, about 13 knots. Small vessels can not attain great speed without the sacrifice of seagoing qualities. To fill them full of the machinery necessary to drive them rapidly would absorb the space and capacity necessary for coal and crew and armament.

ACTS PASSED DURING PRESENT ADMINISTRATION.

The first act approved by President Cleveland for the increase of the Navy was the law of August 3, 1886. Under this act contracts have been made, first, for the swift cruiser Baltimore, 4,413 tons, with a guaranty of 9,000 horse-power, which, it is expected, will secure at least 19 knots an hour, and, secondly, for the Vesuvius, carrying pneumatic guns to throw dynamite shells, and warranted to make 20 knots an hour. Under this act the Secretary has also begun to build the Maine, an armored battle-ship of 6,648 tons, in the New York navy-yard, and the Texas, an armored cruiser of 6,300 tons, at Norfolk.

This was the act authorizing the completion of the double-turreted monitors Puritan, 6,000 tons displacement, and the Amphitrite, Monadnock, and Terror, of 3,815 tons displacement each. These are to be heavily armored, and contracts have been made with the Bethlehem Iron Company, near Philadelphia, to furnish armor for these and other vessels which it is believed will equal the best in the world.

The next act for the increase of the Navy was the law of March 3, 1887. Under this law contracts have been made with the Union Iron Works for the construction of the San Francisco, and with Cramp & Sons for the construction of the Philadelphia, both to be swift cruisers guarantied to make not less than 19 knots an hour. Under the same act contracts were made with N. F. Palmer & Co. for the construction of the gunboats Concord and Bennington, sisters to the Yorktown.

The total limited cost of all the vessels so far begun or contracted for by this Administration, including the armoring of the monitors, is $19,993,046.

I present herewith a table from which it will be seen that the price of each vessel under contract is largely within the limit affixed by law. In this table is shown the exact condition of every appropriation which has heretofore been placed at the disposal of this Administration for the construction of vessels.

*Estimated. †Guarantied. ‡Launched.

In addition to above the present bill carries one cruiser of 5,600 tons, guarantied to make 20 knots; two of 3,000 tons each, guarantied to make 19, and three of 2,000 tons each, expected to make 18 knots.

This table shows that of the three unarmored cruisers begun before this Administration came in, the Chicago and Boston are 14-knot vessels; that the Atlanta has attained 16.33 knots, and that the Dolphin, also begun under a former administration, has made 15.5 knots an hour; that of the other unarmored vessels, all begun by Secretary Whitney, three gunboats, the Yorktown, Bennington, and Concord, are expected to make at least 16 knots an hour, and the little Petrel 13. Of the unarmored cruisers, begun by the present Secretary, the Newark and San Francisco are expected to make 18¾ knots, the Charleston 18½, and the Baltimore and Philadelphia over 19 knots.

So when this bill is passed we shall have provided for, including the five monitors and the four Roach cruisers, twenty-nine vessels for our new navy, besides two torpedo-boats.

Premiums are offered for increase of speed or horse-power over the guarantied rates, and it is confidently expected that greater speed than that specified in the table will be in most instances obtained. It is the policy of this Administration, just as it was of the Government that laid down the Constitution and her sister ships nearly one hundred years ago, to have our own ships of war the very fleetest and best of their class.

We are never, I hope, to have need for a navy as large as that of England or France. But swift cruisers we want for commerce-destroyers, to turn loose everywhere upon the ocean and drive our enemy's shipping from the seas. Having such, no nation like England, with 20,400,000 tons of shipping on the waters, depending too upon these ships for her food and her very means of subsistence, would dare to make war upon us. When the vessels contained in this bill and those now under way shall have been completed we will have twelve fast cruisers, making from 18 to 20 knots an hour, and all laid down by this Administration, and I sincerely hope that this Government will never be persuaded to build, to send out on the high seas as a cruiser, another slow vessel.

Consider for a moment. A vessel making only 16 knots an hour could not catch a fast merchant ship; it could not get away from a larger-sized cruiser and could not escape from an armored cruiser, for most of the armored vessels recently built make over 17 knots an hour. What gentleman here would take the responsibility of sending a 15 or 16 knot unarmored cruiser out upon the seas as a commerce-destroyer? Why should we build ships for our enemies?

Sir Edward Reed is one of the most celebrated naval architects and critics in the world. He recently delivered a lecture in England on "fast cruisers," and he fully sustains the position your committee are endeavoring to maintain. He quotes from a correspondent who writes:

Admiral Fremantle declared himself a "great advocate of speed," and asks what a naval commander is to do in time of war "with horrible things that can not go fast enough to catch anything or run away from anything."

And then he adds:

I know not whether Admiral Fremantle used these words, but whether he did or not, it is certain that they do not greatly, if at all, exaggerate our condition; and to my mind the only remedy for our deficiency in respect of fast cruisers is to induce the admiralty to put a complete stop to the building of slow ones and to expend the money voted by Parliament for cruisers only upon fast and efficient vessels.

For myself I should prefer never to build another vessel that was to go out on the high seas that could not make at least 19 knots an hour.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PLANT.

One of the achievements of Secretary Whitney is the establishment in America of a plant to manufacture forgings for heavy steel guns. When this Administration came in there had long been contentions in Congress as to what was the best gun. The Government had spent large sums of money in testing guns. But a Senate committee, appointed during the Forty-eighth Congress, after a thorough examination reported to the Forty-ninth Congress in favor of the built-up all-steel gun.

All the Army experts and Navy experts in ordnance favored this gun. All European countries had adopted it, and, seeing these facts, the Naval Committee of the House at the request of the Secretary reported in favor of, and Congress agreed, March 3, 1887, to an appropriation of $4,000,000 in one sum to furnish gun and armor steel for all the vessels then and theretofore authorized. This appropriation, added to others previously made, placed Secretary Whitney in condition to make a contract.

There is in the Navy Department an admirable intelligence office, inaugurated by Secretary Chandler and carefully fostered by this Administration, to furnish prompt and accurate information of the progress of naval affairs throughout the world.

After studying the whole subject thoroughly, Secretary Whitney advertised for gun-steel and armor-plates and bolts in quantities large enough to justify contractors in putting up plants. He prescribed tests which, it is believed, will secure the best possible material, and succeeded in making a contract with the Bethlehem Iron Company of Pennsylvania to furnish the steel at satisfactory prices.

The Secretary has also induced the Hotchkiss Manufacturing Company to establish in Connecticut the necessary plant for the manufacture of modern rapid-firing guns, under a contract to sell at reasonable prices to the Government.

So that at last, in the manufacture of vessels of war, armored and unarmored, and of guns, great and small, America is independent of the world.

Another factor, which it is believed will be of great importance, has been added to our Navy under this Administration, the Zalinski pneumatic gun, throwing dynamite projectiles. The Vesuvius is to carry guns which will throw shells containing from 200 to 600 pounds of dynamite, and they will propel the smaller sized shells more than a mile. This vessel is guarantied to make over 20 knots an hour. A knot is about 1½ statute miles.

I have here, sir, a table showing the condition of the appropriations made under this Administration for armament and armor. Here it is:

Appropriation "Increase of the Navy, armament," (for gun plant at the Washinton navy-yard). Section 8, act approved August 3, 1886		$1,000,000.00
Appropriation "Increase of the Navy, armor and gun steel." Section 4, act approved March 3, 1887		4,000,000.00
Appropriation "Increase of the Navy, armament" (guns). Section 4, act approved March 3, 1887		2,128,362.00
Aggregate		7,128,362.00
Obligated:
Appropriation "Increase of the Navy, armament" (gun plant Washington navy yard)	$530,842.61
Appropriation "Increase of the Navy, armor and gun steel"	4,463,392.29
Appropriation "Increase of the Navy, armament" (guns)	1,046,325.00
		6,040,559.90
Amount available		1,087,802.10
Appropriation "Vessels and monitors" (for the manufacture, purchase of and experiments with torpedoes). Section 10, act approved August 3, 1886		75,000.00
Appropriation "Torpedoes." Section 3, act approved March 3, 1887		50,000.00
Aggregate		125,000.00
Obligated:
Appropriation "Vessels and monitors." Act August 3, 1886		1,017.14
Amount available		123,982.86

Here is a statement showing the progress we are making in the manufacture of guns, "breech-loading rifles" of the very best modern type. The manufacture of these guns was begun under the previous administration. Those made by the Washington navy-yard have heretofore been cheaper than those made by contract. The guns made are believed to be equal to any in the world and the plant is being procured to enable us to build the largest sized guns.

Number of guns made at the Washington navy-yard: Six-inch breech-loading rifles, 10; 8-inch breech-loading rifles, 4.

Number of carriages made at the Washington navy-yard: Six-inch breech-loading rifles, 21; 8-inch breech-loading rifles, 8.

Number of guns made by contract (steel furnished by Department): Six-inch breech-loading rifles, 11; 8-inch breech-loading rifles, 4.

Number of 10-inch guns made at Washington navy-yard, etc.: One 10-inch breech-loading rifle finished; one 10-inch breech-loading rifle, nine-tenths finished; one 10-inch breech-loading rifle, seven-tenths finished; one 10-inch breech-loading rifle, steel under contract, time allowed for delivery not yet expired.

One 10-inch breech-loading rifle gun-carriage finished; three 10-inch breech-loading gun-carriages, three-tenths finished.

WHAT OUR TRUE NAVAL POLICY IS.

It was never the policy of the statesmen of the past that America should have the largest navy in the world, and it is not our policy now. But it was, in the days that are gone, and is now, the true policy for our country to have a navy respectable in size, with ships equal to any that float, demonstrating at the same time to the world our ability to increase that navy to any extent that may be required. In procuring the establishment of a plant for making gun steel and armor, and of another for the manufacture of rapid firing guns, we have taken a long step towards the consummation of that policy.

HOW MUCH MONEY PER ANNUM NECESSARY HEREAFTER.

And now, sir, in going forward with the plan of building up our new Navy, now that the work has been successfully inaugurated, it ought not to be at any time in the future necessary to appropriate as much money as was carried in the act passed at the last session of the Forty-ninth Congress. That act carried in round numbers $25,780,000. But it contained $1,732,000 for public works—that is, for the erection of docks and buildings—which up to the Forty-ninth Congress had always been embraced in the sundry civil act; and it contained for the increase of the Navy $11,048,000.

This enabled us not only to contract for vessels, but to procure the establishment, as I have said, of the great plant for the manufacture of gun-steel and armor. We have now four great docks provided for, one each at New York, Philadelphia, Norfolk, and San Francisco. We need one more, and that should be at some point on the Gulf. We have provided in this bill for a commission to make a thorough examination and report to the next Congress the best place for such navy-yard. It may be at the old site at Pensacola or near by on Pensacola Bay, or it may be elsewhere. When we shall have fitted up a yard on the Gulf we will have provided for the East, the West, and the South. We have appropriated for a complete outfit of modern tools for building and repairing ships at three yards.

The liberal provisions we have made will put our yards in good condition, and there is no reason why any appropriation hereafter should ever exceed the amount contained in this bill, $19,943,225.45, which is in round numbers, $5,824,000—nearly six millions—less than the bill of last year. We have brought down the ordinary expenses of our naval establishment to a point lower than ever before since our civil war began. Leaving out public works, new plant for navy-yards, which should last for many years, the new practice-ship, and sums to increase the Navy, and the bill, as agreed upon in conference, carries only $12,678,225.45.

Our appropriations are especially low for repairs. Perhaps they can never touch a lower point, for as old vessels go out new vessels will come in, and of course all ships in use will, from time to time, need more or less repairs. But if steel ships are to last as long as some have estimated—that is, an average of thirty-three years—then there is no reason why annual appropriations as large as that carried in this bill will not be amply sufficient not only to build up but to maintain our Navy, and after we have built ships enough we may largely decrease expenditures, and this will be at an early day.

Certainly such a sum annually as that contained in this bill need never be exceeded if, by maintaining a navy of moderate but respectable size and by being prudent in other respects, we shall be able, as I trust we will, to maintain peace with all the world.

Since this Administration came in, although we have largely, very largely, increased the work done at navy-yards, we have nevertheless actually decreased the number of persons employed in what is called the "civil establishments" in navy-yards; that is to say, clerks, writers, messengers, etc.

If current ordinary expenses be held down as now, twenty millions annually appropriated to the naval establishment will give, until we have ships enough, say six millions each year towards increase of the Navy—that is for a time. Then as new ships come in more money will be needed for repairs, as all vessels in use will require some repairs, but no greater sum will be required, because we will be gradually coming to the point where we will need fewer new ships. When we shall have built new ships enough we ought to be able to maintain the Navy in a state of efficiency for a much less sum than twenty millions per annum. In fact, I believe we can build up our Navy rapidly enough on nineteen millions per annum. This will support the whole establishment and build as many new ships as we need.

Even that amount seems a large sum; but look back at the past. Twenty years ago, 1868, our naval expenditures were $25,775,502.72. That was when the Navy was going down. Our population was then, say, 38,000,000; a tax of about 69 cents per capita on the people of the United States. Thirty years ago, 1858, in the days of Democratic rule, expenditures were $14,053,264.64; about 46 cents per capita of the then population. In 1848 expenditures were $9,408,476.02; about 42 cents per capita of the population then; and in 1838 expenditures were $6,131,583.53; about 38 cents per capita. With this bill at $20,000,000, and our population estimated at 60,000,000, we are building up a navy, and the whole expense of new ships, guns, and officers and men is 33 cents per capita.

If gentlemen would take in the full meaning of the contrast between this 33 cents for 1888 and the 48 cents per capita expended thirty years ago, in 1858, they must bear in mind how much more costly the modern ship is and the modern gun than were the ships and guns in 1858. Then the ship was of wood, now it is of steel; then the gun was cast-iron, now it is of wrought steel. And then compare the present expense of the Navy and the Army. The average annual expenditures on the Army amount to twenty-three and one-half millions of dollars. Think of it, twenty-three and a half millions for the maintenance of an army, guns and fortifications not included, when on land, as all the world knows, we are invincible by any force that can be sent against us, and only $20,000,000 for a navy, ships, guns, officers, men, and all, when, as against the ships of an enemy who was bombarding our cities, our millions of citizen soldiers, without guns or ships, would be absolutely helpless.

They might gather in countless numbers, like the leaves of the forest. They could only look on and curse the lawmakers who had left them without the means of defense. How did this ever come to pass that we are expending so much on our Army and have for twenty years? If it were a new question, if a permanent policy were to be established now, could any gentleman on this floor justify himself in voting $23,700,000 annually to maintain an army, and less than $20,000,000 for a navy? And yet for the Navy we do not now, and I hope we will not hereafter, ask more than $20,000,000. That is enough.

If we authorize no more ships till we shall have completed the seven included in this bill, and the eighteen heretofore authorized, which includes the monitors, we shall be occupied fully four years in completing them, and during this time we shall not need to expend more than eighteen or at most eighteen and one-half millions per annum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was adopted.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. BURNES. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the presentation of reports.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent to return to appropriate places in the bill for the purpose of offering amendments which will meet, I doubt not, the sanction of the entire committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to return to some portions of the bill already passed, for the purpose of moving amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. Is there objection?

Mr. MCKENNA. Before consent is granted, I would like to hear what the amendments are.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will submit the amendments, after which the Chair will ask whether there is objection.

Mr. BURNES rose.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to offer an amendment to pay to the widow of the late Chief-Justice one year's salary, at the proper place, wherever that may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment moved by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 6, insert:

"That the unexpended balance of the sum of $25,000, appropriated by the deficiency appropriation act approved March 30, 1888, to enable the Interstate-Commerce Commission to properly carry out the objects of the act to regulate commerce, be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated and made available for expenditure during the year 1889."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to considering the amendment at this time?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, moved the following amendment, which the Clerk read, as follows:

Page 27, line 14, insert:

"For inland transportation, railroad routes, $562,482."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to that part of the bill and to considering the amendment at this time?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is the appropriation for?

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the question of the gentleman from New Jersey, I need only say that the Postmaster-General has found this deficiency to exist in the appropriations for payment of railroads for transportation of the mails. It was estimated last year the service would be extended over 7,000 miles of new railroad, whereas in fact it has been extended over 13,000 miles of new roads. In consequence of that increase over estimates the Postmaster-General urgently asks for this deficiency.

I may add that the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom the estimate has been submitted, gives his hearty concurrence to the granting of this appropriation for this deficiency.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say in reference to the merits of this proposition, but I wish to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to the fact that I introduced some weeks ago a resolution of inquiry to investigate certain allegations against the Public Printer in relation to the purchase of English felting. The other day, upon one of the very few occasions during this session when I have been absent, the Committee on Printing reported that resolution back adversely, embracing in its report a letter from the Public Printer in which he denied having made use of any such article. The committee seems to have accepted the plea of the defendant as a verdict of acquittal. [Laughter.] The resolution was laid upon the table, the committee insisting upon this action, although attention was called to the fact that I was then absent, and now no official investigation can be had.

But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say here and now, whether that investigation is ordered by this House or not, it will go on in some way. I had and have facts in my possession which I thought justified me in offering the resolution, and the resolution itself recites the names of our witnesses. These facts, I believe, justify further inquiry. It seems to me it would have been as well for the Committee on Printing, instead of accepting the plea of the defendant as final, to have made at least a call on me for any information which I might have in my possession.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will print in the RECORD the letter of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BURNES. I do not understand the gentleman from Georgia to object to the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. No, not at all; but I simply ask the gentleman to have printed in the RECORD the letter of the Postmaster-General.

I will add, notwithstanding the estimate for 7,000 miles the Postmaster-General has put service upon 6,000 additional miles during the fiscal year just closed; thereby showing the wonderful growth and prosperity of our country as well as the increase in the mail service performed by railroads.

Mr. BURNES. The letter of the Postmaster-General has already been printed as a public document, but in compliance with the gentleman's request I will have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is quite short, and should be inserted.

Mr. BURNES. It is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 10, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Postmaster-General of this date, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for railway mail transportation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, of $562,482.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE UNITED STATES SENATE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., August 10, 1888.

SIR: As will be seen from the accompanying report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General made to me on the returns of business of this Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, there is a deficiency in the appropriation for railway mail transportation for that year in excess of that contemplated in the estimates submitted by my predecessor in his annual report for 1887 at page 395.

It will be observed that the estimate for that deficiency was based upon the supposition that the increase of railroad service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, would not exceed 6,000 miles; whereas the amount of new railroad service actually ordered for that year was 12,764.50 miles. I have the honor to submit, therefore, an estimate of $562,482 as the deficiency for railroad transportation, and to request its transmission to the Congress.

The returns of business of this Department for the past fiscal year justify the gratifying comment, in connection with this estimate, that the liberal and unprecedented increase of service has been followed by an equally unprecedented increase of postal revenue. The excess of cost over revenue for the past fiscal year will be less by several millions than in any year in the history of the Department since the general reduction of the rates of postage.

The Department has endeavored to keep pace with the demands of population and business, notably in the West and Northwest, under a policy adverted to in the accompanying report, which has been amply justified as a sound one by the returns of business and the satisfaction of the people.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 8, 1888.

SIR: In compliance with your request for an estimate of the amount that the appropriation for railway mail transportation will fall short of the requirements of the service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, I have the honor to submit the following statement:

Annual rate of expenditure June 30, 1888	$17,532,195.80
Estimate of amount withheld from aided and non-aided Pacific railroad companies	1,378,441.64
	16,153,754.16
Appropriation for mail transportation	15,867,962.00
Deficiency	285,792.16
Add for 6,723.21 miles unadjusted service on June 30, 1888, estimated at an annual rate of cost of $60 per mile for six months	201,690.00
Total deficiency for mail transportation proper	487,482.00

As service on the entire new mileage will not date from the beginning of the fiscal year the cost is estimated at $60 per mile for one-half year. By reference to the Postmaster-General's report of 1886, page 83, you will observe that my estimates for railway mail transportation for the fiscal year 1887-'88 were based on the belief that the new service to be ordered would not exceed 6,000 miles. This belief was founded on the reports forwarded to this office by the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, by division superintendents, and on information gained from authoritative railway publications. By reference to the Postmaster-General's report of 1887, page 395, you will perceive that I therein anticipated a probable deficiency of not less than $250,000, and this estimated deficiency would not have been much exceeded had only the 6,000 miles of new railroad service as estimated for been ordered, but in point of fact during the last fiscal year there was an unprecedented extension of railroad construction, especially in the West and Northwest, and the consequence was that the amount of new postal service on these new railroads ordered was 12,764.50 miles during the last fiscal year.

Under the general policy adopted by you, expressed in instructions, the building, equipment, and operation of any new railroad line or routes have been taken as evidence that mail service was there needed, and it has been promptly put on on the examination and report of the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service and on obtaining the written assent of the railroad companies to assume the service on the terms and conditions prescribed by law. To this uniform rule and practice now prevailing in the Department I can not recall an exception. It is but natural, therefore, and not any matter of surprise, that the deficiency is double what I anticipated, as the new service thus ordered during the last fiscal year is double the amount which was estimated for. To the above amount of deficiency for railroad transportation, to wit, $487,482, must be added the following amount for weighing mails, temporary service, rent, light, and fuel for railway mail service, and other miscellaneous items chargeable to railroad transportation, to wit, $75,000, making a total deficiency for this item, to wit, railroad transportation, of $562,482 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888.

Very respectfully,

A. LEO KNOTT,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. DON M. DICKINSON, Postmaster-General.

Mr. CANNON. What is the cost of the railway mail service for transportation?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not the figures in my mind just now.

Mr. CANNON. About what?

Mr. BLOUNT. Over $15,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Over $15,000,000?

Mr. BLOUNT. More than doubled in the last ten years.

Mr. CANNON. I ask my friend whether that committee has considered proposed legislation looking toward a different method for compensating railroads, which would reduce the cost for this service, and whether, in his opinion, such legislation should not be had?

Mr. BLOUNT. I think unquestionably, Mr. Chairman, that it should be. Various schemes have been proposed and are being examined by the Department; and it is to be hoped that a conclusion will be reached whereby a proper reduction can be made.

Mr. CANNON. How long has the matter been under investigation?

Mr. BLOUNT. For many years. There have been various reports by various commissions to the House, but they have not been accepted, and nothing has been done so far. Bills have been reported to the House—at one time from the Committee on Appropriations on the subject; but the criticisms on the bill in the House resulted in its failure.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman's committee considered the question?

Mr. BLOUNT. To some extent we have, but we have been embarrassed by these former difficulties. The matter is under advisement in the Department, however.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to say, while I think this appropriation should be made and the service paid for according to existing law, yet I do believe that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads could most profitably investigate this whole subject; and I believe that legislation ought to be had that when carried out will reduce the compensation of the railways for this service largely—probably 25 per cent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I concur with the gentleman in that respect, and do not think the gentleman's estimate is at all exaggerated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been read.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the next amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 32, after line 20, insert: "That the Attorney-General is hereby authorized and directed to cause Charles Grandison, Frank Seiver, alias George Selvin, and Anthony Stewart, alias Johnson, alias Frank Harris, who were received in the State asylum for insane convicts at Auburn, N. Y., while undergoing sentence in the New York State prison at Auburn for crimes committed in the District of Columbia, and whose sentences have expired since they thus became insane, to be removed to the Government Hospital for the Insane, at Washington, D. C., by the United States marshal for the northern district of New York, the necessary and actual expenses incurred in the same to be payable from the appropriation for fees and expenses of marshals."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment?

There was no objection.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BURNES. I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Attorney-General and one from the Superintendent of the Insane Asylum in regard to this question.

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, January 4, 1888.

SIR: I beg to inclose herewith a copy of a communication from C. F. MacDonald, medical superintendent of the State Asylum for Insane Criminals at Auburn, N. Y., relative to certain insane persons now in that institution who were at the time of their admission United States convicts from the District of Columbia, and who were placed in the asylum under the provisions of chapter 465, page 104, Supplement to the Revised Statutes. The term of sentence in each case has long since expired, and the parties are, as far as can be ascertained, entirely friendless. For several years a special appropriation has been made by Congress to meet the cost of their maintenance and care at the Auburn asylum, but it has now become necessary, as indicated in the inclosed letter, that provision for their removal should be made, and as authority to act in such cases is not conferred upon the Attorney-General, the matter seems to be one which should be disposed of by Congress.

I therefore respectfully suggest the introduction of a bill directing and authorizing the Attorney-General to cause Charles Grandison, Frank Seiver, alias George Selvin, and Anthony Stewart, alias Johnson, alias Frank Harris, who were received in the State asylum for insane convicts at Auburn, N. Y., while undergoing sentence in the New York State prison at Auburn, for crimes committed in the District of Columbia, and whose sentences have expired since they thus became insane, to be removed to the Government Hospital for the Insane, at Washington, D. C., by the United States marshal for the northern district of New York, the necessary and actual expenses incurred in the same to be payable from the appropriation for fees and expenses of marshals.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND, Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

STATE ASYLUM FOR INSANE CRIMINALS,
Auburn, N. Y., August 7, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I am officially informed that the building for insane convicts, erected on the grounds of the Government Hospital for the Insane, Washington, D. C., will open for the reception of patients within a month.

I am further informed the authority for the transfer of insane convicts to that institution rests with your Department.

There are in this asylum three insane United States convicts who terms of sentences have expired, and whom I desire to have removed at the earliest possible date, owing to our very much overcrowded state and the need there is of room for more active cases. For more particulars regarding these three cases I would respectfully recall your attention to my letters of the 15th December, 1887, January 4 and May 16, 1888. Also to your reply, dated January 9, 1888 (initials "F. S., file No. 9513, 1885). Requesting an early response to this communication, I remain,

Most respectfully, yours,

CARLOS F. MCDONALD,
Medical Superintendent.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, August 13, 1888.

SIR: I beg to inclose herewith a copy of a letter which was transmitted to you by the Attorney-General on January 4 last, relative to the necessity for the removal of three insane persons from the Auburn insane asylum, who were admitted to the institution as insane convicts, but whose sentences have since expired, and to suggest that proper action in the matter may be taken, if practicable, at the present session of Congress.

The request for their removal has been renewed, and is urgent; a copy of the same is inclosed for your information.

Very respectfully,

G. A. JENKS, Acting Attorney-General.

Hon. J. G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the next amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 44 strike out lines 13 and 14; on page 47 strike out lines 7 and 8; and on page 51, in lines 19, 20, and 21, in lieu of the sum total proposed, insert $345,712.58.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the Clerk read the original item proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read the lines proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is this: In certifying the judgments of the Court of Claims these three claims were included. It has been ascertained, as we are informed, that some error in the calculations was made, in consequence of which motions for new trials have been entered, and we are advised that the judgments are to be reviewed and the amounts changed one way or the other. The parties interested in the judgments, as well as the Fourth Auditor, have requested that this be stricken out now, in order to have the exact amounts ascertained and reported to the House hereafter.

There being no objection to the consideration of the amendment, it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 63, after line 18, insert:

"For reimbursing Kentucky for expenses incurred in suppressing the rebellion, being the amount certified to be due by the Secretary of the Treasury under the law of August 16, 1888, $38,861.18."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let some explanation of this be given first.

Mr. BURNES. This is an allowance to the State of Kentucky for moneys expended in support of the Union cause during the war, duly allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and no doubt will be included in the usual report to the Senate, which will be called for by that body during the consideration of this bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asks to have it inserted here, and I have in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury certifying to the regular allowance of the claim——

Mr. ADAMS. There is a provision in the bill already upon this subject.

Mr. BURNES. This goes to that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether this involves a matter of interest.

Mr. BURNES. It has been investigated and is certified up just as other allowances have been in behalf of nearly all of the other States, and stands upon precisely the same footing with the allowances made to other States for the same purpose, and to Kentucky now in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But an allowance has already been paid to Kentucky, and quite a large one.

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir; I am aware of that, but that fact does not affect the legality or justice of the present item. I will have read in this connection the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 16, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your verbal request of this date, I have the honor to advise you that an account has been stated by the accounting officers of the Treasury in favor of the State of Kentucky for expenses incurred in suppressing the rebellion under the provisions of the acts of Congress of July 27, 1861, June 8, 1872, and March 3, 1881, amounting to $38,861.18.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I think there ought to be some explanation of the nature of this claim.

Mr. BURNES. I will state that under several statutes of the United States amounts owing to the States on investigation by the accounting officers of the Treasury are found due to the several States for expenditures in organizing and supplying troops during the war, and when so found they are certified to Congress for appropriation and payment.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Has there ever been an investigation of these claims except by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. BURNES. By the accounting officers of the Treasury, under the law and the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. This is a very ordinary circumstance, and these appropriations from Congress to Congress in behalf of the States are being constantly made.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Has it been passed on by any committee of the House or Senate?

Mr. BURNES. It has been informally passed upon by the Committee on Appropriations. I have investigated this as much as any such claim usually receives.

Mr. CARUTH. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me to ask a question?

Mr. BURNES. Certainly.

Mr. CARUTH. Do I not understand you to say that you have investigated it sufficiently to say that it is a just claim?

Mr. BURNES. There is no question, I think, about that.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. He does not say that it has been investigated by a committee of the Senate or the House.

Mr. CARUTH. I understand that there has been an informal investigation by the Committee on Appropriations to such an extent as to show that this is a just claim which the Government owes and which it ought to pay without further question.

Mr. SENEY. I would like to ask what the gentleman means by an "informal investigation."

Mr. CARUTH. I quoted the language of the gentleman from Missouri, but I think I know what is an informal investigation by a committee. It means, while there might not have been any aggregate meeting of the committee, that this matter was discussed enough among the members of the committee so that more than a majority of that committee are satisfied as to the justness of the claim.

Mr. RYAN. I would like to ask my friend from Missouri a question. This may be a just claim. I do not know anything about it, and I do not propound any question with a view to antagonizing the matter; but I am not aware, so far as I am concerned, that this question has ever been before the Committee on Appropriations, formally or informally.

Mr. BURNES. I will state that it was not formally considered by the committee in session, but by several of the members individually or informally, and that it came to the committee in the usual way. I have spoken to the members of the committee as I have seen them. But I did not speak to my colleague [Mr. RYAN]. And I wish to say furthermore that a practice has obtained in regard to these audited claims in behalf of States, and this claim is within that practice and stands upon the same footing as do the various claims of the State of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. RYAN. I understand the character of the claims, and in a general way we have investigated them, and they are a character of claims that are just; but still the subject has never been investigated by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURNES. No, sir.

Mr. RYAN. And it sometimes happens that a State is indebted to the United States and there are set-offs. I do not know that there are any in this case, as I have never investigated the subject. Perhaps the gentleman can give us some information upon that point.

Mr. BURNES. I am wholly unable to say whether there are any sets-off or not.

Mr. RYAN. I want to say, in respect to my own State, that a claim of this character was paid; but it was claimed that our State was indebted to the United States for direct taxation, and that was to that extent a set-off against the amount due the State from the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] if that was reported for an appropriation?

Mr. RYAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] if it is not true that by established law the accounting officers of the Treasury are made to investigate and pass upon these claims, and that whenever the Auditor and Comptroller have approved the same if it is not binding upon the United States, and if it is not out of the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to order a review of the case, even?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir; it requires the action of Congress to have a review. But the reports of these accounting officers are not final so far as Congress is concerned.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is nothing unusual about it, it seems to me, as it was reported to the House.

Mr. RYAN. I want to state, though I have not examined this claim, and I am not here to antagonize it, because I do not know enough about it to do that, that I have no doubt the claim is just, and it is of the same character as many other claims. I do not know anything about any informal action upon it, and I do not understand whether there is any obligation or indebtedness due from the State to the United States which might properly be a set-off against this claim.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CARUTH. I desire to state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] that Kentucky paid the direct tax in full.

Mr. RYAN. You speak about a direct obligation. I am not speaking about the direct tax particularly. Any other obligation would do as well.

Mr. CARUTH. There is no other obligation on the part of Kentucky to the United States Government. She pays her honest debts in full, dollar for dollar, and she does not owe the United States a cent.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman seems to have the idea that my question implies some reflection upon his State, which is absurd. I do not intend anything of that kind.

Mr. CARUTH. I know that.

Mr. RYAN. I want to say, further, that, so far as I am concerned personally, the gentleman's statement is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. BURNES. I wish to call attention, and especially the attention of my colleague from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], to the fact that in this bill there are already two items of appropriation for Kentucky allowances up to the time of the last report then received. Now, those allowances stand upon precisely the same footing as this. They are audited by the same officers, reported in the same way, and are incorporated in this bill; and I will ask my friend whether he investigated either one of those claims when they were before the committee to any greater extent than he has this one, whether he deemed it necessary to go into the elements of the account; that is to say, to go behind the action of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department?

Mr. RYAN. I will answer the gentleman by saying that I was not a member of the subcommittee that was charged with that duty, but I supposed that in a general way subcommittees always gave some sort of investigation even to claims of this character.

Mr. BURNES. That is right. And in the same manner I suppose the subcommittee have given this item the same consideration that was given to the other items in behalf of Kentucky which are already in the bill, and this is just as meritorious as those.

Mr. RYAN. There is this distinction, however, between the two cases: If the subcommittee have examined this item they have never reported it to the full committee, and the full committee have never had any information upon the subject. And now I want to repeat that I am not antagonizing this appropriation. I simply wanted to get some information upon the financial relations existing between the State of Kentucky and the United States.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee one question. Has this matter come to us since the bill was made up?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir; within the last few days.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And has it been considered by all the members of the subcommittee?

Mr. BURNES. I can not say that they have all been consulted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Iowa will allow me, I think I can explain the matter. This is simply an item of the same character as the items that are already in the bill. One of those is "for reimbursing Kentucky for expenses in suppressing the rebellion, $2,314."

Another is "for reimbursing Massachusetts for expenses incurred and paid in protecting harbors and strengthening fortifications on the coast, etc., $114,951."

After this bill was reported to the House, and after so much of it as was precedent to the French spoliation claims had been considered, I received from the Secretary of the Treasury information that there had been audited in the office of the Third Auditor (the proper officer) other claims of the State of Kentucky to the amount of $38,000, of exactly the same character as these, but which had not been passed upon when this bill was reported, and I telegraphed for official information so that I might offer an amendment to the bill. And, acting as I always try to do in such matters, in concert with the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, I carried the dispatch which I had received to my friend, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], and submitted it to him. He suggested that I had better have it in the shape of an official letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, rather than in the form of a dispatch; whereupon I spoke to the Secretary about it upon the day on which we supposed the matter would be reached, and received in reply this letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 16, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your verbal request of this date I have the honor to advise you that an account has been stated by the accounting officers of the Treasury in favor of the State of Kentucky for expenses incurred in suppressing the rebellion, under the provisions of the acts of Congress of July 27, 1861, June 8, 1872, and March 3, 1881, amounting to $38,861.18.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
House of Representatives.

I showed this letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and asked the very efficient clerk of that committee, who is far more expert in such matters than I am, to draught an amendment to come in with the other items, this being a claim of precisely the same nature as the others. The State of Kentucky has not been indebted to the United States at all for twenty-six or twenty-seven years past. So far as I know, there has never been any claim on the part of the United States against the State since the direct tax of 1861, and in that case Kentucky took advantage of the provision of the act which allowed a State to pay the money and receive a certain discount, 15 per cent. Therefore these amounts, certified by the proper auditing officer, are claims against the General Government in favor of the State, without any offset at all. This claim is precisely of the same nature as the other items already passed in the bill; precisely the same, for instance, as the twenty-four thousand dollar item in line 10 of this page for refunding to States expenses incurred in raising volunteers.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. When this item came up, being for so large a sum, I felt it my duty to ascertain for the information of myself, as well as other members of the House, the nature of it, the matter not having been brought to my attention before, although I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations. But, as we know from the debate that occurred here only a few weeks ago, these allowances from the various auditing offices of the Government are matters that are coming in all the time; and when they come in after the bill is made up we make an effort to have them incorporated, so that the parties interested will not be delayed. After the explanations which have been made I believe this claim belongs to that class of cases; and upon the assurance of the chairman of the subcommittee that he has given it personal investigation and has consulted the majority at least of the subcommittee, I, for one, shall be entirely satisfied to have this amendment favorably acted upon.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I promised to yield for a question to my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Kentucky stated, as I understood, that the Auditor had examined this claim and allowed it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. The law requires more than that; it requires also the action of the Comptroller.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not mean to say that the claim had been acted on by the Auditor only; I meant that it had passed through the proper auditing office.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood the gentleman to use the word "auditor." Subsequently, however, he read a letter showing, to use the language of the letter, that the claim had been examined by the accounting officers. I wanted to know, therefore, whether there had not been action by the Auditor and the Comptroller in accordance with law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will say to my friend that the first information I received on this subject was from the Secretary of the Treasury, and was embraced in this dispatch:

The amount of Kentucky State claim is $38,861.18.

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

Upon receiving that dispatch, I asked a fuller statement and received by telegraph the following:

It is understood that the Senate will make a call for a supplemental list of claims allowed by the accounting officers since date of last report after the deficiency bill reaches that body. When the call is received here, the claim of the State of Kentucky will be reported with the rest.

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

The dispatch I have just read is dated August 15, 1888. On the 16th of August, this bill not having yet passed, I consulted with the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. BURNES], who said he would have the claim put on here with the other amendments. I then went to the Secretary of the Treasury and asked for and received the letter which I have read. The amount has been audited according to law by all the proper officers and stands on the books of the Treasury Department as a properly audited claim of the State of Kentucky against the Government.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is what I understood.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And against it there is no offset.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, after the very lucid statement made by my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], it is not necessary that I should say much on this question. It is clear to my mind that this claim should be allowed; and I hope it will be considered and adopted immediately. As I understand the case, the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has reported in favor of it. The gentleman in charge of the bill is in favor of it; and the Secretary of the Treasury has sent here a letter in which he says:

An account has been stated by the accounting officers of the Treasury in favor of the State of Kentucky for expenses incurred in suppressing the rebellion, under provisions of acts of Congress of July 27, 1861, June 8, 1872, and March 3, 1881, amounting to $38,861.18.

As this claim has been properly audited, and as the Secretary of the Treasury approves it, and as the Committee on Appropriations is in favor of it, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BURNES. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the subcommittee on this deficiency appropriation bill, but I had not my attention called to this matter until the amendment was moved. Still, from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, I understand that the claim has been passed by the accounting officers. If Kentucky owes the United States anything, the amount of such indebtedness would, as I understand, in accordance with a provision of the Revised Statutes, be set off, even if this appropriation be made; a balance would be struck before payment of the claim. From the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, I presume the Government owes this money; and I have no doubt that, pending the settlement of Kentucky with her late State treasurer, she needs the money. [Laughter.]

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. In reply to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has just said, I want to say that the people of Kentucky are able to take care of their State treasury. But the United States Government owes the State this money, and the debt has remained unpaid for twenty-odd years. It ought now to be paid without a word.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 34, after line 23, insert:

"To enable the Clerk of the House to rent during the fiscal year 1889, rooms for the use of the clerks employed under the direction of the Committee on Rules in preparing the general index of the Journals of Congress, $1,200."

There being no objection, the amendment was considered and adopted.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia. I move the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay H. B. Keffer as additional pay between the pay of a folder and that of messenger, for the present session of Congress, $280.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KERR. Yes; I object unless the gentleman from Virginia assigns some special reason why this should be done.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia. I know this man; he is a married man.

A MEMBER. That is enough. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia. He was removed from the folding-room to the place of doorkeeper, at the same pay of $60 a month. It merely provides for making his pay equal to that of those discharging precisely the same duties. He is efficient and faithful, and this discrimination should not be made in the case of a married man with a large family, when he has been transferred to this position from another one. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will withdraw his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUMM. Why not make it general? There are a number of people in the same condition. If that be done, I do not think there will be objection. I object if any one is singled out.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the amendment is not before the committee.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 30, under the heading "Department of Justice."

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay to the widow of Morrison R. Waite, late Chief-Justice of the United States, $10,000.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I object to that. The law designates the compensation of these officers. It also fixes a large compensation when they are retired. I think we should stand by the general law.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Chief-Justice Waite died in March or May. He was clear in his great office. We all concede that. He left his widow with no estate. In performing the duties devolved on him, both in his office and out of it, he consumed his salary. He had no other income. This amendment gives to his widow one year's salary. I offer it on the suggestion of numerous gentlemen on both sides of this House. And in this case I am proposing to follow the worthy example so often set by us on the death of a Member or Senator who dies while on duty at his post. Chief-Justice Waite won the confidence and esteem of the whole country by reason of the great ability, ripe learning, and unquestioned integrity he brought to the discharge of his duties as Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. He deserved well of the people, and in voting this one year's salary for the support of his widow we do but do an act of simple justice and testify the country's appreciation of his great worth. We honor ourselves in voting this appropriation, and we do honor to the Government.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I ask the gentleman what this $10,000 is to be paid for?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is to be paid to the widow of the late Chief-Justice Waite.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I know to whom it is to be paid, but I want to know for what it is to be paid.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In payment of the great and inestimable services rendered by the late Chief-Justice.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Well, when?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. When! Rendered during his long term of service and to be paid under the same rule of right and just precedent which authorizes this House to pay to the widow of a deceased member a year's or two years' salary. The justice of such payment in the case of a member has not been, and in my judgment can not be, questioned, and certainly as little can the justice of the proposed appropriation be doubted.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I submit that is wrong——

Mr. McMILLIN. Permit me to ask a question. Was any appropriation made to pay to the family or the estate of Chief-Justice Marshall or of Chief-Justice Chase or of the other Chief-Justices who preceded him?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not know whether there was such appropriation or not, but if it were needed by the widow of Chief-Justice Marshall and this House failed to make it, I say they were derelict in their duty.

If Chief-Justice Marshall, after his long and brilliant career and invaluable public service, had left a widow without proper provision for her comfortable support and maintenance, and the Congress of the United States had failed to make that provision at least to the extent and in the manner here suggested, one year's salary, then Congress was remiss in its duty. But I understand that there was present in the cases to which the gentleman has referred no such necessity. If there was such necessity, and it was not met, it was the fault of Congress, and a humiliating disregard of a just obligation, and no excuse whatever for our refusal in the present instance.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made to the amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I object to the amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Do I understand that the point of order is made against the amendment?

Mr. McMILLIN. I objected to the introduction of the amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Very well.

Mr. McMILLIN. And as the gentleman has made quite a lengthy speech——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH (interrupting). Oh, no, not at all.

Mr. McMILLIN (continuing). I hope the House will indulge me also for a moment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I did not make an extended speech, but only answered objections. The gentleman from Tennessee has objected; if he persists the matter must rest here.

Let me say, however, Mr. Chairman, that I understood from my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] that if we were allowed to return to offer amendments to the bill I was to be permitted to offer this amendment and have it considered. I understood the gentleman to say, in response to my suggestion, "Very well." I thought it was by unanimous consent that we returned to consider the several amendments just submitted; and he will remember that I called his attention to the amendment I have had read.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair will state that the gentleman from California [Mr. McKENNA] required that each amendment should be read and consent given to the introduction in every case, separately.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I did not hear the objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not wish or intend to be discourteous to the gentleman from Ohio——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that. The gentleman is always courteous.

Mr. McMILLIN. Or unjust to the widow of this great officer, for he was a great man and a good man. But the law fixes the salary, and I thought by the law we ought to stand, especially when, as in this case, the salary is a very good one—a large one.

This Congress has been prodigal to a degree that does not do it any very great credit. The House has been lavish enough, and the Senate has added more than $19,000,000 to the bills that have already passed the House and been sent over there; and I think it is time now to call a halt, and especially, when we are within the law, this is a very good place to halt.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I trust my friend from Tennessee will not urge the objection that in order to limit appropriations and preserve the surplus we are to refuse to do an act of plain justice.

Mr. McMILLIN. No, I put it on a higher ground.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Very well; there let it stand.

Mr. McMILLIN. I put it on the very highest ground known to a legislator, that the people's money, of which we are the custodians, money paid in by men who are earning but $200 or $300 a year, and who have to pay the taxes into the Treasury, is a sacred trust; and for one I do not propose to give it out in largesses to any favored class.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That was not the point the gentleman made against the amendment; and certainly no voice comes from any part of the country urging that justice shall not be done to the widow of our late Chief-Justice, Morrison R. Waite. Now, when the men who earn the $200 or $300 a year complain that what is here proposed is unjust, or that it is proposed to pay it to a favored class, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Unfortunately the men who earn the $200 or $300 are not here. It is not often enough that they have an opportunity of being heard here.

Mr. TARSNEY. I ask unanimous consent now to offer an amendment.

Mr. FORNEY. I object to going back.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. TARSNEY. Let it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. FORNEY. I object to going back over any part of the bill which has been passed.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. FORNEY. I object.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia. I understand the objection is withdrawn to the request I made a few moments ago.

Mr. FORNEY. I object to that also.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I understood the original agreement on this point was that these propositions should be read and then objection asked for.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then why should objection lie against a proposed amendment before it is known what is embodied in it?

The CHAIRMAN. This part of the bill has been already concluded and can now be recurred to only by unanimous consent. The gentleman may ask consent simply to return without mentioning any amendment at all, and if objected to by any member present, of course it could not be done.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then I offer this as an amendment to come in just preceding the French spoliation part of the bill. That has not yet been passed away from.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not now in order.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The consideration of the clauses of section 4 has not been entered upon, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] having presented a point of order which is to be first disposed of before the section is before the committee for consideration under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ADAMS. I have an amendment that does not involve any change of appropriation, and I ask unanimous consent to recur to that portion of the bill to which it applies for the purpose of moving the amendment which makes no change in the amount of the bill. I was absent when that part of the bill was under consideration, but I do not urge that as a perfect excuse for offering it now. I desire to say, however, that the amendment is simply to change the existing law in one respect, which, I think, will commend itself to the committee, and does not relate to the appropriations covered by the bill at all.

Mr. FORNEY. I am willing to have it read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection to its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 18, strike out "one year" and insert "three months;" so that it will read:

"That the act approved February 23, 1887, entitled "An act to amend an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia," be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in case he shall be satisfied that an immigrant has been allowed to land contrary to the prohibition of that law, to cause such immigrant within a reasonable time, say, three months, to be taken into custody and returned to the country from whence he came, at the expense of the owner of the importing vessel, or, if he entered from an adjoining country, at the expense of the person previously contracting for the services."

Mr. McMILLIN. At present it is one year. That, I understand, will encourage this violation of the law.

Mr. ADAMS. It would discourage a violation of the law.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I object; I hope the investigation now going on may result in placing in the penitentiary the capitalists who have violated the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the amendment can not be considered.

Mr. BURNES. I would like to have an understanding now as to whether the different paragraphs of section 4 shall be read through and the point of order be considered as applying to each paragraph, or whether the point of order made on yesterday will be considered sufficient to reach all the paragraphs in section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order applies to the whole section, and until that is disposed of it is not in order to proceed to the consideration of the section by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that the point of order should be decided in the first instance.

Mr. DIBBLE. I raise the point of order that no point of order or anything else can be brought against this until the section has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of this section and the whole bill was dispensed with in the first instance, and the question now is the reading of the paragraphs for consideration; but the period for consideration has not yet been reached in view of the fact that the gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order against the whole section.

Mr. DIBBLE. I do not mean to consume the time by reading the whole matter through, but I think to do it in due form one of the paragraphs at least should be read for the information of the House, and then the point of order can be made.

Mr. BURNES. I would like to understand whether under the rules and practice of the House it is competent to consider the point of order as pending and reserved with no decision thereon until the whole section shall have been read and considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The practice of the committee is to the effect that the point of order and its disposition precede consideration of the proposition under the five-minute rule. The point of order is against this section, and will remain until it is disposed of. If it should be held to be out of order, then consideration would be disposed of; so that the decision is generally prior to consideration. However, by unanimous consent, the committee could proceed to consider this section with the point of order still pending against the whole section.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the decision will be given on the point of order, and I call for the reading of the first paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. To pay the findings of the Court of Claims on the following claims for indemnity for spoliations by the French prior to July 31, 1801, under the act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," namely:

On the schooner Industry, Benjamin Hawkes, master, namely:
Thomas Cushing, administrator of Marston Watson, $6,555.

Mr. ROGERS. That I understand to be the first paragraph of the section. I suppose the point of order could be made now.

Mr. BURNES. Now I will make the point of order on this paragraph the same as I did yesterday, and if it be the pleasure of the Chair to consider the question I will proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the duty of the Chair to consider the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know what the point of order is on the first paragraph.

Mr. BURNES. It is suggested that the first paragraph of the section and the first item in the section should be taken together, as the latter carries an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the section as beginning at line 11 and continuing to the provision for the first item as in the paragraph that has been read and on which the point of order is made.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call your attention in the first place to the fact that ordinarily no question can possibly be raised against the exclusion of such a proposition as the one just read. Every gentleman upon this floor understands that such a claim as this has no place in a general appropriation bill unless by some express action or authority on the part of the House its insertion is directed. For there is no law authorizing these claims to be inserted in a general appropriation bill. On the contrary, there is an express prohibition under the rules, and we all understand that mere claims against the Government, however meritorious they may be, unless growing up by contract under existing law, can not be appropriated for in a general appropriation bill. But on the 19th day of December last a resolution was offered in the House directing the Committee on Appropriations to insert in the general deficiency bill certain specified reports from the Court of Claims in relation to so-called French spoliation claims under the law of January 20, 1885. The resolution was adopted on the day first mentioned.

When this Congress met on the first Monday of December last there were precisely 225 members returned who were not members of the Forty-eighth Congress, when the act in relation to these French spoliation claims was passed. There were 225 members who had perhaps never read the history or the story of such claims and knew but little if anything of their merits or demerits. A hundred members of the Forty-eighth Congress may have been present, and that is all that could have been present at that time. I know, sir, how quickly members of Congress become educated to the pending and even questions of legislation; but within the space of ten days after the assembling of this Congress they could not have ascertained or investigated either the law or the facts involved.

This resolution was offered and adopted directing the Committee on Appropriations to report these claims in the general deficiency bill. The resolution was discussed. Many statements made in that debate by gentlemen who are insisting on the payment of the claims will now be found exceedingly interesting in the present connection. I recommend gentlemen to go back and read that debate. The adoption of the resolution, in the opinion of many, imposed upon the Committee on Appropriations an obligation to report these claims in the general deficiency bill. But on the 19th day of December there had been no rules adopted by the House—none. We were acting entirely without rules. The committees had not been appointed, with the single exception of the Committee on Rules. The House was practically unorganized. The 19th of December was near the eve of the holiday adjournment and a great many members, including myself, were at their homes. This resolution thus passed seemed to impose an obligation on a committee thereafter to be formed.

But, sir, on the 21st day of December, two days after the passage of this resolution, the Committee on Rules reported the present rules of the House, which were practically the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress with some amendments, and they were adopted as the rules of the House until further ordered.

Whatever the prior order was—and you may call it a prior statute—it undertook to direct the Committee on Appropriations to do a certain thing, but two days afterwards the House, by the adoption of our present rules, made a later statute, if we call it so, expressly forbidding the Committee on Appropriations, when organized, from inserting any item of the nature of these claims now under consideration in any general appropriation bill.

These rules or statutes of the House for the government of the members, for the government of the various committees, and for the orderly transaction of business were repugnant to the prior statute of the 19th of December, and both could not and can not stand together. They were inconsistent with each other. One directed a certain thing to be done, the other, and the later, prohibited it from being done. The first said, do it. The last said, it shall not be done.

On the 19th the House ordered us to put it in the bill. On the 21st the House ordered us by a solemn and obligatory rule not to put it in the bill. Now, who can reconcile these two laws? If a conflict exists, a repugnancy that is irreconcilable, how shall we determine which one is to be followed and have force and validity?

The rule is believed to be well settled. The authorities are not conflicting. The later statute, order, or direction must prevail and be observed. If a repeal of a prior statute by implication is not favored, it is yet well understood that such repeals occur. This is a case above any in the books where the principle of repeal by implication should apply. No rights intervene. No third party was to be affected. The House simply made a general and a uniform rule applicable to all claims, and did not care to preserve any exception which the resolution of the 19th of December contemplated.

The supreme court of Ohio in the case of Cass vs. Dillon, 2 Ohio State Reports, 607, Judge Allen G. Thurman delivering the opinion, say, "None but the inconsistent then were abrogated. But how were they abrogated? Not by any express words of repeal, for there are none such. It follows that they fell simply because of their inconsistency. Had they been consistent they would have continued. Being inconsistent they ceased." Judge Ranney, who dissented because of other matters, was even fully as strong as Judge Thurman regarding the question we are considering. Both of them sustain our proposition that where there are two statutes, or two orders, if you please, two directions, two rules of action, which are in conflict with each other, the later one must govern.

Now, by one rule of action we were authorized to put these items in the appropriation bill, and by the other rule of action we were prohibited from putting them in the bill. There was, then, a repugnancy and an inconsistency existing between the two rules of action. Now, which shall prevail? Gentlemen will be unable to controvert the proposition by any respectable authority that under such circumstances, where such an incongruity exists between two statutes or two rules, the later one must prevail, and the former statute or rule of action must yield because of its incongruity and inconsistency with the later one.

I submit that there are half a dozen rules of this House which would be violated by an execution of the order of December 19, or rather which are in conflict with it. These rules I will specifically refer to, so that every gentleman may have a ready reference to the authorities bearing upon the point of order.

I call attention first to Rule XI, clauses 30, 31, and 50.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman please read them?

Mr. BURNES. I will read, first, the third clause of Rule XI:

To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided, namely: For legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; for pensions, and for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

These are the subject-matters that go to the Committee on Appropriations. Nothing else is authorized by this rule to go to that committee.

I read now clause 30, of Rule XI:

To private and domestic claims and demands, other than war claims, against the United States: to the Committee on Claims.

That is to say, that bills relating to claims shall be referred to the Committee on Claims.

I read, also, clause 31, which has reference to war claims:

To claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged: to the Committee on War Claims.

These claims, we contend, if they are anything, are war claims; not war claims against the United States, but war claims in a broader and higher sense—war claims against France under the law of nations.

I have already cited clauses 3, 4, and 5, of Rule XXI, and I need not read them. I refer also to Rule XXII, clauses 1 and 2, which I read:

1. Members having petitions or memorials to present may deliver them to the Clerk, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions and memorials, except such as, in the judgment of the Speaker, are of an obscene or insulting character, shall be entered on the Journal together with the names of the members presenting them, and the Clerk shall furnish a transcript thereof to the Official Reporters of debates for publication in the RECORD.

2. Any petition or memorial excluded under this rule shall be returned to the member from whom it was received; and petitions which have been inappropriately referred may, by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented.

Each one of the clauses and each one of the rules to which I have called attention, stands in direct and palpable conflict with the order of the 19th of December. That order therefore is repugnant to seven or eight positive enactments made by the House of Representatives at a time two days later than the date of the order giving authority to the Appropriations Committee to insert these claims in the appropriation bill.

There is one other ground that I had almost forgotten to state. The order made on the 19th of December had reference exclusively to such claims as had then been reported to Congress, and the claims then reported amounted to $448,000. Now, the Committee on Appropriations has not only inserted in this bill the claims embraced in the resolution, amounting to $448,000, but has inserted claims to the amount of $741,000—about $300,000 in excess of the amount which they were authorized to report. So that these items are in excess of the amount authorized to be reported, and therefore clearly and unmistakably in conflict with the resolution itself as well as with the specific rules to which I have referred.

It follows, therefore, that as this portion of the bill is bad in part under any circumstances it is bad in whole for the purposes of this question of order; and these claims ought to go out even upon that ground, if there were not higher and better ground upon which to exclude them under the rules of the House.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the points raised by the gentleman from Missouri are of that technical character coming under the rule qui hærit in litera hærit in cortice. They are simply superficial. There is not a member on this floor who does not understand the true intent and meaning of the instructions given to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee itself rightly understood and acted upon those instructions. It interpreted the resolution correctly according to its intent and meaning. Although a number of the members of the committee were opposed to these claims, the committee obeyed the instruction as it was intended in putting the claims upon the bill.

Why is it that the committee has included claims to the amount of $741,000, embracing the reports received subsequently to the order of December 19, at which time there had been reported claims to the amount of only $448,000? The reason is, Mr. Chairman, that this was a standing order of the House in relation to this subject. The expression is "reports of the Court of Claims." At that time there had been presented to this particular House but one report. But the word is in the plural—"reports." This resolution was offered as a rule of action applying to this entire class of cases. It had already been provided by law, as the chairman will remember, that the report of the Court of Claims upon these matters was to be made from time to time to Congress for final action. That is the provision in the statute of 1885. Therefore, as I have already stated, the action of the Committee on Appropriations showed that they appreciated this resolution as a standing order of the House, and obeyed it according to its true intent and meaning.

When the gentleman from Missouri intimates that this order was adopted because of the absence of a great many members of the House, himself among the number, and that only about two hundred and twenty-five members were present, I am willing to assert it as my belief that as many of the absentees were in favor of that resolution as were opposed to it. And besides, Mr. Chairman, if every absentee had been present and had voted against the resolution, it would still have prevailed, because it was carried by a vote of 163 yeas—a majority of the entire House. In a House only two-thirds full, a majority of the whole number of members elected voted in favor of this standing order.

Mr. Chairman, this is a standing order of the House relating to a special subject. The rules are general in their action. If the rules and the standing orders of the House can be construed together, it is the duty of the Chair so to construe them, in order that the will of the House, expressed with no uncertain sound, may be carried out. When the House has said, "We will in accordance with the law bring this matter before us at a certain time and in a certain bill for final action as the law provides," it is the duty of the Chair to construe that standing order in conformity with the expression of the will of the majority of the House, and not to supersede that expression by reference to general rules not interfering with this order, and which never would have been adopted had it entered into the conception of any of those who voted for this standing order that the general rules of the House would supersede its specific instruction in this matter.

Mr. Chairman, I presume the gentleman from Missouri put forward in the first instance his strongest proposition; and that is, that these matters are obnoxious to Rule XXI, clause 3:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

What is meant by "expenditure previously authorized by law?" When you speak strictly no expenditure is authorized by law until the appropriation is made therefor. There may be authority in relation to the subject-matter upon which the expenditure is proposed, but that is what the rule means. The expenditure is really authorized by the appropriation.

The meaning of the rule, therefore, is that the subject-matter should come up for final action by appropriation under some existing law; and in accordance with that I find in this bill, properly here on pages 37 and 38, or ten pages thereafter, judgments of the Court of Claims, in which the Court of Claims has said that certain parties are entitled to certain moneys, and yet the expenditure of that money is not authorized by law until the appropriation bill is passed. The officer can not spend it.

So the very bill itself shows the construction I place on the rule is the correct one—that it must be a subject-matter upon which there is a law which authorizes Congress to consider the matter of the appropriation under its rules.

Now, that is provided for as fully in the clause of this bill as it is in the clause of the law which requires the Court of Claims to report its judgments, so far as the fact of consideration is concerned. The act says:

The report is to be made to Congress for final action.

It is, therefore, provided in the act of 1885 that Congress is to take final action in this matter in regard to confirming or refusing to confirm the judgments of the Court of Claims. And this is put in this bill for the purpose of consideration, in order that the final action authorized by law shall be taken.

The distinction which might be drawn in relation to final and other judgments, that this is not a final judgment, does not affect the question of consideration here, because the very act provides that final action in this case shall be taken by Congress, and the resolution merely covers that point bringing in that final action; but the matter of putting it in an appropriation bill is not that final action, either in the case of report of final judgment, nor is it in the case of these claims? That is not the final action, because it is competent for Congress by an amendment to strike out; and it did strike out some of them for certain reasons which have been presented by gentlemen on the floor.

Therefore the question of consideration is the same in both Houses. In one case the Court of Claims report to Congress for appropriation, and in the other for final action, or for appropriation, provided Congress chooses to make it.

Now, as to the rules and regulations of the committee of this House——

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the gentleman the resolution of the House which he is discussing?

Mr. DIBBLE. I have.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman has no objection I should like to have it read by the Clerk.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will comply with the request of the gentleman from Georgia, and send the resolution to the Clerk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the reports of the Court of Claims under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," approved January 20, 1885, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations when appointed, with instructions to report to this House all such claims as have been decided favorably to the claimants and so reported by the Court of Claims in the general deficiency bill for the consideration of the House.

Mr. DIBBLE. Rule XI has been cited in relation to the duties and powers of the respective committees of the House. It says:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committee named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating.

2. To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided, etc.: to the Committee on Appropriations.

It is part of the question of the support of the Government that the Government should pay all of its debts that it heretofore has failed to pay, or its obligations of any kind, and they are all provided in the appropriation bills. The deficiency bill is the place to provide for judgments of the Court of Claims. If it does not mean this is for the support of the Government, they will have to go out. Support of the Government does not mean the future maintenance of the Government in all its provisions, but it means sustaining the credit of the Government by meeting such obligations as are justly due.

As to private and domestic claims and demands upon the Government, they go to certain committees in certain contingencies; but these do not go there. The Speaker, under the rules of the House, did not send them there, and he has by his own action construed this standing order of the House, and construed it to mean that those rules did not apply, because he referred all of these, obeying the instructions of the House, which has a right to make its standing order as well as its rules, to the Committee on Appropriations for embodiment in the appropriation bill.

The other suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri about putting them in the petition-box, I really think, Mr. Chairman, is hardly deserving of an answer. The rule to which he refers there applies exclusively to the cases of members introducing private bills. They go into the petition-box. I can not conceive that the gentleman means to apply the terms of that rule—Rule XXII—to a construction that would say that these reports of the Court of Claims, when presented by the Speaker of the House to the House, should be put into the petition-box and sent to the Private Claims Committee of the House; and yet that follows inevitably if the gentleman invokes Rule XXII to sustain his position, for it relates exclusively to that subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the rules themselves state that they are general rules, and I will cite in support of that Rule XLV:

These rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses unless otherwise ordered.

The language is not "until otherwise ordered." It is not an expression which relates only to future orders of the House, but the expression is distinct, "unless otherwise ordered." That is, that it excepts all standing orders that the House may make, and special orders as well, as the case may be; and when these rules were passed there was an order already made that if there is anything in conflict in the rules, had ordered otherwise.

By the express terms of that rule, which applies to all standing or special orders of the House, they are to be the rules of the House unless it has been otherwise ordered by the House, or unless it shall be otherwise ordered by the House. The expression used in the rule is broad enough to include both forms of expression, and shows that the intention of the rule was not to supersede the express and specific instructions of the House.

That distinction between the standing orders of the House and the rules of the House is also made in the forty-fourth rule incidentally where it provides:

The rules of parliamentary practice comprised in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House, etc.

Showing that the House is governed by both rules and orders; and when you read the two rules together, the forty-fourth and the forty-fifth rules, it means this, sir, that the House has standing rules and it has orders, and that the rules govern the House except in those cases provided for by the orders of the House. And therefore, even on a technical and literal construction of the rules of the House, there is nothing in the rules inconsistent with the consideration of this proposition in this bill.

One thought more, Mr. Chairman, and I am done, and that is in regard to the technical point made by the gentleman from Missouri, that the order under which these claims have been reported in this bill includes only those reported to the House up to the 19th of December, 1887, the date of the adoption of the resolution, and that $440,000 only were so reported, and not $740,000 as appears in the bill. I wish to say in relation to that, in addition to what I have already said, that that does not enter as an objection against the first paragraph which we are now considering, because, as a matter of fact, this paragraph about "Thomas Cushing, adminstrator of Marston Watson, $6,555," on which the point of order is now being made, was already reported to the House, having been reported on the 6th day of December, 1886, and therefore was literally within the terms of the order, whatever might be said as to those embraced in the latter part of the bill after the $440,000 were exceeded; and therefore, so far as that point is concerned, it is not pertinent to the pending question of order.

In conclusion, therefore, Mr. Chairman, the House having power and control over its own rules of procedure under the Constitution, by a vote of a full majority of the House has laid down an order and an instruction to the Committee on Appropriations. It would have been contempt of this House for that committee to have disregarded that instruction. They were bound to put these claims into the bill. They put them in without hesitation; but they put them in unwillingly. A number of members have said that they had put them in unwillingly. The committee embraces amongst its memberhood some of the older members, skilled parliamentarians of the House, and they put the claims into the bill without dissent as to the act of obedience to the instructions of the House. The object of that was that when we came to these claims we should consider them.

We have the facts found definitely and in detail and particularly by the Court of Claims, which Chief-Justice Taney said, in the case of Gordon vs. The United States, was "a tribunal which Congress might well create for its assistance in deciding political cases relating to the obligations of the Government; and that it could well construct that machinery to assist it in cases which were not judicial in their nature." And we have the facts found by the court. We passed a solemn enactment that that court should find these facts; that they should report them to Congress, and the object of that report was for Congress to consider and take final action upon them; that we would take also the views of that eminent body of trained men—trained in judicial investigation—and that we ourselves would make the final decision. In compliance with that law, which otherwise would be inoperative, they have been placed in this bill.

We have gravely consumed hours after hours in discussing the obligations of the Government in this regard; and now, Mr. Chairman, a purely technical and surface objection, refined and strained in its character, is interposed in order to throw one more obstacle in the way of the House having its will and providing for these matters which it deliberately said it would discuss in this bill and nowhere else.

I insist, therefore, that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the argument of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] is able and ingenious, and undoubtedly the best that could be made against the point of order of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]. But it seems to me that both the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from South Carolina have gone into much greater detail than the real question involved would seem to require or justify. For it is impossible to avoid the fact that the very first point presented by the gentleman from Missouri covers the ground and decides the case. It is the strongest position that can be taken, and to my mind absolutely conclusive. The mere statement of fact is the strongest argument that can be presented. You weaken the matter by enlarging upon it. The fact simply is that on the 19th day of December last the House directed the Committee on Appropriations to insert certain claims in a general appropriation bill. That became the rule of the House and the law of the Committee on Appropriations as to those, and as a matter of course that committee would obey that order.

It is not an unusual practice to pass such resolutions and make such orders. There have been a great many instances within the last twenty-five years when such orders have been made. Orders are made on a given subject-matter which make them in order when otherwise they would not be in order on an appropriation bill. At that time the rules authorized to be made by the House by the Constitution of the United States for the government of the House had not been adopted. The House was acting from the necessity of the case under the common law of parliamentary bodies. To ascertain what that law was at the time reference of course was had to what had been the rules of preceding Congresses, especially the last, for they better than any other parliamentary law would express the common law applicable to the House of Representatives, so that on the 19th day of December this order was made, this rule was established as to the French spoliation claims. On the 21st of December the House, in performing one of its highest constitutional duties, adopted rules of procedure, and by almost express words annulled that order and rule of the 19th of December as effectually, as distinctly, and as unmistakably as if the resolution of the 19th day of December had been expressly named.

They adopted a rule that claims, such as referred to in the order of the 19th of December, shall go to the proper committee—the Committee on Claims. As referred to by the gentleman from Missouri, the House declared in that deliberate act that no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto in any instance not previously authorized by law. That is clear and definite. On the 19th of December the House directed that matter not authorized by law, having no legal status or recognition on the part of the United States, should be in order upon an appropriation bill. The rules adopted afterwards on the 21st of December in express terms declare that such matter shall not be in order on an appropriation bill. Of course where two legislative measures cannot be reconciled, the former act must give way, the subsequent and last legislative action must control. This rule is too clear to admit of debate.

Mr. DIBBLE. If the gentleman will permit me I will ask him what has been the practice here? Does the Speaker usually refer these reports which have been coming in since under the rules or under the standing order? What construction has the Speaker of the House made in relation to this matter?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to answer, but I have no doubt the Speaker of the House, whenever these reports came, has referred them to the Committee on Appropriations. The Speaker would naturally do that. The Speaker would not undertake to settle this question of jurisdiction until it was raised, and inasmuch as there was a special order the Speaker would naturally make that reference. Why not? I would suggest to my friend from South Carolina that the act of the Speaker would be done pro forma in the current procedure of business, and there is no point in that as to what committee it should be referred to. Such pro forma action decides nothing.

Mr. DIBBLE. Except that the Speaker recognized the standing order to be still in force notwithstanding the subsequent adoption of the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Speaker perhaps never had his attention called to the subject. It is a question which never——

Mr. DAVIS. Would not the course have been to obey the general rule if his attention had not been directed to the matter?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think so. It does not appear that the attention of the Speaker was called to the subject. After the adoption of the general rules the prior order in conflict with them must give way. The action of the Speaker in the absence of calling his attention to the subject under this rule proves nothing, decides nothing.

Now, sir, the only question that can remain is whether by the act of 1885 Congress in any way gave validity to these claims or made them lawful demands against the Government. I remember very well the history of this measure as it has been here for many years. It was the first series of claims against the Government that came to my notice after I entered Congress.

Notwithstanding the long series of years during which this class of claims have been pressed upon the Government, that measure could not have got through the House if it had not contained the provisions to which I now call attention, and which show that Congress simply called upon the Court of Claims for information upon the subject of these claims, treating the court, not as a judicial tribunal, but as an advisory board to report the law and the facts.

That is the way in which these matters were referred to the Court of Claims, and Congress further declared that notwithstanding its action in thus referring the subject to the court as an advisory board, it was not to be bound by any action of the court resulting from proceedings under that law. I think, sir, that if such an extraordinary measure as this had to pass Congress it was at least creditable to Congress that the provisions to which I call attention were incorporated in it, as showing that Congress was unwilling blindly, without further information, to enter upon a course which would involve the expenditure of millions of money on claims more than three-quarters of a century old. There is the provision:

Such finding and report of the court shall be taken to be merely advisory as to the law and facts found, and shall not conclude either the claimant or Congress.

The "claimant or Congress." This law all the way through treats these matters as claims; not as demands that have been established, but as claims. The law goes on to say:

And nothing in this act shall be construed as committing the United States to the payment of any such claims.

"Claims" again, not ascertained matters, not final adjudications, but simply "claims," which under the rules of this House should go to the Committee on Claims.

Therefore, sir, without undertaking to speak at this time in regard to the other rules which are violated by the presence of these claims in this bill, I desire simply to urge again one consideration upon the Chair. That is, the point first presented, that the order under which these claims were permitted to be put upon this bill has been abrogated and rescinded, presents the case just as forcibly, just as completely as it can be presented. It covers the entire case. The point is clear and well taken beyond question. No possible argument can break the force of the fact that the order under which these claims were allowed to be placed upon this bill was abrogated and is not now the law of this House.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] opened this discussion on the point of order he referred to the fact that at the time of the adoption of this resolution on the 19th of December there were two hundred and twenty-five members of the House present who, not having been members of the Forty-eighth Congress, were presumably unfamiliar with the French spoliation claims. The only logical inference from that remark would be that the House must be presumed not to have acted deliberately or with full information in regard to the effect of the resolution then adopted, and I concede that that is a logical way of arguing the question.

Mr. BURNES. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, I said what I did say on that point in consequence of the fact that it was stated on this floor on the 19th of December that this was "the usual course with other reports of the Court of Claims."

Mr. ADAMS. On what page does that appear?

Mr. BURNES. On page 98. Now I wish to say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] and to the House that this is not the usual course with other reports from the Court of Claims.

Mr. ADAMS. I admit it.

Mr. BURNES. It is the usual course with regard to judgments rendered, but not with regard to reports, and I call the gentleman's attention to the numerous reports from the Court of Claims in cases under the Bowman act, precisely the counterpart of these claims, as directly refuting the statement which was made upon this floor and which I have just quoted.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to have been reminded by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] that this proceeding was an unusual one in this class of claims, because that was exactly the fact which I was about to bring to the attention of the Chair. I was about to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that the unusual character of the proceeding was brought clearly before the House at the time and that the House on full debate deliberately voted by yeas and nays in favor of the adoption of the resolution, understanding perfectly what its effect would be. The remark just read by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] occurs in an earlier period of the debate, for he says it is to be found on page 98. After considerable debate the following statement was made by Mr. REED. It is found on page 100 of the RECORD:

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, this is, after all, a practical question. At least three-score of the members present now know, and the rest of them before the end of the session will know, that there are a great many ways of killing a bill besides a direct negative vote of the House. Among the methods, one is to send it to a committee, and especially to the Committee on Claims, which is so overburdened with work that it can report on but very few of the matters that are referred to it.

The present proposition is to send this to the Committee on Appropriations with directions to report it upon a deficiency bill for the action of the House. The Committee on Appropriations can consider these items and report against them or report for them, but in no event will they be allowed to prevent the House from voting on them.

That statement runs on all-fours with the other statements made in the course of that debate. There was a wide difference of opinion among the members of the House who took part in the debate as to the propriety of adopting the resolution, but I think a cursory examination of the debate will convince any one that there was no division of opinion as to the effect of the resolution in case the House chose to adopt it. I have read an excerpt from page 100. Here is what fell from the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations is composed of able and experienced members of the House. If this question is referred to them they will report back in a bill, and there is no precluding them from making remarks or presenting their opinion upon their own report. If their report as to any one of these claims comes before the House it comes up, not for favorable action, necessarily, by the House, but for such action as the House shall see proper to take.

The logical inference from this entire debate is that the House was determined that these French spoliation claims should be considered, not necessarily that they should be allowed or that they should be rejected, but that this House should at least have the privilege of voting yea or nay on every report that had come from the court. Thereupon, after all this debate, the question was voted upon by yeas or nays, and there were 163 votes in the affirmative and 84 in the negative.

The gentlemen who voted in the negative, including the gentleman who is now in the chair [Mr. SPRINGER], certainly could not have found much reason for opposing the adoption of the resolution if they supposed that when the question came up in the House the objection of a single member could throw these items out of the bill. The gentleman now in the chair opposed the resolution, and his argument against it was based on the privileged character which the adoption of such a resolution would give to these claims.

There would be no sense in the remarks made by almost every member who spoke against the adoption of this resolution if it had been supposed that after its adoption any member could have these items thrown out of the bill on a mere point of order. This resolution, then, is the deliberate judgment of the House expressed on a vote by yeas and nays after full debate and upon a clear statement of the matter.

Now, what was the action of the House in the adoption of the rules? If it is proper, Mr. Chairman, to refer, as the gentleman from Missouri did refer, to the fact that a large number of members then present were unfamiliar with the French spoliation claims, it is at least equally proper for me to refer to the circumstances, which I know will be fresh in the mind of the Chairman, under which the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress were adopted by this House on the 21st of December last. The Committee on Rules came in with a report, of which I will read the first two paragraphs:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred various propositions to amend the rules of the House, has had the same under consideration, and make the following partial report:

The committee has not had time to conclude its consideration of all the propositions referred to it, and therefore reports back to the House such measures only as it deems necessary to be disposed of in order to complete the organization of the House.

It is true that the report of the committee did declare that the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress should be adopted until the further order of the House, with the exception of certain definite modifications. But when that report of the Committee on Rules came to be discussed I I think the gentleman now in the chair [Mr. SPRINGER] took part in the discussion. I took some part in it myself, and without reading what fell from various gentlemen as to the effect of adopting that "partial report," I will refer to a parliamentary question which I asked of the Speaker near the conclusion of the whole debate:

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. This proposition being to adopt, with some modifications, forty-six rules of the House of Representatives of the last Congress, is not the question divisible?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a separate vote may be called for on any proposition contained in the report.

Mr. ADAMS. Another question: After the previous question has been ordered, would it be in order for me to move that the consideration of all rules of the Forty-ninth Congress in regard to which the Committee on Rules has not recommended a modification be postponed till the first Wednesday in January?

The SPEAKER. Those propositions to amend the rules on which the committee has made no report are not before the House.

Mr. ADAMS. But, Mr. Speaker, the report, as I understand, is that the rules of the House as they existed in the Forty-ninth Congress be adopted as the rules of the present House. If I am incorrect in that impression, I am very glad to learn it.

The SPEAKER. The report proposes to adopt the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress with certain modifications, until the further order of the House; that is the statement contained in the report. The report also states that there are other propositions pending before the committee which are hereafter to be considered and reported upon.

Mr. Chairman, the rules referred to by the gentleman from Missouri—clause 3 of Rule XXI, and other rules—are to-day the rules of this House, because the Committee on Rules declined to make any further report. I do not mean to say that this interferes with the validity of the rules which were adopted. I do not mean to affirm that they are not in full force to-day as rules of the House. But when the gentleman from Missouri claims that this standing order of the 19th of December last is vacated by the action of the House on the 21st of December, I think it fair to call the attention of the Chair to the character of the action of the House on those two separate occasions. On the first occasion there is not the slightest possibility of doubt as to the deliberate intention of this House.

I submit that those rules adopted on the second occasion, until the further order of the House, on the statement of the Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], a member of the committee, that the committee would make a further report—I submit that rules adopted in that way are not in such full sense the deliberate action of the House as was the action by which, after full debate and upon a vote by yeas and nays, this resolution was adopted, many gentleman voting against the resolution simply because they foresaw that the effect of its adoption would be precisely what we claim. The judgment of the House as thus expressed was not intended to be vacated by what the House did two days afterward in adopting the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, the principal point made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], and the only point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], is that the adoption of the general rules vacated this special order. If that was the case, it did so on the 21st of December, when those general rules were adopted; and if the position of those gentlemen be correct, the Speaker of this House has since that time been wiongly referring to the Committee on Appropriations these claims subsequently reported. The gentleman from Indiana intimated that the Speaker did this without reflection, in the general current of business. But, sir, our Speaker is one of the most acute parliamentarians in the country, and has had his eye on all the business of the House. Moreover, the Committee on Appropriations, hostile to these claims, has only discovered at this eleventh hour that they are out of order.

That committee has had plenty of opportunity to change the reference of these claims. If the original order was vacated, the committee could have changed the reference at any time; but they have put these claims into the bill in accordance with the special order; so that they at least never doubted the effect of that order until now.

Mr. BURNES. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? He informs us that the Speaker of this House, an acute parliamentarian, referred these reports of the Court of Claims to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LODGE. I mean those presented subsequently to the adoption of the order; those beyond the $448,000.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman did not mean to assert that those claims reported prior to the order of the 19th of December were so referred by the Speaker?

Mr. LODGE. They were referred by the order of the House. I simply meant to say that the Speaker, in his subsequent references, recognized the force of that order.

Mr. BURNES. Undoubtedly the point had not occurred to the Speaker, nor had it occurred to many members on this floor.

Mr. LODGE. That was the point I meant to make—that it had not occurred to the committee until now.

Mr. BURNES. It had occurred to some of us.

Mr. LODGE. In the debate at that time, Mr. Chairman, when it was well known to members of the House that the rules of the House had been adopted, in the debate on the resolution you, sir (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), said:

> This resolution takes away from the Committee on Claims its jurisdiction under the rules of the House and makes the Appropriations Committee a claims committee.
> This resolution proposes to make these claims privileged, and to refer them, not to the Committee on Claims, to which they should properly go, but to the Appropriations Committee, which is a privileged committee, with authority to report at any time, and the resolution further instructs the Appropriations Committee to report these claims in the deficiency bill. * * *

This resolution commits the United States at once to the payment of these claims. That is the interpretation put on it during the debate, and I wish simply to call attention to the facts in settling this point of order.

Mr. SENEY. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that paragraph 3, of Rule XXI, is controlling on this point of order, if there be nothing else in the way, and if this paragraph is given its full and proper effect, then section 4, providing for the payment of French spoliation claims, must go out of this deficiency appropriation bill.

This clause is in these words:

> No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

I do not understand that it has been claimed by either of the gentlemen who preceded me that section 4 in this bill is rightly there if this paragraph is decisive of the point under debate. In other words, whether or not section 4 be rightly in or should go out of this bill depends on the construction and effect we will give to the paragraph I have just read.

It is claimed that section 4 is rightly in this bill from the fact that the House in December last passed a resolution instructing the Committee on Appropriations to put it there. This claim, Mr. Chairman, I dispute. I insist the House did no such thing. In addressing the House on yesterday for the mere purpose of debate, I treated the resolution of December last as an instruction upon the part of the House to the Appropriation Committee to report in the general deficiency bill an appropriation to pay French spoliation claims; but such, sir, is not the meaning of that resolution.

Allow me to read the resolution:

> Resolved, That the reports of the Court of Claims under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," approved January 20, 1885, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, when appointed, with instructions to report to this House all such claims as have been decided favorably to the claimant, and so reported by the Court of Claims, in the general deficiency bill for the consideration of the House.

The question before the House, then, is, what is the right meaning or legal effect of the resolution I have just read? Does the resolution instruct the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate money in the Treasury for the payment of these French spoliation claims? I do not think any gentleman who will carefully and thoughtfully read the resolution will dispute me when I say the House gave no such instructions to the Appropriations Committee.

Now, what did the House do? I think the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] said something in his remarks about the intent of this resolution.

He, as I understood his remarks, wanted the House to depart from the words of the resolution and follow him in his construction as to what was the intent of the House in passing that resolution. It may be that the House did intend to instruct the Appropriations Committee to appropriate money to pay these spoliation claims, but to my mind the resolution of the House which I have just read signally fails in expressing that intent.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will state, with the permission of the gentleman from Ohio, that I did not assume the position that the Appropriation Committee was to do anything more than to report these claims in their bill for the consideration of the House. That is not an appropriation of money at all. The appropriation of money is an act of the House itself.

Mr. SENEY. We are talking, as I understand it, whether section 4 ought to be in or out of this deficiency bill. The proposition now before the House is that it be stricken out; that it is improperly there; that it has no business there, and that under the rules of the House it is out of place. The proposition before the House is that the House shall act upon its own rules and strike it from the bill. This I understand to be the question, and no other question is before us.

Sir, it is a mere begging of the question to say that we must be controlled by what the House intended. The resolution tells the intent, and nothing but the resolution is authority on this point. I insist that we be controlled by what the House did, and when we cast about for evidence as to what was done in December last by the House respecting these spoliation claims we have nowhere else to look save and except to the record for the resolution, which speaks for the House. Instead of instructing the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate money out of the public Treasury for the payment of these claims, the resolution does nothing more nor less than instruct the Committee on Appropriations to report the claims for the consideration of the House.

Now, sir, to my mind there is a very wide difference between instructing the Appropriations Committee to appropriate for the payment of claims and instructing that committee to report the claims to the House for its consideration. I do not know, sir, how these claims got into the room of the Committee on Appropriations. By the act of 1885, it occurs to me, that the proper thing to have done with the report when it came from the Court of Claims was for the Speaker from his chair to lay it before the House for its consideration. The act of 1885 expressly authorizes and requires that the report of the Court of Claims shall be made to Congress; not to the Appropriations Committee, but to Congress.

I take it, sir, that that means to both Houses of Congress, the Senate as well as the House; but by some custom or practice, or in some way with which I am not familiar, this report seems to have been lodged with the Committee on Appropriations, and the friends of these spoliation claimants, taking advantage of that circumstance, brought before the House a proposition that those claims should be brought out of that committee-room and into the House; and they did nothing else by that resolution. The House instructed the committee to report the claims, just as any other matter is reported, and I submit to any fair-minded man, I submit to the legal talent of the House, whether that act on the part of the House means an instruction to the Appropriations Committee that they shall appropriate money to pay them? I say it does not.

It is not the way in which business of that sort is done; and it may be—not being familiar with the custom in that regard—it may be, sir, that I am mistaken and that this was the proper resolution to put through the House. But I undertake to say that if the matter had been submitted to my judgment I would have used words very different from those employed in the resolution if I wanted to force the Appropriations Committee to appropriate money out of the Treasury to pay the spoliation claims.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to the fact, since he is commenting on the word "report," used in that resolution to which he refers, that it is precisely the word which, existing in the rule, is now cited as an objection against the claims being in this bill, the language of the rule being:

No appropriation shall be reported, etc.

Mr. SENEY. Well, sir, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say to the House that if I had been draughting a resolution with a view of having money appropriated to pay these claims in lieu of giving instructions to the Committee on Appropriations to report these claims to the House I would have used words something like these:

To appropriate in the general deficiency bill for the payment of such claims as the Court of Claims had duly reported upon.

But I was going to remark when interrupted by the gentleman, that the words used in the resolution do not authorize or direct the Committee on Appropriations to make an appropriation for the payment of the claims.

I ask you, Mr. Chairman, whether when a committee is instructed by this House to report a claim which is before it, that instruction means that the committee shall appropriate money for the payment of it? Why, sir, if this House was to instruct the Committee on War Claims or Accounts to report a given claim or account to the House, would any gentleman assert that that committee had the power to appropriate money for the payment of the claim? Well, sir, if the War Claims Committee, or the Committee on Accounts would have no such power, I ask the gentleman from South Carolina what it is that confers that power upon the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DIBBLE. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the Committee on Appropriations do not appropriate the money. They present a proposition for the consideration of the House in accordance with the express wording of the resolution.

Mr. SENEY. Why, if that resolution means anything at all, it means that what the Court of Claims reported to Congress should be brought from that committee-room into the House that the House may consider what the Court of Claims did in these cases. It means nothing else. It can mean nothing else. But the Committee on Appropriations do appropriate money, and report that appropriation instead of reporting the claims, giving the names of the claimants, amounts found in their favor, the nature of the claims, etc.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If it does not interrupt the gentleman from Ohio——

Mr. SENEY. Not at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If that is what the resolution means, how then is it contrary to the rules of the House? And how does that, which by order of the House is laid before the House for its consideration, become disorderly for the House to consider?

Mr. SENEY. It is not contrary, nor does it conflict, in my judgment, with clause 3 of Rule XXI. There is no difficulty in my mind in solving this point of order; none whatever. Clause 3 of Rule XXI is controlling, absolutely and completely, upon this question; and if we will deal rightly with the question, we will dismiss from our thoughts entirely the House resolution of December last, for it plays no part at all in this controversy.

The resolution is a mere instruction to the Committee on Appropriations to report to the House what the Court of Claims reported to it. The resolution said to the Committee on Appropriations, you have got upon your files the action of the Court of Claims in the French spoliation cases, and we want that action reported to the House. We want it for the consideration of the House; we want it for the judgment of the House. And I insist, Mr. Chairman, that under that resolution the Committee on Appropriations, and I say it respectfully, transcended its power. It would have no right except by authority of this House to appropriate a single dollar to pay the spoliation claims. The House never instructed it to do so. The House never gave it authority to do so. It has been stated that the majority of the Committee on Appropriations are opposed to the payment of these spoliation claims. I am glad this is so, if the statement be correct.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SENEY. Certainly.

Mr. DIBBLE. Was not the instruction specific that this was to be reported in the general deficiency bill? And I will ask him whether that does not comply with the ordinary form?

Mr. SENEY. It might just as well have been an instruction for the Appropriations Committee to report it on the sundry civil bill or any other appropriation bill. The resolution simply indicated to the committee the bill under which the House wanted the matter brought before it. That is what the House did. Under the rules of this House I insist that if there be an appropriation to pay these claims, a bill for that purpose must be introduced just as other bills are introduced, and be referred, reported on, and considered in the same manner precisely as all other bills.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said there is no conflict at all between paragraph 3 of Rule XXI and the House resolution of December last. To my mind this matter is a problem easily solved. It seems to me there is no difficulty whatsoever if we give to the resolution of December last the meaning so plainly and clearly indicated by its express terms. If the gentlemen who draughted, or in whose interest it was draughted, failed to make the resolution what it should be to accomplish their wishes, upon them and upon nobody else rests the blame. In the greed and haste to get into the Treasury for money for these French spoliation claimants they did not move in the right direction. They failed to get into that resolution that which would effect their purpose, and I repeat, sir, that at their doors lies all the blame.

Mr. CANNON. I want to speak to the point of order without referring to the merits of the proposition. The majority of this House referred this resolution by an order to the Committee on Appropriations. I have not the resolution before me, but in substance it ordered the committee to report these claims for the consideration of the House. Two days after this action the rules were adopted that are said by inference to repeal the order of the House. I believe that is the position taken here. Now I take it that the Chairman of the committee knows the whole subject so well that he would not construe the resolution unless he was forced to do so in such manner as to deprive the majority of the House from doing whatever it sees proper to do.

Mr. BURNES. That is the rule.

Mr. CANNON. The right of the House to do what it chooses is always advanced by the Speaker in the construction of the rules. The rules are made for the use of the House, not the House for the rules. For instance, take Rule XI:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, viz: Subjects relating to, etc.

The Chair is familiar with the rule. Yet it has always been held, notwithstanding the rule, that the House may make a different reference, and when the different reference is made it gives jurisdiction to the committee notwithstanding the letter of the rule.

Now, I do not see that there is much trouble in letting the order made by the House under which these claims are reported stand, and let the rule stand. It is the plainest, commonest principle of construction that provisions or statutes covering the same subject shall be so construed as to uphold each provision if possible. I do not know that I could say any more if I were to talk two hours. It seems clear to me that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will let me interrupt him a moment I will say that the gentleman did not say whether he had looked to Rule XXVIII. That has a bearing on the order made on the 19th of December, and I will read it:

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion thereof.

Now, there was no formal or technical notice given that the order made on the 19th of December should be rescinded. It stood there. Although the Committee on Rules did report the rules of the House on the 21st of December, there was no formal rescinding of the order which was made on the 19th of December. I call the attention of the gentleman to that fact; but I know he has knowledge of the rules.

While I am on my feet, if you will permit me, I desire to say the Committee on Rules never touched the order made by this House on the 19th of December. I do not mean to say that I know; I do not know what might have occurred inside of the meeting-room, but that committee made their report on the 21st day of December, and it is found by the records of this House that the Speaker still continued to refer these reports to the Committee on Appropriations. I presume he, of all men, would know what occurred in the meetings of the Committee on Rules. Now, the general rules of the House were reported to be adopted; yet, sir, there was no formal motion made for the rescinding of this order; and I take it upon that point, and upon the points which have just been discussed, that the order stands, because it has not been rescinded.

Mr. BURNES. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment. Mr. Chairman, the hour of adjournment is almost at hand, and unless we can have an understanding that this debate shall close at once the committee may as well rise.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will only say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that there stands the order of the House made on the 19th of December; no motion was ever made to rescind that order as required by the rules. It stands there, and you can not efface it.

Mr. COBB. Let me remind the gentleman that the rules of the House have no retroactive effect at all, and that therefore the rule which he has read has no relation whatever to what had been done preceding the adoption of the rules.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. But preceding their adoption notice was given upon the record that the House desired that the Committee on Appropriations should have jurisdiction over this subject. That jurisdiction was conferred by a direct vote of this House, by a direct order of the House. Now, the House has never rescinded that order, and even the adoption of these general rules for the government of the House can not rescind it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And it was never intended to do so.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, was recognized, but yielded to Mr. BURNES.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, in order to test the judgment of the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the session may be continued for half an hour, at the end of which time the Chairman shall pass upon the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. We have the whole fall to discuss this matter, so why need we extend the session to-day? [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNES. Then I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The House then, on motion of Mr. KILGORE (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CLARDY: A bill (H. R. 11249) amendatory of an act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., approved February 3, 1887—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LIND: A bill (H. R. 11250) granting a pension to Braddock F. Stocking—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE: A bill (H. R. 11251) for the relief of William W. Beck—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MCCREARY: A bill (H. R. 11252) for the relief of James Clark—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DOUGHERTY: Petition for the extension of the Government telegraph line from Jupiter, Fla., to a point on Lake Worth—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MCCOMAS: Petition of F. O. Medley, for payment of his war claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MACDONALD: Petition of 40 citizens of the Third district of Minnesota, for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. PAYSON: Petition of Job E. Meggnier, of Livingston County, Illinois, for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 23, 1888.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. A. W. PITZER, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SARAH C. ANDERSON—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 2370, entitled "An act granting a pension to Sarah C. Anderson and children under sixteen years of age."

William H. Anderson, the husband and the father of the beneficiaries named in this bill, enlisted on the 27th day of August, 1862, and is reported as sick or absent a large part of his short term of service. He was discharged April 23, 1863, to date November 5, 1862, on a surgeon's certificate of disability for "tertiary syphilis, with ulcerated throat and extensive nodes on the tibia of both legs."

He never filed an application for pension; he was admitted to an insane asylum in September, 1883, suffering with epilepsy, chronic diarrhea, and dementia, and died of pneumonia on the 26th day of February, 1884.

His symptoms and troubles after his discharge, so far as they are stated, are entirely consistent with the surgeon's certificate of disability given at the time of his discharge, and there seems to be an entire lack of testimony connecting in any reasonable way his death with any incident of his military service.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 22, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the bill, with the accompanying message, be referred to the Committee on Pensions, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN W. REYNOLDS—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States: which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 1542, entitled "An act granting a pension to John W. Reynolds."

The bill describes this beneficiary as being "late of the One hundred and fifty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry."

He filed a claim in 1872 that he was a deputy United States provost-marshal for the Twelfth Ohio district from October, 1864, to March, 1865, and that in December, 1864, while ascending a stairway to arrest two deserters who had been drafted, a barrel of cider was rolled down upon him, by which he was severely injured.

The claim having been rejected on the ground that the claimant was not entitled to a pension as a civil employé of the Government, he afterwards, and in January, 1888, informed the bureau that he was drafted in November, 1864, while serving as assistant deputy provost-marshal, and was sworn in and reserved for home duty, and was discharged from the One hundred and fifty-first Ohio Volunteers. The records of the War Department show that John W. Reynolds served in the One hundred and fifty-first Ohio Regiment from May 2, 1864, to August 27, 1864.

It is perfectly apparent that this beneficiary was injured while acting as a deputy assistant provost-marshal, arresting deserters for the pay and rewards allowed him, and that his injuries were not at all connected with actual military service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the bill, with the accompanying message, be referred to the Committee on Pensions, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES E. KABLER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 2616, entitled "An act granting a pension to James E. Kabler."

This beneficiary enlisted August 10, 1862. He is reported as absent sick for November and December, 1862; present for January and February, 1863; on the rolls for March and April he is reported as deserted, and for May and June as under arrest. On the 17th of September, 1863, after having been in the service a little over a year, he was mustered out with his company with the remark, "Absent without leave and returned to duty with loss of fifty-two days' pay by order of General Boyle." The charge of desertion does not appear to have been removed.

He filed a claim for pension in 1870 on account of quinsy alleged to have been contracted about December 7, 1862, with some evidence to support the claim. Three medical examinations fail to establish the existence of this disease in a pensionable degree, and it is reported to me from the Pension Bureau that in March, 1882, the family physician of the beneficiary stated that though he had practiced in his family for eight or nine years, he had no recollection of treating him for quinsy or any other disease.

It seems to me that neither the service nor the alleged disability of this beneficiary are of a meritorious character.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 22, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Pensions, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

P. E. PARKER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 3038, entitled "An act for the relief of P. E. Parker."

Mr. Parker was a surety with six other persons upon an official bond given by one Franklin Travis, a collector of internal revenue, which bond was dated on the 9th day of May, 1867. A few years after that the collector became a defaulter to the Government for something over $27,000. Suit was commenced against the sureties upon the bond, and the defense was presented in their behalf that by reason of the imposition of new duties and responsibilities upon the collector after the execution of the bond, his sureties were released. Judgment however, passed against them, and the property of the beneficiary named in this bill was sold upon said judgment, for the sum of $2,366.95. But only $1,793.16 of such amount was paid into the United States Treasury, the remainder having been applied to the payment of fees and expenses.

After the application of this sum to the payment of the judgment, a bill was passed by the Congress relieving all these sureties from liability upon the bond. It appears that the amount above stated was all the money collected thereupon. The grant of the relief of these sureties by the Congress apparently was the same interposed by them to the suit in which the judgment was recovered.

The present bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the surety, Parker, the sum of $2,336.95, the entire amount for which his property was sold, though the Senate committee, to which the bill was referred, reported in favor of reducing this sum to $1,793.16, the amount actually received by the United States upon its indebtedness.

It seems to me that the action of Congress in relieving these sureties was generous in the extreme, and if money was to be refunded which was apparently legally recovered and collected it should not exceed the amount the Government actually received. The Government is in no default and should be put to no expense in refunding the small sum recovered on account of the defalcation of its officer, whose good conduct this beneficiary guarantied. I think it would better subserve public interests if no further relief should be granted than that already afforded.

There is another fact reported to me which deprives this surety of any equitable claim for further relief. It appears from an examination of this matter that the man who is now attempting to be reimbursed this money from the Government Treasury commenced a suit against his co-sureties for this identical money on the ground of their liability with him, and that he actually collected from two of them in such suit the sum of $1,747.16.

If this is true it is speaking mildly of the claim he now makes against the Government to say that it should not have been presented.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 22, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask from what committee was the bill reported?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Claims, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

DAVID H. LUTMAN—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 2206, entitled "An act granting a pension to David H. Lutman."

The beneficiary named in this bill was pensioned in 1885 on account of spinal irritation, the result of measles.

In 1886 he filed a claim for increase of pension, alleging rheumatism, and the board of examining surgeons at Cumberland, Md., upon an examination, found no evidence of spinal irritation or rheumatism, and he was dropped from the pension-rolls on the ground that the disability for which he was pensioned had ceased to exist.

He afterwards filed medical and lay testimony tending to show that he suffered from disease of the back, legs, and arms, and he was thereupon and on the 8th day of October, 1886, again examined by the board of examining surgeons at Hagerstown, Md., who reported as follows:

"We have stripped him, and find a splendid specimen, square built from the ground up, muscles well developed, his appearance indicative of perfect health; no curvature of spine, disease or irritation of spinal cord; no atrophy of any muscles nor evidence of weakness; no impairment of motion anywhere."

If there is any value to be placed upon the reports of these examining boards, the refusal of the Pension Bureau to restore this beneficiary to the rolls was fully justified; and this is not a proper case, in my opinion, for interference with that determination.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 22, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the message, with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Pensions, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARGARET B. TODD—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 645, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret B. Todd."

This bill does not describe the beneficiary as related to any soldier of the war, but from other data it is found that she is the widow of Frank G. Todd, who served as a private in the One hundred and eighteenth Volumteer Infantry from July, 1863, to May, 1864, when he was transferred to the Navy. It appears that he served in the Navy from May 13, 1864, until April 10, 1866. He died in January, 1878, from exhaustion, as stated by the physician who attended him.

There is scarcely a particle of satisfactory evidence showing his condition from the time of his discharge to 1871, and there is almost an entire lack of proof showing a connection between his death and any incident of his service. The widow in her application to the Pension Bureau for a pension states that she has children who were born in 1870, 1871, and 1878.

There seems to be no record of any disability during the husband's service in the Army, and the only mention of disability while in the Navy is an entry on the 30th of May, 1864, showing that he was admitted to treatment for "syphilis secondary."

The widow's claim is still pending in the Pension Bureau.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 22, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Pensions, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL-BANK DEPOSITS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of August 15, 1888, the names of national banks designated as depositories of public money, the location thereof, the amounts deposited therewith, and the amount and kind of securities pledged for the repayment of such deposits, August 1, 1888; which, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

SUPPRESSION OF INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution (S. R. 78) appropriating $100,000 for the prevention and extirpation of yellow fever in the United States will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection, Senate joint resolution No. 102, on the same subject, having been passed yesterday.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Powell, Wenigmann & Smith, cigar manufacturers, citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the special-stamp tax on the boxes of imported cigars; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of citizens of Fox Lake, Wis., and vicinity, praying for the enactment of a law whereby the widow of the late Norman Powers may be again placed upon the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of the Indiana Soldiers' Monument Committee, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, at Indianapolis, Ind., praying that an appropriation be made to assist in the erection of a soldiers and sailors' monument in Indianapolis; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of C. M. Furman and other citizens of South Carolina and Florida, praying for the confirmation of the title of a certain Spanish land grant to Jesse Fish, sr., of Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I report back from the Committee on the Judiciary a petition of citizens of Texas, praying for an investigation into the circumstances attending the alleged murder of a man named John F. Graham at sea on the ship Comal, with a short written report stating that it appears to the committee, on an examination of the papers, that there is no legislation required; that it is a matter for departmental inquiry and investigation; and the committee has accordingly sent information to the Attorney-General upon the subject. We ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, if there be no objection, and it will lie on the table, and the report will be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I venture to report in behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. 4239) for the relief of P. H. Winston, which we have not considered, but which was evidently misreferred. A bill just like it was considered by the Committee on Claims, and reported by that committee, and passed by the Senate. In the mean time the House of Representatives passed a bill of the same character and sent it here, and by some inadvertence or want of recollection in regard to the former report it was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary. I therefore venture on behalf of the committee, without any formal order from it, to report the bill back and ask that the committee be discharged, and that the bill be sent to the Committee on Claims, which has already had the subject at this session under consideration.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3438) to refund illegal internal-revenue tax collected of the late Alexander W. Baldwin as United States district judge for the district of Nevada, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3474) amendatory of an act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., approved February 3, 1887.

Mr. President, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, I ask the Senate to consider this bill now. I will state the whole effect of the amendment. It will be remembered by Senators who took any interest in the matter that some time ago we passed a bill authorizing the construction of a bridge at St. Louis, Mo., which elicited considerable debate, but finally passed unanimously through the Senate and through the other House, and became a law. That bill prohibited a stockholder in any other bridge company on the Mississippi River, from its head to its mouth, from owning any stock in this corporation. It was intended at the time honestly to prevent any idea of collusion between this company and any other bridge company on the river.

It is found now, when the bonds of the company are attempted to be negotiated, that the objection is made by capitalists that if they put their money into an enterprise with that sort of a clause in the act of incorporation, the forfeiture of the franchise would be imminent, because the stockholders in other bridge companies might obtain stock without the knowledge of the officers of this corporation, and by the terms of the act, which is now the law, the simple fact of a stockholder in any other bridge company being a stockholder in this company would work eo instanti a forfeiture.

When I simply state the fact that the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company have a bridge across the Mississippi River above St. Louis which belongs to the corporation, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, and that that corporation has ten thousand stockholders scattered all over the Union, it will be seen at once that no capitalist would put a dollar into this enterprise if the fact that one of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy stockholders being the owner of a single share of stock in this corporation would work a forfeiture of its franchise.

This amendment of the recent act simply strikes out the word "stockholder" and provides that a stockholder in no other corporation shall be a director or officer.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to inquire——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first ascertain whether there be objection to the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the provisions of the bill otherwise than he has described are such as were in the act recently passed.

Mr. VEST. They are exactly the same. That is the only amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the bill ought to be amended where the word "bridge" occurs in the first line on the second page. It speaks of the consolidation of one bridge with another. I think it is a mere clerical mistake. It should be "bridge company."

Mr. VEST. Yes; that is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It occurs twice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 14, after the first word "bridge," it is proposed to insert the word "company;" and in the same line, after the second word "bridge," it is proposed to insert the word "company;" so as to read:

The St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Company, or its successors or assigns, shall not agree or consent to the consolidation of this bridge company with any other bridge company across the Mississippi River, or to the pooling of the earnings of this bridge company with the earnings of any other bridge company on said river, etc.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to add as an additional section:

The right to amend or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

That probably is not necessary, but——

Mr. VEST. That is in the original act, and I suppose it would apply to this enactment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I think it is safer to have it in.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection to it. It is the ordinary provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

SEC. 2. The right to amend or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF CLINTON G. COLGATE.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2771) entitled "A bill for the relief of the estate of Clinton G. Colgate, deceased, late of the city of New York," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of the acts entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, and "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said acts, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3479) granting a pension to Sarah J. Powers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 3480) granting a pension to Henry Mitchell Youngblood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3481) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to examine certain claims of persons who owned or occupied buildings on the Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, which had been condemned by the Hot Springs Commission and afterwards burned, and to fix a reasonable value for each of said buildings from the evidence now on file in the Interior Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3482) to enable parties to construct, maintain, and operate a wagon-road to the top of Pike's Peak, in the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3483) for the relief of David R. Gregg and William P. Gregg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 106) for the distribution of the award in favor of the La Abra Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. EVARTS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

KANSAS RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the letter of the Secretary of the Interior of May 15, 1888, in response to the resolution of the Senate of January 17, 1888, together with accompanying letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, papers, and map, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and returned to the Secretary of the Interior.

I will simply state for the information of the Senate that that document has been printed, and it is desirable now to have it returned to the Secretary of the Interior in order that he may certify it, to be used in a suit in which the Government is the complaining party.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have looked at it. There is no objection to the course suggested by the Senator from Kansas.

The resolution was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ALLEGED TIMBER DEPREDATIONS.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate without delay with copies of all reports, affidavits, and communications upon which he based the statements in his letter to Hon. JAMES N. BURNES, of the House of Representatives, dated August 18, 1888, with regard to the following amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill:

"That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used in the investigation of any case or the prosecution of any person in the mining region of the United States for cutting, for mining or domestic purposes, dwarfed or scrubby timber unfit to be sawed or hewed into lumber of commercial value."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VEST. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule, and be printed.

Mr. STEWART. Is there objection to its present consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. STEWART. Then I shall ask leave to-morrow morning to call it up and submit a few remarks explanatory thereof.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will come up to-morrow of itself.

Mr. STEWART. I shall submit some remarks on it to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be laid before the Senate to-morrow morning in its order.

Mr. STEWART. That will do.

HOUR OF MEETING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], coming over from yesterday.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. EDMUNDS was read, as follows:

Resolved, That hereafter, and until otherwise ordered, the daily sessions of the Senate shall commence at 12 o'clock meridian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to add to the resolution:

Unless a majority of Senators present when the Senate shall adjourn shall vote to adjourn to another hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read as it will be if the amendment is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That hereafter, and until otherwise ordered, the daily sessions of the Senate shall commence at 12 o'clock meridian, unless a majority of Senators present when the Senate shall adjourn shall vote to adjourn to another hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EFFECT OF IRRIGATION ON LOWER VALLEYS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it consider the bill (S. 3276) granting restoration of pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge, which was reported by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is further morning business.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will delay, then, until that is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution presented on a previous day by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB August 21, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inquire and report to the Senate at its next session the extent to which the diversion of the waters of the Platte and Arkansas Rivers and their tributaries in Colorado, for irrigation or other purposes, affects the flow of the water of those streams in the lower valleys, and especially during the growing season; and whether the title conveyed by the Government to lands fronting on said streams covers the privilege of diverting water therefrom beyond that necessary for use thereon for irrigation and mining purposes, and to report what action is needed to protect the rights of riparian owners along the course of said streams in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. What committee does the resolution propose shall investigate the question? I did not understand it.

Mr. PLUMB. It is a call on the Secretary of the Interior for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The resolution was read.

Mr. TELLER. Has that just been offered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on a previous day.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to look at it. It is a most remarkable proposition. I think that it needs some amendment. I am not prepared to move an amendment in haste, now.

Mr. PLUMB. I will consent that the resolution shall go over until to-morrow without action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will renew my request for unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 3276 at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who I understand desires to proceed this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. MITCHELL. I offered a resolution yesterday relating to disturbances in Corea, which on my own motion was laid over until to-day. It would naturally come up in regular order this morning. I desire to detain the Senate about fifteen minutes when it does come up. If my friend from New York [Mr. EVARTS] desires to go on with his speech I shall not call it up at this time, but I shall reserve the right to call it up at some convenient time during the day with the permission of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order, and the first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1944, a bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams.

BUST OF GARIBALDI.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask that now may be taken up the resolution of the Senate which was reported from the Joint Library Committee and laid on the table, accompanied by a notice on my part that when it was taken up I would ask leave to accompany it with some observations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution reported from the Committee on the Library August 17, 1888, as follows:

Whereas the Italians, residents of the city of Washington and citizens of the United States, have, through the president of the Society for a Monument to Garibaldi, presented to the United States a life-size marble bust of that great patriot and distinguished representative citizen of Italy, Guiseppe Garibaldi; and

Whereas the Joint Committee on the Library have, under authority of the statute (Revised Statutes section 1831), accepted the same for and in behalf of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States expresses its sense of the patriotism and liberality which prompted this noble gift from these adopted citizens of Italian birth, and extends to them, the countrymen of the great champion of Italian liberty, the assurance of the admiration of the people of this land for his noble life and distinguished deeds.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the Joint Committee on the Library has authority by law to accept in behalf of Congress any gift that may be made of works of art and to take order for their disposition and display in the Capitol. In pursuance of that authority the committee accepted in behalf of Congress this gift of the Italian patriotic citizens who have presented to the Government this noble work of art and this fitting monument to the great character and the great fame of Garibaldi.

The death of Garibaldi occurred in 1882, when he was, I think, in his seventy-fifth year. Very soon after that a body of Italian citizens of the United States, residents here, formed a society for the purpose of making some permanent commemoration of their great admiration of Garibaldi and of their great respect and affection for the United States, their adopted home.

Under the lead of an eminent physician and a public-spirited citizen of this city, Dr. Verdi, this organization proceeded to procure the execution of a work of art which should be an illustration, as well, of the genius in the art of the sculptor that their country is so prolific in. An eminent artist, Giuseppe Martegani, has produced as fine a work as could be offered from any sculptor, and of as beautiful a specimen of the famous marble of Italy as could be selected from all its quarries.

The committee have taken order, on the receipt of this completed bust, that it should be placed on a suitable pedestal, which accompanied the gift, in the principal corridor of the Senate galleries, over the main entrance to the Senate-house on the eastern front. There, undoubtedly, many of the Senators have examined this beautiful work, and those who have had any opportunity to compare it with the descriptions of this famous general and patriot, will have perceived that it is an accurate representation of his features and a noble expression of his character.

Garibaldi was born in very humble circumstances. A native of Nice, the son of a sailor, and the grandson of a sailor, he was brought up to the sea in the ordinary capacity of a sailor before the mast. Nor had he any great associations, either in respect of education or of kinship; and from the beginning, until he opened into an illustrious path of the glory of his country and of himself, his lot was cast in the most ordinary condition of life.

But this great good fortune happened to him. In early life he was thrown into companionship with some of those burning spirits among the students of Italy, whose names afterwards became famous as patriots, and his native genius drank in from these cultivated minds all the inspiration that had moved their hearts and inflamed their hopes.

It is a notable thing of Garibaldi that, without education and without other than the casual associations that I have mentioned, there grew up in him a spirit of wide investigation, a thorough appreciation of and a deep reverence for the great glory of Rome as transmitted from ancient times. His spirit, too, was lighted, as by a torch, with an inextinguishable hate to tyranny in every form. But with this deep reverence for ancient Rome he also nursed and cherished a dear love for Italy as it lay before him, dismembered and bound by tyranny.

As early as 1834 he had become so enlisted and so ardent and courageous that rather a fantastic desire than a formed hope for the liberty of Italy first brought him to public notice. He by good fortune escaped from Genoa in disguise, to avoid arrest, and a few days afterwards he saw for the first time his name in a newspaper, and that name was coupled with a sentence of death.

Garibaldi pursued this ordinary tenor of life, his wandering fortunes, always honest and laborious, planning for nothing but for an opportunity to arrive when he could play his part in securing the unity of Italy. We find him, after 1840, for some years fighting in South America in behalf of Montevideo against the oppressions of a neighboring nation.

One would not expect to find in this experience much of a school (for he was, through these years, afloat or on land as might be, in the lead of any force that would follow him) for the great scenes that were to await him in Europe. Nevertheless the same great powers of mind, of authority, of predominant impetuosity and courage, his readiness to try conclusions against tyranny and oppression at whatever odds, found here a preparation of spirit and of discipline better than any schools of military science or tactics could give him.

He was back in Italy at the period in 1848–'49 when all Europe was pervaded with a spirit of revolution, and he bore a part, with the great triumvirs of whom Mazzini was the chief, in that short-lived effort of founding a Roman republic.

That failing, Garibaldi became for two years a resident of New York or its vicinity, where he became well known to our citizens, and his marked character, although not then distinguished by great achievements, encouraged in the knowledge and expectations of those about him the hope that he would have great things to do for Italy.

Although Garibaldi was turning everything in his mind and in his action towards the great consummations which he aimed at, it was not until 1859 that there came the first opportunity of opening that brilliant career of arms that dazzled the world.

As general-in-chief of the volunteers he took part in the war between France and Italy allied and the Austrian Empire. That war ended with the peace of Villa-franca, and, practically, with the annexation of Lombardy to Piedmont under Victor Emanuel. This constituted the first stage of Italian unity and independence.

These preparations, these movements, and first steps towards unity and strength among the divided provinces or kingdoms of Italy had, in 1860, reached a point where Garibaldi found that he could strike a decisive blow, and he descended upon the island of Sicily with only a thousand soldiers. The Kingdom of Naples, under King Bomba, as he is generally called in history, had thirty thousand troops on the island, and it was well fortified throughout.

By ingenious strategy, Garibaldi, after effecting a landing, threw himself, with his thousand men, into Palermo, and there, raising the population to follow his flag, he encountered the 20,000 troops of the King in that city, and fought them through every street, and hand to hand, till Palermo was under the control of Garibaldi and the 20,000 royal troops expelled from it. In less than three months he overran the whole island, meeting at every point and beating such rallies as the King's forces could make, until Garibaldi was the master of all of Sicily, and the royal troops were driven from it.

Victor Emanuel at this point, under some complication of diplomacy, sent an order to Garibaldi to be satisfied with this acquisition, and not attempt the Kingdom of Naples. Garibaldi sent back to the King a message, "You know how much I love you, but your order comes too late; Italy must be free." Crossing the Straits of Messina he entered Naples alone, the population carrying him in triumph, the King and his troops flying in panic from the city. Here for the first time a name was given to Garibaldi by his grateful fellow-citizens that has never ceased to be a part of his fame. "Liberator"—"Liberator of Italy"—hailed him as he entered the city of Naples.

But, Mr. President, the king did not surrender, and with 50,000 troops made a stand at a point of resistance of his own choice in the open plain, and defied the approach of Garibaldi with his troops of only 20,000 men, at Volturno. With these new levies, new soldiers, but lovers of freedom and of Italy, through a stubborn fight lasting a whole day, before sunset Garibaldi and his 20,000 followers routed the 50,000 troops of the king. King Bomba retired from his kingdom and never returned. In a few days after this final triumph Garibaldi met the king, Victor Emanuel, who would have stayed his hand, and took off his cap to him, with this simple salutation: "The Kingdom of Naples is yours."

Mr. President, we can all feel, I think, that there never was in a career of arms or in a triumph of a great cause a career or triumph that more completely turned on one man. It may be conceded that without Garibaldi these things would not have happened, and with Garibaldi and all who aided him these were great things to accomplish, either by himself or with his followers. Garibaldi refused every honor and every emolument, retired to Caprera, his little island home, off the coast of Sardinia, but 3 miles wide and 5 miles long. This place that he greatly loved he has made illustrious. Never for one moment, from the first step he made toward public action, public fame, public achievements, did he desire or accept any honors or emoluments for his great deeds for Italy.

Here for two years he meditated how he could compass the conquest of the Roman States, for without that acquisition Italy was not and could not be united. The time, however, had not arrived, as was supposed, when the Kingdom of Italy, so far as it had been consolidated, could attempt a solution of this great problem of the Roman States. While in his little home of Caprera the frigates of Victor Emanuel watched its shores to prevent his reaching the mainland. But Garibaldi escaped and undertook, then obviously prematurely, an attack upon Rome. At Aspromonte he was met by King Victor Emanuel's army, an army that he could not contend with either in strength or in the affections of his heart; but to him it was a bitter disappointment that he should thus be turned away from his purpose and checked in his own advancing glory for Italy by the king and the kingdom which he had so much exalted.

In 1863 Garibaldi by invitation visited England. His fame was great. The enthusiasm of the people of England for him was unbounded. It lit such a flame that the Government of that sedate kingdom found itself in an awkward predicament towards this guest; but at length it was politely intimated to Garibaldi that he should not prolong his stay. It was my fortune, Mr. President, to be in England at that time, and my delight there to make the personal acquaintance of Garibaldi.

I assure you that, with this remarkable career behind him, yet to be followed to more brilliant results, with this unbounded enthusiasm that agitated England in all quarters, in all circles of the great and of the common mass, Garibaldi's appearance, dress, attitude, conversation was as simple as you would conceive it to have been and as it was in which he appeared on the deck of one of his own South American corsairs or among the first thousand men which he threw into Palermo.

In 1866 the war broke out between Prussia and Italy against Austria, and Garibaldi was put in command of 50,000 troops to invade Austria and wrest from that great power the Tyrol provinces, which properly belonged, as Garibaldi and the Italians thought, to Italy. He carried everything before him, penetrating rapidly into the very heart of the country that he was to occupy and subdue. But, alas, again his own government stayed his hands; but then upon the very necessary and proper situation that by the loss of the battle of Sadowa and the armistice that followed, the war with Austria was at an end. But this was a bitter disappointment to Garibaldi, for acquisition, restoration, of what belonged to Italy was the darling passion of his heroism and of his statesmanship; and thus, when these provinces were in his grasp, to retire by the martial situations that had been produced elsewhere was a great disappointment to him.

In 1867 Garibaldi, still acting on his own movements and on his own resources of volunteer followers, undertook an attack upon Rome and was carried almost to the gates of Rome. But at Mentana he was met by the French army, which was then protecting the Roman states and Rome in the interest of the engagements which France had made, and it was impossible for him to proceed further. His time was not long delayed. In 1870 war came up between France and Prussia, and all the resources of the French were needed to cope with the great adversary that was waging that terrible war.

Then Italy by its King and by its troops entered Rome and Italy was united. But Garibaldi was not ready to relinquish his career of arms for liberty against strong power, though he had thus triumphed for his own country and for himself. He offered his services to the French Republic to carry on the war against Prussia, and there he won battle after battle with great prowess and great distinction. He had the singular honor, it is said, of taking the only battle trophy taken by the French from the Prussians throughout that war. It was a terrible battle at Dijon for that flag, and it was lost and won, back and forth, over heaps of corpses, but Garibaldi carried it off and kept it for France. The phrase went in France, as the war went against them, that if there had been more Garibaldis there would have been more victories for France.

He was chosen by the French in three departments a member of the Assembly of the Republic, but finding the scene uncongenial, he resigned and returned to Italy. At one time after his first triumphs for Italy he was chosen a member of the first Italian Parliament before the unity of all Italy had been accomplished. He went there, it is said, only for the purpose of reproaching Cavour that he had surrendered Nice to France, and immediately resigned and returned to Caprera. Hard fate for Garibaldi, born in Nice, that in the accomplished unity of Italy his own birthplace should be alienated to France!

From 1870 to 1882, when his death occurred, his health and his strength much broken, he passed his time in honorable occupations and efforts, but without any public rewards or desire for rewards.

In 1882 he was chosen to the Parliament of Italy, but his health wholly gave way and he retired to Caprera to die.

Mr. President, when all modern nations have looked back to ancient Rome, its long history, its crowd of geniuses, of heroes, of patriots, it would seem not likely in the renovation of Italy there should be found a name that should be added to that list and lose thereby no luster. Heroes, statesmen, lawyers, wise men, philosophers, and poets make out the long roll of ancient Roman glory. But, after all, though these, for history and for scholars, may make up the illustrious groups, for universal human nature there must be found, if the names are to live in the hearts and be ever on the lips of the human race, some "touch of nature that makes the whole world kin." The name of Lucretia, whose outraged virtue could bear no lighter expiation than her own life taken by her own hand, and whose blood, thus spilt, could brook no lesser vengeance than that the whole name and lineage and race and brood and breed of tyrant kings should be forever driven from the polity of Rome and a republic founded; of Cornelia, whose bright example of the fame and frame of Roman matronhood, throws into insignificance the pomps and attires and decorations of women; whose jewels of the Gracchi stand out to all the world as the glory of woman, as the mother of sons; of Horatius, who set his own strength and his own life against the tide of war at the bridge to hold it back long enough to cover the safety of the city; of Regulus, the monument of Roman faith, the hostage sent by Carthage to give advice to Rome concerning peace, and his promise to return if peace did not follow, who advised the Senate, for the glory and the interest of Rome, to make no peace with Carthage, and returned to Carthage to torture and to death—these names and such as these are names to be remembered by the world. These are the names of power, of fame; the names to conjure with; and Garibaldi's name, Garibaldi's inextinguishable name, shall be a name to conjure with, for liberty and love of country, so long as and wherever those great sentiments shall warm the human breast. [Applause.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble and resolution proposed by the Senator from New York.

The preamble and resolution were agreed to unanimously.

SARAH A. WOODBRIDGE..

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to give way to me for a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the consent of the Senate that it may consider a pension bill, which is the only remaining one upon the Calendar. It is Order of Business 2161.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the pending business may be informally laid aside, that he may move the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3276) granting restoration of pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge.

Mr. MANDERSON. Before the bill shall be read I simply desire to state that this bill was introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and has been reported by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], who is a member of the Committee on Pensions. I urge the consideration of this last remaining pension bill upon the Calendar, although not introduced or reported by me, for the reason that the recipient of this proposed pension is the mother of the adjutant of my regiment, who was killed at the battle of New Hope Church. This aged woman lost her husband and two sons during the war of the rebellion. She was the recipient of a pension as a widow, and some ten or fifteen years ago married again, which occasioned the loss of her pension. She married a Dr. Woodbridge, who is now a man of eighty years of age, nearly blind, without property, utterly unable to support her, and in fact he has virtually abandoned her for the last five years. Mrs. Woodbridge, who was Mrs. Brewer, is now nearly eighty years of age, and I hope there will be no opposition to the present consideration and passage of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of Sarah A. Woodbridge, widow of Anson L. Brewer, major and paymaster United States Army, her pension having been suspended by reason of her remarriage.

Mr. HARRIS. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, if the Senator desires.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. TURPIE August 22, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3276) granting a pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge, widow of Anson L. Brewer, late major and paymaster in United States Army, have examined the same, and report:

The object of this bill is to restore the claimant to the pension-roll. She was ormerly a pensioner of the United States on account of the death of her husband above named, who lost his life in a steam-boat explosion on the Mississippi the 3d of March, 1866, while traveling in the line of his duty as paymaster. Her son, Robert F. Brewer, was killed at the same time while in the line of duty in the same service. Another son, Capt. Charles Brewer, was killed in battle at Dallas, Ga., on the 28th day of March, 1864.

Shortly after the war the claimant remarried one Dr. Timothy Woodbridge, whereupon her pension ceased. This case was once before considered by this committee and was reported adversely, upon the ground that the facts alleged in support of her restoration to the pension-roll were not verified. The report was adopted by the Senate, and the bill indefinitely postponed July 24, 1888, but since that time the claimant has filed for the consideration of said committee a new application and new evidence, all verified under oath, stating the facts of her present condition.

The action of the Senate above spoken of has been reconsidered and the bill has been again referred to this committee.

From the affidavits of J. H. Wallace and Thomas W. Sanderson, as well as from her own sworn application, it appears that the second husband of the claimant, the said Dr. Woodbridge, is about seventy-eight years old, quite infirm, and almost blind, has no means of supporting his said wife, the claimant, and has contributed nothing toward her support for the last four years, and has, in fact, abandoned her.

The claimant herself is quite old and infirm; for the last two years she has been unable to do anything toward her own support and maintenance, is consequently dependent to some extent upon the aid of others.

Her condition is not likely to improve, rather apt to become worse. Her income from her little property inherited from her mother is not sufficient to afford her a maintenance.

The committee, therefore, under these circumstances, recommend her restoration to the roll and the passage of the bill herewith reported for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. Unless the Senate is prepared to liberalize the principles of the general pension laws so as to allow the dependent widows of deceased soldiers in all cases to continue their pensions after remarriage, I think this is a very dangerous precedent to be set in a special bill; and for that reason, and that reason only, I shall record my vote against the passage of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 3226) granting the Leavenworth Rapid Transit Railway Company the right to construct and operate its railroad through a portion of the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; and

A bill (S. 1880) declaring that certain water-reserve lands in the State of Wisconsin are and have been subject to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 4792) to pension J. W. Porter.

The message further announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. CASWELL managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3060) granting right of way to the Pima Land and Water Company across Fort Lowell military reservation, in Arizona, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 165) for the relief of H. C. Markham;

A bill (H. R. 6371) granting a pension to Jesse M. Stilwell;

A bill (H. R. 7013) to place the name of Delia Newman on pension-roll; and

A bill (H. R. 8037) for the relief of Thomas Strodder.

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to postpone the consideration of the Calendar and take up the resolution in regard to the Louisiana election investigation.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER July 19, 1888, with respect to the recent election in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the incursion into this debate yesterday of the Senators from Texas was not unwelcome, for it served usefully to call the attention of the Senate and also of those Senators to the hanging of three colored Republicans in Flewellyn and Graball precincts in Washington County, Texas, on the 2d day of December, 1886, and also to the massacre of nine negroes on the 28th day of February, 1888, at Spanish Camp, Wharton County, Texas, who were surrounded in a dwelling which the courts had adjudged to be theirs, and after the building was set on fire and they were one by one driven out, were shot to death by a Wharton County mob. The Senators have promised that they will give attention to these proceedings with which they affect not to be familiar, and at some time to tell the Senate and the country their opinion of those outrages; and they have also, at least one Senator has promised the Senate, rashly I think, that he will show that such occurrences are common in the North——

Mr. COKE. Does the Senator allude to me in that remark?

Mr. CHANDLER. I had the honor to allude to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. COKE. Then the Senator has entirely misunderstood my remarks on that subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. The remarks are of record.

Mr. COKE. I did not say that I would show that occurrences of that character were common in Northern and Eastern States. I said nothing of that sort. I did say that I would show that frauds upon the elective franchise, upon the right of suffrage, and intimidation upon those who were entitled to it, were much more common in the Northern and Eastern States than force was in the South.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator's statement is of record. If he proposes to make Democratic frauds in the North an offset to Democratic political murders of negroes in the South, I shall find no fault.

But the diversion led me to omit some portion of the statement which I desired to make in reference to the parish of Iberia, Louisiana, and I desire now to read a statement from a Louisiana Republican, whose name I withhold at present, but which I will give, with his permission, to the committee if an investigation is ordered. He writes me as follows:

IBERIA PARISH.

The telegraphic news from Washington this morning is that you will call up your resolution next Wednesday relative to the late election here. In this connection I desire to state that, if possible, in referring to the author of any of the facts furnished not to mention my name; not that everything sent you by me is not the truth and to prove which I guaranty, but the fact is I am a colored man and affairs are so "ticklish" here that in the event of your resolution failing to pass they might work themselves up into a spirit that would force me to leave the State or else kill me. If the resolution passes I care not for them, as the investigation and its results upon the Presidential election will hold them in check. In the event of the failure to elect Harrison and Morton I shall have to leave, and that pretty quick afterward. But to the Republicans in this neck of the woods it looks as if the loyal North would oust the free-trade Democratic-Confederate Administration from power.

The correspondent also says:

I mail you this day copy of the Picayune and Messenger, both marked.

The articles to which your attention is called refer to the killing of negroes in Iberia and other parishes of the Third Congressional district, now represented by Mr. GAY.

There seems to be a preconcerted plan on the part of the Democrats to so demoralize and terrorize the Republican vote of the district that in the election this fall the Democrats may again carry it. The district is Republican by a majority of 7,000, and would surely elect a Republican to Congress if bulldozing and other methods were not resorted to by the Democrats. In Lafourche, St. Mary, and Assumption Parishes the killing of negroes is a weekly occurrence. In St. Martin Parish the colored justices of the peace and constables, as well as three colored members of the town council of St. Martinsville, were forced to resign. The only charge against them is that they are Republicans. Besides the office-holders who were forced to resign, a number of colored Republicans have been made to leave the parish.

In this way another vote is to be made in the House of Representatives in favor of a high tariff duty on sugar, but for the destruction of all the other protected industries of the country except perhaps rice. The correspondent says:

Iberia Parish is noted for the so-called uprisings of the negroes. At every recurring election the daily press here abound with long articles, especially concocted, about the threatened danger to the whites by the negroes of Iberia Parish. The facts in the case are simply these: In Iberia Parish there are over 800 white Republicans, and they together with the black Republicans make the parish Republican by some 500 or 600. To do away with this majority the Democrats generally stuff the ballot-boxes or murder the voters. In the April election they did the former; in the contest now coming on they are doing the latter.

To show you the extent of their intolerant spirit I refer you to a letter written by Mr. W. B. Merchant to Senator SHERMAN, under date of April 24, 1888.

Mr. Merchant resided in New Iberia Parish for a number of years, is an ex-Confederate soldier, a man of pluck and brains. He committed a crime in the eyes of the white people when he became a Republican. Under President Arthur he was postmaster of New Orleans, and in the State election in April last was a candidate for State senator from the Eleventh senatorial district, composed of Iberia, Lafayette, and St. Martin Parishes. In Iberia Parish Mr. Merchant considered that he had been cheated out of his vote and talked of making a contest. The Democrats hearing of this became nervous, went to the court-house, abstracted the election returns from the clerk's office, and Captain Pharr, of the State militia, backed by a small mob, waited upon Mr. Merchant and ordered him to leave. Mr. Merchant has since left the State, and is now located at El Paso, Tex., engaged in the law and banking business.

I also have in my hand the petition of Frederick Veasy addressed to the judge of the twenty-first judicial district court in and for the parish of Iberia, in which he claims that he was elected sheriff, and that Alfred G. Farmer, the opposing candidate, was not elected, although he has been counted in.

I will not insert this petition in the body of my remarks, but will ask permission to place it in an appendix.

I come now to the parish of

TERRE BONNE,

where the vote returned was 1,687 for Nicholls, 2,033 for Warmoth, with 1,957 white voters and 2,596 colored voters, and I have in my hands a letter from R. B. Johnson, dated at New Orleans, April 25, 1888, written to Maj. Andrew Hero, which was introduced by the Senator from Kansas in his speech of the 1st of May, and which I will not read. It shows the terrorism attempted in Terre Bonne Parish, and particularly the participation therein of Mr. Tobias Gibson, a brother of the Senator from Louisiana.

NEW ORLEANS, April 25, 1888.

SIR: On Friday morning between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock I was awakened by hearing some one calling at my gate. I did not answer, but quietly jumped out of bed and went to the window, peeped through the blinds to see who was calling me. I knew it was Mr. Tobias Gibson, the brother of Senator RANDALL GIBSON, but to be sure it was him calling me I got up on a chair in my house and peeped through the blinds, as I always keep the upper blind open, and in looking through the opening I saw and recognized Mr. Gibson, and I am sure that it was him who was calling me. He called me for at least fifteen minutes, but I did not answer. I also recognized Mr. Millard Thomas, the Democratic candidate for the house of representatives, and Mr. John R. Grinnage, also a Democratic candidate for the house of representatives at the election held April 17, 1888, and several others that I well knew. There was about fifteen or twenty other persons that I did not know.

After failing to answer Mr. Gibson he said: "Johnson, if you do not come out, I will come in and get you." He then ordered his men to open fire on my house and kill everybody therein; they fired about thirty or forty shots with their Winchester rifles. I returned the fire from inside for the purpose of keeping them from breaking the door and taking me out. They then began firing again and fired about as many shots as before or more; they failed to hit me, as I was between the armoir and the wall. In my house was my family, composed of my wife and two boys, also three other women; they would have been killed only for my coolness and presence of mind in getting them to lay flat on the floor. I do not think they would have left as quick as they did, but I suppose they thought that they had killed everybody in the house; but Providence let it so happen that no one was killed.

I infer that the cause of the trouble was my action in the late canvass. The Republicans met in convention at Morgan City, La., and indorsed the nomination of Judge B. F. Winchester for judge of the nineteenth judicial district, comprising the parishes of St. Mary's and Terre Bonne. We made this indorsement by the request of one wing of the Democratic party of Terre Bonne. A day after the indorsement was made the Democratic executive committee of the parish of Terre Bonne also nominated Judge Winchester. They then met the following night in the Firemen's Hall, in the town of Houma, in a meeting numbering 150 or 200, all Democrats. No Republican was admitted. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Thomas L. Winder, chairman of the Democratic campaign committee, who used the following language in his speech: "For twenty-five years this parish has been held in bondage by the Republican party with a negro majority; by the eternal God we shall deliver ourselves from the bondage of the negro and the Republican party. This is a white man's government, and this parish shall be placed in the column of the other Democratic parishes, regardless of the cost and what may be the penalty, if it takes blood to do it." Speeches as violent were made by the other speakers.

These speeches alarmed the colored people much. Knowing that they have a majority of at least 600 votes in Terre Bonne Parish, the leaders of the Republican party made an appeal to the planters and stated that if they would give them the protection of life and safety of the ballot and a fair count they would support the candidate of their choice for judge. They pledged themselves to do that, and they did so; they asked of the Republican sheriff to appoint a planter as a deputy sheriff at each poll. The sheriff did so. There was no trouble all the day of election because of the presence of each planter (deputy sheriff) with a Winchester rifle on his shoulder. By that means we succeeded in electing the Republican State ticket and all the Republican parish officers, and Judge Allen, whom the Republican leaders promised to support. Being unable to carry out their threats and plans before the election, they sought revenge after the election by calling one man from his house and putting thirty bullets through him. After killing one man they came to my house to kill me also, but I was not fool enough to go to the door and be led out by them.

This man Tobias Gibson was the captain and leader of the mob. He said he wanted to have the two Democratic members of the house of representatives elected in order to secure those two votes for his brother as United States Senator.

This man Gibson was a candidate on the Democratic ticket for district attorney.

I was compelled to leave my home in Terre Bonne Parish to save my life; also a large number of Republicans were compelled to leave, and are now refugees in your city.

Respectfully, yours, etc.,

R. B. JOHNSON.

Maj. ANDREW HERO, Jr., City.

I have also the original statement of Butler Adams, dated at New Orleans, July 13, 1888, a copy of which I give:

NEW ORLEANS, July 13, 1888.

While living in Houma, Terre Bonne Parish, my former home, during the month of April, some time before the last election, I was approached by one Henry Hellier, candidate for ward constable on the Democratic ticket, and by him requested to vote for him and the Democratic ticket; which I declined to do.

On the night of April 17 (election day) I was again approached and asked by this Hellier whether I had voted for him and the Democratic ticket, and upon my answering in the negative, he said it was all right, that he would "fix it all right." Some four or five days thereafter I was waited upon by a committee of four, namely, William Lirette, Charles Nicholls, Millard F. Thomas, and Clay Chauvin, and was told by them that in the future I would have to vote the Democratic ticket or else leave the parish forever. Again, some three days after, a committee of three, namely, Charles Nicholls, William Lirette, and Millard F. Thomas, waited on me and requested me to deliver up my rifle, which I refused to do, knowing that it was my property and paid for. They went away and returned again the next day, repeating the same demand, saying that they were sent by a committee of one hundred to get the rifle from me. I again refused.

Then on the night of May 17, at about 11 o'clock, about forty men came to my house, stood about 50 yards off, and riddled my house and premises full of bullet holes. My life was saved almost by a miracle, as I had moved my family from there about two hours previous. I was hunted down and had to leave the parish by night, leaving behind me some $3,000 worth of property, real estate, etc., unprotected.

The Democratic committee of Terre Bonne Parish have sworn that no colored man shall vote nor enjoy political rights in the parish unless they vote the Democratic ticket.

BUTLER ADAMS.

An informant, known to me to be a reliable person, makes this statement about Mr. John F. Patty:

John F. Patty, a colored man of high standing and late Republican candidate for secretary of state, has not been in his parish, St. Mary, since the night of the election. Mr. Patty was not molested, but would have been if he had waited until a band of sixteen Democrats, armed with Winchester rifles, arrived at his poll, as they did a few minutes after he took to the woods. Mr. Patty is a practicing lawyer, having the most of his business before the nineteenth judicial district court, composed of the parishes of St. Mary and Terre Bonne. In Terre Bonne he has remained most of the time since the election, but a band of Democrats have waited upon him and told him that his presence before the court was not to their liking, and also forbidding him to practice. The only thing that the judge has done is to say that "he sympathizes with Patty."

The Weekly Pelican, of New Orleans, of Saturday, July 28, 1888, states the Patty case thus:

THE PATTY CASE.

Hon. J. F. Patty has been ordered to leave Houma.—Morgan City Free Press.

Patty has not been ordered to leave Houma. He has been notified that his presence as a practicing attorney before the district court is objectionable. It seems that the same rule prevails in St. Mary.—Houma Courier.

For cool cheek this comment of the Courier beats all bobtail. Here in plain English it states that Patty is objectionable to the court. And why is he objectionable? Is it because of any offense, any ungentlemanly act, or is he objectionable simply because he opposed the present judge's candidature? The latter would seem to be the case. In any event an outrage has been committed upon Mr. Patty that is a burning disgrace and shame not only to the people of the nineteenth judicial district but likewise to all the citizens of Louisiana. The simple reason for the non-permitting of him to practice his profession is because he is a Republican, and a stalwart one at that.

The Democratic party of Louisiana must learn to respect the opinions and ideas of its political opponents; it must give to every man the right of political freedom; it must shelve its before-the-war sentiments if it would see prosperity within the borders of the State. Until it does so it will find the Republican party antagonistic to its interests, be they material or political, and the uncalled-for and unjust treatment of Mr. Patty but makes the party more determined than ever to see that political freedom and political honesty are respected in the Pelican State.

MADISON PARISH.

In Madison Parish 3,530 votes were returned for Nicholls and none for Warmoth; 279 white voters in the parish, 3,081 colored voters. Not a vote was returned for the Republican ticket. Hon. Frank Morey, candidate for the Legislature, well and most favorably known here as a former member of the House, saw the casting of 220 Republican votes at Omega, yet not one was returned or allowed for Warmoth or for any of the local candidates except Democrats.

W. W. Johnson and Governor Hawkins, two colored men, had been members of the State house of representatives elected four years before on a combination ticket; they had voted for Mr. EUSTIS for Senator, and had participated in the Senatorial caucus which by one majority nominated EUSTIS over Jonas; were going to run again on a combination ticket with independent Democrats composed largely of the then present incumbents, Capt. H. B. Holmes included, for sheriff, who will be spoken of later. This independent movement was broken up, and Johnson and Hawkins were compelled to leave their homes in Madison Parish three weeks before election; and instead of their being elected J. G. Hawks was elected or returned elected to the Legislature, and we shall see where we find Mr. Hawks when we consider the next letter which I shall put into the case, as illustrating the impossibility of obtaining any justice or any redress of any of the outrages which I am narrating either by proceedings in the courts or before the Legislature of Louisiana. I ask the Secretary to read this.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., June 13, 1888.

HONORED SIR: I noticed by the special correspondence from Washington, which appeared in New Orleans Times-Democrat of the 12th instant, that the credentials of R. L. GIBSON, as United States Senator from this State, were ordered by the Senate to lie over until the presence of the chairman committee on contested election. I am one of three contestants claiming to have been elected to the house of representatives of this State, contesting, together with Messrs. C. B. Wilson and Joseph Farbacker, the seats of Messrs. J. C. Gilmore, Will I. O'Donnall, and W. J. Grady, Democrats, each of whom voted in the Democratic caucus and in the joint assembly for both GIBSON and White. These same seats, excepting J. C. Gilmore, was contested also by the Democratic candidates, belonging to an organization known as the "Young Men's Democratic Association." We simply ask for a recount of the boxes. This plea was joined in by the contestants just referred to. We went to the courts through our attorney, J. Madison Vance.

The district court, presided over by Hon. A. L. Tissot, granted our petition and ordered the boxes produced in court, which was done. Two officers employed in the courts were appointed as tellers. The count proceeded to poll three, there being eleven precincts in the third representative district, it being the largest in the parish of Orleans, when a prohibitory order was granted by the supreme court and the count was stopped. As far as the count had gone discrepancy after discrepancy was found. The ballots in the boxes showing more votes for us, as Republicans, than the tally-sheets. We were then forced to make our fight before the Legislature and before a committee of nine, only two of whom being Republicans; and the chairman, J. G. Hawks, a prince of bulldozers, who claims to represent Madison Parish, where Warmoth was only accredited with 1 vote, and there being little over 3,700 black voters. Our attorney appeared in person before the committee; our petition went through the regular channels, and we now learn that the committee will not grant a recount, fearing "to unearth too many frauds." This is the most important case in our State, and the only one that was regularly carried through every legal channel. I respectfully call your attention to these facts, hastily written, and will hold myself in readiness to substantiate these and other positive allegations.

I am, very respectfully,

S. S. FRANCISCO,

Corner Baronne and Perdido streets, or 51 Bertrance street.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Francisco's appeal to the Legislature for justice was put before a committee, of which Mr. J. G. Hawks was chairman, returned elected from Madison Parish. I will put in the RECORD an extract from the Louisiana Standard of August 11, 1888, in reference to the Madison Parish fraud:

[The Louisiana Standard, New Orleans, August 11, 1888. T. B. Stamps, editor and proprietor.]

MADISON PARISH FRAUDS.

Hon. Frank Morey appears to have stirred up something of a Democratic hornet's nest. He had the manliness to get up in the so-called immigration convention and say something of the frauds in Louisiana elections.

That was the one thing of all others to be choked off. Mr. Morey was choked off by an adjournment. Mr. Morey, all the same, got in a few pertinent facts. We propose to add what he was not able to fairly explain.

Madison Parish was the point at issue. Let us here give the Madison Parish figures. We will begin with the United States census.

	Blacks.	Whites.	Total.
1880	12,645	1,261	13,906
1870	7,663	936	8,599
Gain, ten years	4,982	325	5,307

Continue the proportionate increase, as shown, to 1888:

	Blacks.	Whites.	Total.
1880	12,645	1,261	13,906
Gain, 1880 to 1888	6,576	350	6,926
Population, 1888	19,221	1,611	20,832

Calculate for voters upon the usual estimate found holding good for the country parishes, of 1 to 4½ of population:

	Blacks.	Whites.	Total.
1888 (4½)	19,221	1,611	20,832
Voters	4,271	358	4,269

These are the figures as fairly deduced from the United States census. They must be accepted as approximately correct. There should be, presumptively, not far from the 4,271 colored to 358 white voters in Madison Parish.

This shows the negroes as in the actual majority by not far from 3,900 on a total vote.

We follow with the official registration as promulgated by the secretary of state:

	Blacks.	Whites.	Total.
1888	3,368	330	3,698
1886	3,070	263	3,333
Gain two years	298	67	365

Compare the last registration with estimate of voters as made from United States census:

	Blacks.	Whites.	Total.
Census estimate	4,271	358	4,629
Registration	3,368	330	3,698
Non-registered	903	28	931

The showing gives us 903 colored, as against 28 white voters failing to register. The presumption is that the figures are not far out of the way.

We come next to the official returns of the election. We give the figures, side by side, with the last registration.

REGISTRATION.		OFFICIAL VOTE.
Blacks	3,368	Nicholls	3,530
Whites	330	Warmoth

The total reported registration is 3,698; there are the 3,530 votes returned for Nicholls. Ex-Governor Warmoth is given not one single vote. Now for bottom facts.

Madison Parish vote as actually cast.

Ward.	Nicholls.	Warmoth.
1	100	190
2	40	215
3	88	703
4	52	868
5	260	314
6	15	69
7	27	393
—	6	65
Total	588	2,817

This gives an actual majority for Warmoth of 2,229.

We might give something more, possibly, regarding the registration. We confine ourselves to figures. We give the figures, then, as officially reported. We add the figures of the vote as actually cast.

Mr. Nicholls received, honestly, his 588 votes. He is credited with 3,530. Here is Democratic lie No. 1, of 2,924 votes, stolen out of whole cloth. Mr. Warmoth and the Republican ticket had actually deposited the 2,817 votes, thus giving him, in honesty, 2,229 majority. Here is Democratic lie No. 2, and Democratic steal again of, in fact, 4,458 votes, the vote being reversed. The Hon. Frank Morey told only part of the truth. We give the facts. Let the Democratic howlers call for proofs if they dare.

I find in the New York Tribune of August 10 that General Frank Morey was hauled over the coals at a convention of the former citizens of Northern and Western States living in Louisiana which assembled in New Orleans on the 8th day of August. When he made a remark that the committee on resolutions of which he was chairman had "ignored all political questions," he was not allowed to state even this without cries of "Order!" from all parts of the hall. This seems to have stirred him up to some extent, and he thereupon made the declaration:

I have lived in Madison Parish for the last twenty years, own property and pay my taxes there. At the last election I cast my vote for H. C. Warmoth and it was counted for F. T. Nicholls.

OUACHITA PARISH.

I come now to the last parish, to the details of the election in which I shall call the attention of the Senate. That is the parish of Ouachita, where there were returned 2,994 votes for Nicholls, 5 for Warmoth, with a voting population of 918 whites, 2,133 blacks.

Ouachita is the headquarters of the bulldozers; here Governor Samuel D. McEnery resides; here McEnery and Senator GIBSON, Senator EUSTIS, and ex-Senator Jonas and Mr. E. A. Burke made their famous speeches October 13, 1887, in which they vied with each other in their claims for the credit of the redemption of the State in 1876.

This parish was noted in connection with the election of April 17, 1888, for the murder of William Adams. I insert in the RECORD first a paragraph concerning the assassination of William Adams, from the Daily City Item of April 25, and which was printed by the Senator from Kansas in his speech:

[From the Daily City Item, Wednesday evening, April 25.]

WAS IT ASSASSINATION?—REMARKABLE ACCUSATIONS FROM MONROE.

The Item yesterday received information from Monroe to the effect that on Sunday, April 22—

Meaning April 15—

William Adams, a resident of Ouachita Parish, was shot to death by unknown parties at the court-house in that town. According to this authority Adams was first shot outside of the court-house, wounded in the nose and arm, and was subsequently captured and taken into the building, where he was killed by the mob. The provocation that led to this assassination is said to be as follows:

William Adams was a Republican, and just before the election he came to this city and obtained from Governor Warmoth authority to distribute the Republican tickets in Ouachita, Franklin, and other parishes of that district, and rendered himself very obnoxious to those who dominated the politics of that district, and that this led to his assassination. The number of men engaged in the affair could not be ascertained. On inquiring why no telegrams or other intelligence had been sent to the city, the gentleman said that there was an apparent reign of terror in Monroe, and that the people did not dare send out this news for fear of being assaulted.

Still another statement is that he was first shot in the court-house yard, wounded in the nose and arm; that he then retreated to his house, from which he subsequently returned to the court-house. Upon entering the court-house a scuffling was heard, and it is supposed that he was killed with knives. Shortly after a carriage was driven away from the court-house, which is supposed to have contained his body, which has not been found.

In my hands is an anonymous letter which I desire to read. The writer gives his reasons for not signing his name, and the Senate will judge whether those reasons are good, and whether the facts that he states are worthy of consideration in deciding whether there shall be an investigation.

MONROE, LA., June 14, 1888.

Senator CHANDLER, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: Seeing your resolution in the Senate in regard to the legal election recently held in Louisiana, I thought I would give you the facts as they transpired in Ouachita Parish, town of Monroe. I think I can explain how it was that there was 2,994 Democratic votes and only 5 Republican votes cast. In the first place the bulldozing committee of the parish would not allow any one to distribute Republican tickets or vote them either; they killed one man, Mr. William Adams, for trying to electioneer for the Republican party. It happened in this way: On Sunday morning, before the election, about 10 o'clock, as Mr. Adams was passing the court-house a man came out of the court-house with a flag wrapped around him so as to disguise himself, and fired two shots from a double-barreled shotgun at Mr. Adams, one shot striking him in the arm and the other striking him in the nose. After the assassin had fired the two shots he ran back into the court-house, and there was not any one in the offices of the parish that would try to prosecute or find out who did the shooting. Then that evening the candidate for sheriff there—he is the sheriff now—went to Mr. Adams's house and had his supper, and got Mr. Adams to go with him to the court-house, and that was the last seen or heard of Adams until about one week ago his body was found in Bayou Desiard, a stream about 4 miles from town. The next morning after the sheriff got Mr. Adams to come to the court-house there was a pool of blood on the floor, and out across the steps of the court-house. The sheriff that I speak of is named Captain Theobald.

A name notorious in Louisiana politics, and to which I shall allude later.

He is the chief of the bulldozers. There is a gang here of about fifty, and if a person don't do like they say they will hang him and that is the last of it, and there is no chance to get them indicted, for all of the parish officers belong to the gang. The next day after the murder of Mr. Adams, one Mr. Millsop, president of police jury, said it was a shame to let such things as that go on without trying to stop it. The next morning there was a committee, consisting of Mr. F. P. Stubs, Mr. F. Hudson, prosecuting attorney of the parish, and Mr. L. D. McLain, and they notified Mr. Millsop that he must keep his mouth shut or he would go the same way.

There was one Dr. Cage here. He undertook to distribute Republican tickets, and a committee of the bulldozers met him 2 miles out of town and took his tickets away from him and burned them up, and told him that if he undertook to distribute any more they would hang him. I think the leaders of the gang are named Captain Theobold, sheriff of parish; Mr. Fred. Hudson, prosecuting attorney; Judge R. W. Richardson, Mr. F. P. Stubs, Mr. L. D. McLain, Mr. E. Wheatley, Mr. Mitchener, Mr. Bob and John Logan, Mr. R. Fullum, Mr. John Parker, Mr. George Philips, and Mr. Brown.

I know beyond a doubt that if there could be some way devised so that the negroes of this parish could get protection of their lives and a free ballot and a fair count this parish would give a Republican vote of 2,000. It is nothing unusual for them to take the negroes up and whip them to make them vote as they want them to. I think if you want a verification of these facts if you will subpœna the following-named gentlemen you can probably get from them all the facts. The names are—

I omit the twenty names which he gives.

I shall not sign my name to this paper, for if I did and it was found out here I would not live twenty-four hours. Hoping you may make a true case out of this, I remain, as ever,

Yours,

——— ———.

Another statement which has been furnished me by a reliable citizen of Madison Parish is as follows:

THE FATE OF "BILL" ADAMS, AT MONROE, PARISH SEAT OF OUACHITA COUNTY, THE NEXT BUT ONE TO MADISON COUNTY.

Mr. Adams was distributing Republican tickets previous to the election in Ouachita. He was warned to desist, but did not; and on the Sunday before the election, as he was going along on the side of the street opposite the court-house, while people were going to church, a load of buckshot from a shotgun was fired at him from back of the court-house fence. One shot went through his nose and another went through his left arm. After denouncing the unseen shooter as an assassin and coward, Adams being unarmed went home. He was told to come to the court-house, where he would be protected from harm. He went to the court-house; a hack stood in front of the door; he was never seen afterwards. After dark the hack drove away. There was blood on the hack the next day and on the floor of the court-house. A citizen heard cries of murder in the afternoon and nothing more. The next day he told what he heard. He was waited on by a committee of leading citizens and told that unless he stopped talking they could not protect him. Everybody knows what that means. Not a paper in Northern Louisiana spoke of the occurrence.

The Louisiana Standard of New Orleans, Saturday, August 18, 1888, gives some facts in reference to William Adams not previously known to me. I will read the article:

LOUISIANA FICTION VS. FACTS.

There are the two ways of lying. There is the lie direct, in the statement of that which is false. There is the lie indirect, in the holding back and thereby suppressing the truth. The latter is, perhaps, the most effective. The lie direct may be exposed, may thereby bring out the facts. The lie indirect has at least the chances of remaining unknown.

Our prominent Louisiana press, then, have been doing a world of indirect yet powerful lying in regard to Louisiana affairs.

They have thus heralded the result of the Louisiana election. They have persistently withheld the facts as to how the results were brought about. They have lied, in effect, in that they have failed to tell the truth.

There was the murder of William Adams, in Monroe. Monroe is in the parish of Ouachita. It is the home of ex-Governor McEnery. It was the center from whence issued the famous "Ouachita plan;" the plan of organized outrage and general intimidation as an element of Democratic success. William Adams was a white man and an ex-Confederate soldier. He had been one of McEnery's ardent friends and supporters.

He refused to follow McEnery in the final deal whereby Louisiana was to be handed over through outrage and fraud to General Nicholls. He knew that the Ouachita country was in honesty largely Republican. He saw no reason why it should not so vote. He came to New Orleans in company with one of McEnery's old-time trusted officials. He was introduced to Governor Warmoth. He undertook to work the Ouachita country in the Republican interest.

William Adams was somehow inveigled into the court-house in Monroe. It was of a Sunday's eve. The Monroe ladies were on their way to church. William Adams was in the hands of Democratic assassins.

They somehow closed in on him unawares. His throat was cut from ear to ear.

Why was he killed? He had committed the unpardonable crime; he was guilty of distributing Republican tickets.

The body was smuggled into a country hack. It was so carried to an out-of-the-way point on the bank of the Ouachita River. It was loaded with chains. It was next put into a small boat. The boat was paddled into midstream. William Adams was given his watery grave.

Did our prominent Louisiana press have anything to say? The matter was no secret. There was not the man, woman, or child in Monroe but heard of the facts.

The scene of the murder was just by the telegraphic office door. There were the regular news correspondents. Had somebody broke a leg or arm the fact would been duly dispatched. Here was most foul and horrible murder. Here was the almost open disposition of the murdered body. What was said or done? What was published by our leading press? What has ever been heard of an investigation? Nothing.

The parish of Ouachita is one of the fifteen parishes making up the Louisiana Fifth Congressional district. The district as a whole is reported as casting a a vote of 30,993 for Nicholls as against 2,737 for Warmoth.

The official registration is 14,102 whites to 28,183 blacks. There are evidences of better than 10,000 negro voters remaining unregistered. The district is honestly Republican by at least 15,000 majority even on the registered vote. It should stand for Warmoth by fully 10,000 majority to-day. The murder of William Adams did the business in Ouachita. The parish of Madison was returned with 3,530 for Nicholls, Warmoth with nothing. The actual vote was 2,817 for Warmoth, to 588 for Nicholls. Warmoth received the 2,229 majority. The 2,817 Warmoth votes counted for Nicholls, makes the 5,634 of the Democratic steal in the single parish. There are others we propose to show up in the same way. This system of indirect lying by our prominent Louisiana press needs be exposed.

It seems that they do not allow mugwumps in Louisiana, they kill them. Here was William Adams, a white man, a Confederate soldier, and a Democrat, but at this election he had concluded to support the Warmoth ticket, and he was not allowed to live, but at Monroe, in the home of Governor Samuel D. McEnery, he was shot to death, his throat cut, and he was thrown into the river, in order to enable Ouachita Parish to give the votes which were returned from it for Francis T. Nicholls.

Mr. President, it is worth while to digress a little to notice that election outrages like these to which I have adverted are common affairs in Louisiana and proceed from an old custom of the State. Forty-four years ago, precisely, the same frauds were being perpetrated in Louisiana that prevailed at the last election, and they will be committed at the coming election. The name Plaquemine is a stench in the nostrils of the American people.

In 1840 Harrison had 11,296 votes in Louisiana, and Van Buren only 7,616. In 1844 Polk had nominally 13,782, and Clay 13,083, making a nominal majority for Polk of 699. The vote returned from Plaquemine Parish was 37 for Mr. Clay and 1,007 for Polk. We all know how the Presidential election of 1844 was carried, that Mr. Polk had 65 majority over Mr. Clay; 170 electors for Polk and 105 for Clay, of which Louisiana gave 6 and New York gave 36.

In the private correspondence of Henry Clay by Calvin Colton, page 523, there is a statement in a letter from B. Johnson Barbour to Mr. Clay, dated at Barbourville, February 16, 1845, which is singularly applicable to the present day, which will find a counterpart forty-four years later in the coming Presidential election. Mr. Barbour says:

Plaquemine and Tammany have stifled the voice of the American people, and the late contest has only established the melancholy fact that frauds upon the ballot-box have perfect impunity, that mediocrity is a merit, and that every excess may be committed in the name of a spurious Democracy.

The Secretary will please read from Colton's Life and Times of Henry Clay, volume 2, page 433, Mr. Colton's statement concerning the Plaquemine frauds.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The notorious Plaquemine frauds of Louisiana had not even the decency of disguise, but were open and violent, the judges and public officers taking lead in them. Law was trampled under foot and anarchy ruled for the occasion. Several hundreds of non-residents of the parish were freighted in steam-boats from New Orleans, carried down to the precincts of Plaquemine and induced to walk the rounds of voting two or three times each, some under the same names, being furnished with tickets of the right kind, which were opened by the inspectors, in violation of law, before being deposited, to be sure they were right. Nearly all the Whig votes offered were refused; challengers were silenced; all attempts to invoke the authority of law treated with contempt and menace, and Whig tickets after being delivered were changed for others. It was proved that the parish was entitled to less than 500 votes. The number deposited was 1,044, and only 37 for the Whig electors.

Mr. CHANDLER. At the same time in 1844 that the Plaquemine frauds were going on in Louisiana similar frauds were being perpetrated in the city of New York. The popular vote of New York in 1844 was counted for Mr. Clay, 232,482; for Mr. Polk 237,588, and for Mr. Birney, 15,812. Mr. Polk had nominally about 5,000 majority over Mr. Clay. New York City, which was a Whig city, and should have given a majority for Mr. Clay, gave for him only 26,385 votes; for Mr. Polk 28,296 votes, and for Mr. Birney 117 votes. Mr. Colton tells how the majority for Polk was obtained. The Secretary will please read the extract.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From Colton's Life and Times of Henry Clay, volume 2, page 436.]

The frauds in the city and State of New York were probably more systematized, consequently more productive, and practiced on a larger scale than anywhere else. It was admitted on all hands that the party which should gain that State would, in all probability, secure the General Government. It was therefore an object of supreme importance.

* * * * * * *

The well-known ability and practice of passing the same naturalization papers from one hand to another, and of using dead men's papers—as in the case of the poor widow at Baltimore who sold the use of her dead husband's right seventeen times at one election for $1 each—comprehend a large list of frauds in the city of New York. In this way an adopted citizen's right is not only many times more available during his life than that of a citizen native born, but it continues to be used with a multiplied power after his death!

The volunteer practice of obtaining what is called a legal residence in several wards, and in several districts of the same ward, and then appearing as many times at the polls to vote, in a different dress, and in other ways disguised, is another mode of fraud practiced to a large extent. Hundreds of young men go the rounds of the city the whole of an election day, frequently changing dress, and offering their votes, which are often received without being challenged, and when challenged, they pass on to another, making open boast of it, and saying, "He is a fool that will not vote as many times as he can."

But a new mode of fraud is alleged and believed to have been practiced on a large scale in the city of New York in 1844: that of employing men for at least six months before the election to obtain residences in every ward and district of the city (district 79), at the cheap boarding-houses, that could be sworn to, if necessary, they being known as boarders at all these places, though not always there.

Being entirely devoted to the task, and paid for it, they could visit each place frequently, and be recognized as residents. In this single mode, thousands of fraudulent votes are believed to have been given in the city of New York, at the Presidential election of 1844. The funds necessary were raised by betting, and advanced. Considering all the various modes by which fraudulent votes were obtained, 5,000 for the city of New York, and 15,000 for the State would probably be an underestimate. The greatest possible effort of this kind was made, inasmuch as the relative strength of parties in the State, at that particular juncture, was more uncertain than in almost any other State, and it was therefore difficult to determine what amount of fraud would answer the purpose of victory.

Mr. CHANDLER. While John Slidell was carrying Louisiana for Mr. Polk by the Plaquemine frauds, Isaiah Rynders and his gang were carrying New York for Mr. Polk by such contrivances as Mr. Colton describes; and as time went on New York City improved upon its earlier rascalities. In 1860 the Democratic vote in New York City for President was 62,293. In 1864 McClellan had 73,709. In 1866 John T. Hoffman had for mayor 80,677. In 1867, for local officers, the Democrats cast a vote of 85,764; but when the Presidential election of 1868 came around the Democratic vote in New York City leaped from 85,764 to 112,522 for Hoffman for governor, while John A. Griswold had 43,372. The Seymour vote was counted at 108,316, the Grant vote 47,738. The vote for governor in the whole State was for Hoffman 439,301, for Griswold 411,355, a majority for Hoffman of 27,946. For Seymour, 429,883; Grant, 419,883; showing a majority for Seymour of only 10,000 counted for him as against 27,946 counted for John T. Hoffman for governor.

Now this is the way, Mr. President, that the State of New York in 1868 was counted for Hoffman and Seymour and taken away from Griswold and Grant: The process was exactly the reverse of that which prevailed at the recent election in Louisiana. In Louisiana word was sent out from New Orleans to the parishes where the frauds were to be committed to make large returns in favor of Nicholls and against Warmoth. In 1868, in New York, the frauds could not be perpetrated in the country but could be committed in the city of New York, and therefore word was sent into the country districts to telegraph the state of the vote early so that the country Republican majorities might be overcome by manufactured Democratic majorities in the city. This circular was sent out by Samuel J. Tilden and William M. Tweed:

ROOMS OF THE DEMOCRATIC STATE COMMITTEE, October 27, 1868.

MY DEAR SIR: Please at once to communicate with some reliable person in three or four principal towns, and each city of your county, and request him (expenses duly arranged for this end) to telegraph to William M. Tweed, Tammany Hall, at the minute of closing the polls, not waiting for the count, such person's estimate of the vote. Let the telegraph be as follows: "This town will show Democratic gain (or loss) over last year of—— (number)." Or this one, if sufficiently certain: "This town will give a Republican (or Democratic) majority of ——." There is, of course, an important object to be attained by a simultaneous transmission at the hour of closing the polls, but not longer waiting. Opportunity can be taken of the usual half-hour lull in telegraphic communication over lines before actual results begin to be declared, and before the associated press absorb the telegraph with returns and interfere with individual messages, and give orders to watch carefully the count.

Very truly yours,

SAMUEL J. TILDEN, Chairman.

And when, as the result of this circular, Mr. Tilden and Mr. Tweed found out how the country districts in the State of New York had gone they knew exactly what majority to count for the Democratic State and national tickets in the city of New York, and they contented themselves with moderate majorities, of 27,000 for Hoffman and 10,000 for Seymour. But when Governor McEnery sent word to the election officers of the country parishes of Louisiana to return majorities for Nicholls, as Warmoth was developing too much strength, these election officers did not know precisely how much was wanted. They determined to make their false returns large enough, and hence we have the enormous majority of 84,753 returned by the election officers and counted and promulgated by the secretary of state.

Mr. VEST. Will it interfere with the line of remarks of the Senator if I ask him a question here that is of historical reference?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not in the slightest.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it is not true that in 1881 the Republican managers of the election in Pennsylvania, then under the political control of the present chairman of the national Republican committee, did not telegraph from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh after the polls closed at 7 o'clock in the afternoon:

Republican majority in Philadelphia, 20,000. We can make it 40,000 if necessary.

I ask if that was not published, and if it is not well known and notorious?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no knowledge on that subject.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator say he never saw or heard that statement?

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the gentleman finished his inquiry?

Mr. VEST. That is my inquiry.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have never heard of the occurrence before. I have no knowledge on the subject. I believe the telegram to be false. I do not believe that such a telegram was ever sent.

Mr. VEST. We shall see.

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to say a word?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. CHACE. I believe I know about that circumstance, and it is a pure canard manufactured ab initio, and there is not a particle of truth or foundation for it from the beginning to the end and it can not be proved.

Mr. VEST. That is an assertion easily made. It was published in the newspapers of the country and in the Pittsburgh papers at the time and it has stood on record ever since, and the gentleman whose name was signed to it has never contradicted it.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator from Missouri himself said but a few days ago on the floor of the Senate that a Senator whose life or liberty had to depend upon the truthfulness of newspaper reports had a small chance.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Rhode Island, who has injected himself into this question which I put to the Senator from New Hampshire, tell me what we have had here yesterday and to-day but newspaper extracts, pure and simple, and the character of a sovereign State and of the people of a sovereign State of this Union is to be taken away by these extracts, but when the medicine is given to that side of the Chamber it is worth nothing?

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator want to ask any other question?

Mr. VEST. No, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I always like to hear a speech from the Senator from Missouri. I yielded to him for a question, but I enjoyed his speech very much. I take occasion to denounce the telegram as a forgery. I do not believe it was ever sent. It is more than probable that some telegram got into the hands of a Democrat who put in the last clause and then published it in some newspaper. It is perhaps a Morey letter; certainly it has not made much progress in the public news, for I never heard of it before, and I do not believe there are any Republican Senators on this side, certainly not many, who ever did hear of it. But that Mr. Tilden and Mr. Tweed, by means of the circular I have read, which gave them information what the vote had been in the Republican counties of New York, counted out Grant and Griswold and counted in the Seymour electors and Hoffman there can be but little doubt. A Senator asks me whether anybody doubts that Mr. Tilden and Mr. Tweed sent out that circular. In answer to that I will put in a letter from Mr. Greeley to Mr. Tilden, headed "A Letter to a Politician," in which Mr. Greeley charges the circular upon Mr. Tilden and undertakes to hold him responsible for the fraudulent vote in the State of New York in the election of 1868, to which I have alluded.

LETTER TO A POLITICIAN.

"NEW YORK, October 20, 1869.

SIR: You hold a most responsible and influential position in the councils of a great party. You could make that party content itself with the polling of legal votes, if you only would. In our late constitutional convention I tried to erect some fresh barriers against election frauds—did you? The very little that I was enabled to effect in this direction I shall try to have ratified by the people at our ensuing election—will you? Mr. Tilden, you can not escape responsibility by saying, with the guilty Macbeth,

"Thou canst not say I did it; never shake
Those gory locks at me!" for you were at least a passive accomplice in the giant frauds of last November. Your name was used, without public protest on your part, in circulars sowed broadcast over the State, whereof the manifest intent was to make assurance doubly sure that the frauds here perpetrated should not be overborne by the honest vote of the rural districts. And you, not merely by silence, but by positive assumption, have covered those frauds with the mantle of your respectability. On the principle that 'the receiver is as bad as the thief,' you are as deeply implicated in them to-day as though your name were Tweed, O'Brien, or Oakey Hall.

"And, though our city has since largely increased its population, the lower wards were quite as populous then (1840) as they are to-day, several of them more so. * * * Now look at the vote of four of these wards in 1840 and 1868, respectively:

	President, 1840.		Governor, 1868.
Four wards.....	4,793	5,521	2,840	20,283

"Van Buren's majority, 726; Hoffman's majority, 17,443.

"Mr. Tilden, you know what this contrast attests. Right well do you comprehend the means whereby the vote of 1868 was thus swelled out of all proportions. There are not 12,000 legal voters living in those wards to-day, though they gave Hoffman 17,443 majority. Had the day been of average length, it would doubtless have been swelled out to 20,000. There was nothing but time needed to make it 100,000, if so many had been wanted and paid for. Now, Mr. Tilden, I call on you to put a stop to this business. You have but to walk into the sheriff's, the mayor's, and the supervisor's offices, in the City Hall Park, and say that there must be no more of it: say it so that there shall be no doubt that you mean it, and we shall have a tolerably fair election once more.

"Will you do it? If we Republicans are swindled again as we were swindled last fall, you and such as you will be responsible to God and man for the outrage.

"Yours,

"HORACE GREELEY.

TO SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
Chairman Democratic State Committee.

Although the circulars to which Mr. Tilden's name was attached had been previously published by the Tribune, and fully implicated him in the frauds charged, yet he was as silent under the accusation as a stone. Had he been innocent of the charge, and had he been desirous of purging the ballot-boxes, he would instantly have come to the front, demanded an investigation, and volunteered to go all lengths in their correction. But had he done so he never would have been governor of the State of New York, nor would he have had the least show for the Presidency. He, of all men, was the most interested in perpetuating them as a means of climbing to political power.

Mr. Tilden, so far as I know, never made any public or authentic repudiation of that circular, and the purpose of the circular is manifest on its face.

Returning from this digression to the Louisiana election, I next proceed to maintain that this enormous fraudulent vote which has been returned is the product not of local fraud perpetrated on the mere motion of the local election officers, but is the result of a deliberate conspiracy entered into by Samuel D. McEnery, the governor, and Francis T. Nicholls, the candidate for governor, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to Governor McEnery's powers concerning elections. By the election law of Louisiana, act 101, of July 5, 1882, it is provided:

That for all elections in the several parishes, the parish of Orleans excepted, the governor shall appoint a returning officer for each parish, who shall appoint the commissioners of election and designate the polling places in each election precinct.

The campaign in Louisiana which has produced the result now exhibited to the country was very famously opened on the 12th of October last at Monroe, La., and I have in my hand a copy of the Times-Democrat, which contains an account of the meeting held at that time, from which I shall make copious extracts. The newspaper is published by Maj. E. A. Burke, who was present at the meeting. The account proceeds as follows:

THE GOVERNOR'S ARRIVAL AND RECEPTION.

MONROE, LA., October 12, 1887.

Governor McEnery, accompanied by Senators J. B. EUSTIS, B. F. Jonas, RANDALL L. GIBSON, Maj. E. A. Burke, Col. Richard Sinnott, George W. Dupré, and Albert Gibson, arrived here at 4 o'clock this evening.

* * * * * * *

In the procession they carried two banners: on one was "Ouachita's honored son;" on the reverse side of this banner was, "The People's Governor." The other banner bore the words "Louisiana's Governor, welcome home."

THE MEETING.

MONROE, October 13.

This pretty little place, the home of Governor McEnery, was alive with Democrats this morning from the various wards of Ouachita Parish, who had been attracted by the announcement that Governor McEnery and other prominent gentlemen would address their fellow-citizens.

* * * * * * *

The following was the programme of the proceedings: Addresses, Governor S. D. McEnery; music; RANDALL L. GIBSON, United States Senator; music; J. B. EUSTIS, United States Senator; music; Hon. B. F. Jonas; music; Hon. E. A. Burke; music.

What could not be done in Louisiana by this precious crowd could not be done by anybody.

Mr. Franklin Garrett said in opening the meeting:

"Fellow-citizens * * * He who holds the destiny of nations in the hollow of His hand grant that our deliberations here to-day may be influenced by that spirit of harmony which is so necessary to the success of the grand old party [cheers], and when we depart from here we may be filled full and running over with the immutable principles of the Democratic party."

Whether what they wished to be filled full of and to be running over with was the "rum and molasses" which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] thinks was the equivalent given by the United States for the commercial arrangement with Great Britain in 1830, or whether it was corn whisky, I am not informed, but certain it is, from the character of the campaign that they inaugurated and carried out to completion on the 17th of April, that the spirit that they were filled with was the spirit of the devil. In Governor McEnery's speech he said:

The revolution inaugurated in 1876 did not stop with the events of that day. The people of Tensas, Natchitoches, and Caddo had to place themselves in line with Democratic North Louisiana. The same feelings and impulses which gave rise to the great movement throughout Louisiana in 1876 influenced the people of those parishes to overthrow the same despotism in 1878. If the people were justified in 1876 in their revolution against oppression and wrong, so were they justified in 1878. Governor Nicholls may or may not have sympathized with the Tensas and Natchitoches prisoners. His feelings are not matter of importance. They are the emotional parts of his nature, and without an outward expression there is no means of analysis; and his outward expressions are matter of little moment in the moral aspect of the movement, unless some injury is done to those who are affected by its expression.

Gentlemen from Natchitoches and Tensas were on trial on a serious charge. The offense with which they were charged had passed beyond the line of locality and had become national. The whole gravamen of the crime alleged against them was that they had done certain things in a Congressional election for political purposes. This was the question to be determined by the court before which they were arraigned. It was the question before Congress and before the nation in its moral aspect.

It is not proper for even a person in private station to condemn before a hearing, to use expressions as to the guilt or innocence of the accused that may affect the verdict of a jury. In a person occupying a high station it is the less excusable, and there was at least a want of prudence when Governor Nicholls brought the attention of the Legislature to the matter. No legislation was proposed to correct evils which may have promoted the disturbances in Tensas. It was a judicial question pending before a judicial tribunal. Yet the governor, on the very issue to be determined by the court, said in his message of 1879:

"The proximate cause of that trouble was the going, at night, of a party of men, numbering from twenty to twenty-five, to the house of one Fairfax, a colored political leader in Tensas Parish, which act resulted in the killing of Peck (who seems to have been the leader of the party) and the wounding, by Peck's companions, of three colored men who were in Fairfax's house, one of whom afterwards died. The visit of these men to Fairfax was utterly wrong in my opinion, utterly without justification, and whilst attempted to be justified upon the ground that they went in the interest of peace to expostulate against a rumored proposed attempt of the colored people to force the quarantine lines at the town of St. Joseph, I am satisfied that such was not the purpose, but that it had a political object."

It is not surprising, then, that this opinion of the governor was used by United States District Attorney Leonard in his speech on the trial and by Senator TELLER in the Senate of the United States.

Senator TELLER used this language: "The testimony as to the condition of affairs in Tensas Parish does not rest upon the testimony of colored men or Republicans; it rests upon the testimony of a Democratic governor, given to the people in his annual message."

It seems that where these gentlemen met together—at Monroe on this occasion—I understand the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] was there accidentally. They went into a quarrel as to who had redeemed the State in 1876. Nicholls and his adherents claimed that it had been done by corrupt negotiations with members of the Packard Legislature. The McEnery-Burke party disputed the Nicholls pretension and contended that the State had been redeemed in two ways: First, bulldozing Republicans in the country parishes, and next by the negotiations of Burke and others in Washington. This quarrel among themselves, Nicholls not having then been nominated for governor over McEnery, starts out in all the speeches made. But notwithstanding the differences among themselves they all united in their determination not to allow Republicans to vote in the State of Louisiana. I continue to read from the speech of Governor McEnery:

But in the history of this period as detailed by the reform canvassers where come in the heroic efforts of the men of Caldwell and Ouachita, Franklin and Morehouse, Union and Lincoln, who assembled along the banks of the Ouachita and made that desperate struggle? Where are the efforts of East and West Baton Rouge and of East and West Feliciana? Where are the hero, the immortal Ogden, and the men of January 9, 1877, who marched on that morning to the supreme court room, and marched from there to the State-House, and remained there through the day and night, exposed to the cold blasts of winter? Oh, where are they, these gallant patriots in all the long recitals of our reformers? We hear nothing of these men and their long and heroic efforts. We hear nothing of the diplomacy at Washington of Burke, the accredited agent of General Nicholls and our representatives.

The efforts, the patriotism of all these able and devoted men pale into insignificance before the great efforts to "break a quorum" by skirmishing legislators and the promise of patronage and the payment of money!

He continues to show that it was the troops which turned out and gave them victory. His speech all through sounds like a victorious general describing a military conflict, as it had been in fact.

In the name of the people of this State, I protest against such arguments. I will go back to the governor's proclamation where he, on the 24th of March, 1877, informed the people in response to their repeated protests, that their government had been organized without a compromise of their rights.

Believing then, and believing now, that the people of the North had been enlightened as to our true condition, and the determination of our people to submit no longer to negro domination, I repeat what I said in 1884 in New Orleans, at Faranta's Hall, and what has not been controverted.

With the State in such a condition, all hope of relief shut off from abroad and nothing under the then existing government to be expected but a continuance of the same misgovernment, violence, and corruption in the interest of the radical party, what wonder then that the fierce passions of revolution should be engendered and the tragic period of 1876 enacted?

The Nicholls government became a fixed fact from the moment the authorities at Washington realized the terrible earnestness of our people, and that the temper of the people was such that it would be dangerous to tamper with it, and that no other government than the one they had elected would be tolerated—a government born of your patriotic hearts and inaugurated by your strong right arms.

If the Nicholls government was organized so easily by the ready purchase of negroes, who, like rats, were ready to quit a sinking ship, and sold out cheap, what crimes were committed in what are known as the bulldozing parishes? Who is there, then, that can refer to his record, his watchfulness by day and by night, the responsibilities he assumed, and the risks he encountered? None; not one!

When Federal troops were ordered to Monroe in order to destroy the good work done by the Democrats, and when they gathered negroes from every quarter and every plantation, marched them to mass-meetings under the protection of their guns, the people of Ouachita, who had become desperate, deputed Captain Theobalds, with a well-chosen force, to put a stop to this marauding and political marching of Federal troops.

And this Captain Theobalds, who has been doing this bloody work for these many years for the Democrats of Louisiana, is the same wretch who is responsible for the murder, on the 15th of April of this year, of William Adams.

The negroes gathered in almost untold numbers at St. James Chapel. The Federal troops were there under their officers, consisting of two companies of infantry. Theobalds had two well-armed companies of riflemen.

It was on this occasion that he announced with determination to the Federal officers that we had submitted to all that we intended to endure, and henceforth no more campaigning would be permitted with Federal troops.

With flashing saber and angry voice the officer proclaimed that that was a Republican meeting, and he was there to protect it. Said Theobalds: "If you interfere here to-day I will sweep you and your command from off the face of the earth."

The commanding officer of the United States troops at that time gives a different account of this affair, but he confirms the statement that the voters of the region were intimidated, and that nobody was allowed to vote the Republican ticket in the bulldozed parishes.

From that time forward we had no further interference with Federal troops; they quietly camped inside of our picket line. Theobalds spoke then for the people of Louisiana. He only voiced a sentiment that was in every heart and a determination that strengthened every man's nerve. It was this determination of the people of the State that established Democratic government in Louisiana. GIBSON so understood it, and so spoke from Washington. Burke so understood it, and so addressed Grant. The people of the nation so understood it, and so sustained Hayes.

Although the Federal troops were no longer political factors in the contest, the radicals, negroes, carpet-baggers, and scallawags did not give up the contest, but determined secretly to mass the entire negro population in the town on the day of the election. A long line, reaching through the Chovan swamp through the colony on the river, was established. It was too long, and the order was given to fall back and inclose the town in a small compass. It was then that the men of Union, Lincoln, Morehouse, Richland, Caldwell, and Ouachita stood elbow to elbow ready to receive the expected attack from the negroes.

They had no more expectation of an attack from the negroes than they had of going to heaven.

Away in the night Fred Cann's cannon, on the right, announced the movement, and the sharp quick crack of the rifle along the whole line told that the negroes were well drilled and instructed in the plans and lines of march to the city.

Could anything be more absurd than the idea that the negroes of that section were planning to attack Captain Theobald, and all the assembled white ruffians of that vicinity?

The contest was quick and decisive, and the cessation of rifle reports and the silence of Cann's cannon announced that on to-morrow peace and quiet and victory would be with a long-suffering people. What was done in Ouachita was also done in the Felicianas and East Baton Rouge, and it was the determined spirit of the people that gave to Louisiana her emancipation from the negro-carpetbag domination and elected Francis T. Nicholls governor.

Anterior to this there had been a constant and increasing resistance to the reign of terror inaugurated by the Federal Government, which culminated in the successful struggle of 1876. When the memorable 14th September was being enacted in the city of New Orleans I was on that night with a company from Trenton, under McLeod, and a company from Monroe and vicinity, under Logan, holding in check riotous negroes on the De Siard.

That is Bayou De Siard, and the same in which the body of William

Adams was found murdered, because he dared to be a Louisiana Republican. The speech of Governor McEnery goes on:

When the mercenaries of Kellogg were tramping through South Louisiana I was arranging with Col. C. H. Moore with two hundred men from Richland to capture the entire force at Carpenter's station in that parish. The lamented Dan Byerly had sent the dispatch announcing their expected appearance in North Louisiana to reinstate the Greens, whom Patterson had driven away at the head of a hundred men in the town of Vienna. Thus, in every locality was shown a restless and determined spirit during the long, disastrous, and oppressive reign of this alien government. Governor Nicholls was brought to the front, not because of his identification with any of these events but because of his Confederate record and maimed condition to arouse the sympathies of the people and enlist them in one united and concerted effort.

We all recollect his intense conservatism, his unwillingness to continue an aggressive campaign by which Louisiana alone could be saved.

Had his advice been followed our redemption would have been long deferred. I well remember the Friday evening on which General Nicholls made his entry into Monroe. As he got off the cars Theobalds was filing by, with his squadron of cavalry, returning from the suppression of the island riot.

One would not suppose, Mr. President, that Governor McEnery here was describing an election in the United States. One would think he was describing a battle.

I remember when I called on Mr. Spofford, who was one of the campaign party at the Monroe House that night, how genuine was his alarm lest we should be aggressive.

Mr. Spofford was undoubtedly the Louisiana Democrat who had been a claimant for a seat in the United States Senate from Louisiana under some election or pretended election.

As I held his feverish hand as he lay in bed, he clung to mine and pressed it with earnestness, and exclaimed, "My young friend, do not do anything that will mar the great victory that awaits us. Oh, if you had been at Natchitoches and had seen the blaze of enthusiasm among the people you would do nothing to mar the fruit of our victory."

Governor McEnery sneeringly remarks concerning Mr. Spofford's plan of campaign:

It is needless to say that in Natchitoches, where a conservative campaign was conducted, the Radicals polled their entire strength. The contest for our liberation had been fought and won strictly on the color line. The negroes had drawn it.

What an absurdity!

The negroes had drawn it, the carpet-baggers used it, and we accepted the issue and broke it into fragments, with the full belief and confidence that we were establishing a white man's government. It was this that nerved us for so many years.

In view of this bloody speech of Governor McEnery I think I ought here to state in justice to the Nicholls faction that there is some difference between its members and the members of the McEnery faction in their policy concerning frauds in elections and the killing of Republicans. The Nicholls faction is undoubtedly opposed to any unnecessary fraud and any unnecessary murder. Its members wish to have committed just as many frauds and just as many murders as are necessary to carry the State Democratic, and no more.

But the members of the McEnery faction are willing to commit frauds and murders without any limitation whatever. That is the only distinction between them. Governor McEnery next says:

I believe with that eminent divine, Dr. Palmer, that God Almighty has himself drawn the color line and that our civilization has to be worked out by white brains, white muscle, and white sympathies, and that the other race must work out its redemption in the line appointed by Providence under the leadership and direction of the white race.

It is noticeable how pious and godly all these Louisiana Democrats become when they are planning the commission of frauds upon the suffrage and the murder of Republican voters.

No nation ever yet divided its power or shared its administration with an inferior race that did not in time meet with the recorded verdict of history. There will be wasting of energy and consuming of power. It is a denial of the divine calling of the nation which has been borne to its fulfillment by the Father.

Blasphemously invoking the Divinity in aid of his crimes against humanity, and he rhetorically concludes his advocacy of political murders:

Such a nation will be swept out of existence, and all that will be discovered of it will be in the colossal fragments of its architecture, erected in the noontide of its splendor. The dates in its cycle will be vainly sought in the fading lines and scattered stones of its building.

Senator GIBSON was allowed to follow Governor McEnery. I give only two extracts from his speech, but they clearly mark the character of the contest that was going on in Louisiana.

Mr. GIBSON spoke on the second epoch, the period of reconstruction, the enforcement of the amendments. This in the South meant destruction instead of reconstruction.

Referring to the contest of 1876, he said:

At this time there was a contest in Louisiana between the whites and blacks. General Nicholls represented the whites and Packard the blacks.

So that the Senator from Louisiana in that speech distinctly announced that the condition of things which the Democrats of Louisiana would not tolerate was the enforcement of the amendments to the Constitution, and he stated the issue correctly. The white people of Louisiana and of the South have distinctly declared to the North and throughout the whole Union that the enforcement of the amendments to the Constitution shall not be allowed.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] also made a speech, which is reported in the Times-Democrat, an abstract from which I will insert, but will not read. It is contained in the speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] made early in this session. The Senator from Louisiana in his speech distinctly asserts that the white voters of Louisiana shall rule Louisiana, that the black voters shall not by their votes control elections in Louisiana, and that this question of the enforcement of the fifteenth amendment is to be settled in absolute defiance of Northern sentiment.

Senator EUSTIS said:

In our State we find a very peculiar and serious condition of affairs confronting us. Two distinct races almost equally divided in numbers coinhabit the same territory and live under the same government and under the same institutions. It is not the fault of the white man—it is not the fault of the colored man—that race antagonism exists; it is sentiment, an instinct, a passion beyond the control of either. Therefore as much as it may be regretted, yet owing to causes inherent in human nature itself, at any moment and under provocations how unforeseen a spark may produce a conflagration in our midst. The dream of the Yankee crank is that this question can be solved by miscegenation; but my judgment is that, deplore it as we may, the inexorable logic, forced upon us by the unchangeable and eternal laws of human nature itself, is that we have to determine whether the negro will govern and rule the white man or whether the white man shall govern and rule the negro.

That is the question which we have to determine by our elections, and on that issue I need not tell you that every interest, every instinct of pride, every impulse of manhood, every element of Caucasian civilization, every personal right, every guaranty which upholds society, every function and every principle of representative government is directly at stake. It is far beyond and above the personal ambition of any individual, however illustrious or distinguished he may be as a citizen of Louisiana.

When called upon to determine to whom of these two gentlemen I am willing to confide the political leadership in this State, I have no hesitation whatever in making and in declaring my choice. I can not reconcile the safety of the State with what I understand to be the extremely conservative ideas of General Nicholls upon this race question.

General Nicholls has recovered from his conservatism.

Upon this issue I consider that he and Governor McEnery represent two opposite and irreconcilable schools of political thought and systems of political action.

In considering this question I am willing to omit what occurred before 1878; but his course and his policy in regard to the Tensas case create a strong impression in my mind that however pure were his motives it can never receive my political approval or political indorsement. He had then a grand opportunity to defy and resent Northern opinion upon this subject—to prove that it is the duty of a Democratic executive in the State of Louisiana in a crisis of race conflict to sympathize with the white people. The sooner we let the Northern people understand that their opinions on this race question will not influence or control our action in any degree the better it will be for our safety.

That is the spirit of the whole speech.

This is a domestic question; a home-rule question; one affecting our interests and our destiny; one which we understand; one which we intend to solve regardless of Northern sentiment, and in the solution of which in my judgment a policy of conservatism and of conciliation means incontestably the domination of the whites by the negro race. To accomplish the results which we now enjoy and which we had hoped we had permanently secured has cost the people of Louisiana trials, sacrifices, and tribulations which no people have ever endured since society was organized and government was first founded. From the time that the reconstruction measures were passed up to 1876, when we first succeeded in installing a Democratic governor, every election was equal to a revolution.

Military power, disfranchisement, fraud, crime, violence—every agency that has ever been known to diabolism—was used and exerted to crush the spirit of our people. It was the Democratic leaders who for eight long years preceding 1876, by their repeated appeals to the manhood, patriotism, and heroism of the Democratic white masses of the State, marshaled those brave serried ranks of loyal Democrats, those brave men who faced every vicissitude, confronted every peril, who resisted the allurements and defied the terrors of power. It was they who, appreciating the terrible significance of this race problem, created that indomitable spirit of enthusiasm in the Democratic party which rendered the victory of 1876 possible. One of them was Governor McEnery, to whose efforts and conviction the people of Louisiana are largely indebted for their emancipation from the blighting oppression of Radical rule.

* * * * * * *

And he says the conflict is not ended, but is to be perpetual.

* * * * * * *

But there is an additional reason, in my judgment, why, if the people of Louisiana desire that peace and prosperity in the future which we now enjoy, Governor McEnery should be re-elected to the executive office. We are as far today from the solution of this negro problem as we were the day when it was first imposed upon us. We understand Governor McEnery's views, his convictions, and his policy, and I maintain that it would be a guaranty to our security and to our safety to have one whose firmness, independence, and resolution have been tested occupy that important office.

Those were the views of these distinguished Democratic leaders in October before Governor Nicholls was nominated. I proceed now to some events immediately connected with the canvass which ensued.

After it opened Governor Warmoth concluded to favor the policy of having Republicans unite with some of the various Democratic factions in the election of local officers, and he wrote a letter to this effect. I find it in the Times, of Greenville, Miss., Saturday, March 3, 1888, as follows:

WARMOTH'S GAME—WARMOTH OUTLINES THE REPUBLICAN POLICY AS TO LOCAL AFFAIRS.

[Special to Times-Democrat.]

BATON ROUGE, February 25.

The following letter from ex-Governor Warmoth to the local head of the Republican party has excited no little interest and comment in political circles:

"MAGNOLIA PLANTATION,
"Lawrence Post-office, February 23, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 21st, in which you inform me that harmony exists among the Republicans of the parish of East Baton Rouge, and that you contemplate a union with the McEnery faction on local officers in your parish. You also ask my advice relative thereto. I cordially indorse the policy which you propose to inaugurate, and trust that it will find a ready acceptance at the hands of your neighbors. I regard any movement which will create good feeling and harmony between the two races and tend to obligate the race question in politics as of the highest importance to the colored people.

"In times past some of our colored friends have been inclined to draw the color line themselves, under the advice of selfish men, who were ignorant or heedless of the misfortunes which such a course would entail upon them. The proscription and injustice under which you have suffered so long may not have been without compensation if it has taught the necessity and policy of cultivating the most friendly relations with your white neighbors.

"You can not get along without them, and they would sustain a great loss if deprived of your population. We are essential to each other's prosperity, and the man who would engender discord in our midst means no good to either race.

"I regard your movement of more importance to you and the welfare of the people than any question of office or emoluments. I congratulate you and the white people of your parish on the good sense and good feeling which you say prevail. In this parish the Nicholls faction has combined with the colored people on the local offices, and have shown the utmost liberality in the distribution of the honors. It is becoming of the McEnery men of East Baton Rouge to do the same, and I hope the disposition so commendable in your neighbors will spread to every parish in the State.

"Very truly, yours,

"H. C. WARMOTH.

"Mr. ANTHONY BENJAMIN,
"President Parish Committee, East Baton Rouge."

Thereupon the Greenville Times, seeing that these unions of Republicans with Democrats in the local elections might result eventually in a free vote and an honest count for the Republican State ticket, publishes directly after Governor Warmoth's letter what it calls "Madison Parish's Checkmate" to this kind of an arrangement, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MADISON PARISH'S CHECKMATE.

Whereas in this State the dominant white race only has the intelligence, education, experience, and influence necessary to secure the proper administration of parochial and State governments, and also own probably forty-nine fiftieths of the realty in the State; and

Whereas in the riparian parishes of the State north of Red River, the white Republicans do not number probably one in thirty of the white population, and of this number those who are Republicans purely from principle either cooperate with white Democrats, or remain passive, prompted so to do by considerations connected with local duties of higher or good citizenship, the few who take an active part in politics being of that unworthy class who would willingly sacrifice the interest of the country and the peace of society in the reckless, self-seeking effort to secure political office; and

Whereas these few political vampires are the active organizers of the ignorant and corrupt would-be "political leaders" among the negroes—and so associated, this pestiferous band seek to create antagonisms and strife between the races; and

Whereas the right of society to defend itself against the invasion of an enemy or enemies is an essential right of manhood and citizenship: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That we, the white citizens of Madison Parish assert

First. Our earnest fealty to both Federal and State governments.

Second. We, without regard to party affiliations, serve notice on all and each disturber of the peace of our parish and inciters of race antagonisms and conflicts to instantly desist. And for once and the last time we admonish them not to be slow about it. We mean business.

Third. That we denounce as unworthy of recognition socially, recreant to race obligations and the duties of honest citizenship, any white citizen who will allow his name to go on a political ticket formed, or attempted to be formed, by corrupt negro politicians, urged and incited to activity by the despicable, loathsome, and self-seeking relics of the carpet-bag rule which immediately followed and was only made possible by the temporary disruption of society resulting from the civil war.

Fourth. We assure our colored fellow-citizens that we have for them only the kindest feelings, and that the action which we now take is to prevent the miserable, corrupt party hacks and tricksters from creating trouble between them and the white citizens, who are by every instinct of birth and property interests their best friends. We therefore urge our colored fellow-citizens to denounce these would-be disturbers of the existing kindly relations between the races, and to keep away from them, that the innocent may not share punishment that may at any time overtake disturbers of the peace of society.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Secretary will read from the Southwestern Christian Advocate a statement from the Shreveport Democrat of what they propose to do with "Independentism."

The Secretary read as follows:

THE "HIGHER CIVILIZATION OF LOUISIANA."

The Shreveport Democrat, the recognized organ of the Nicholls Democrats, and the most influential paper in North Louisiana, recently gave the following article to its readers:

"WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH INDEPENDENTISM?

"It is now but six weeks till the people of this State will be called on to decide at the polls what officers shall serve for the next four years. With regard to the State ticket there is practically no division of sentiment among the Democrats of Louisiana, but we regret to see that in many of the parishes Independentism is raising its head, and that only strict party discipline, rigidly enforced, will prevent local catastrophes to the Democracy.

"The question therefore very naturally arises, shall our attitude towards the Independents be the same as towards the Republicans? Shall we adopt the same heroic measures in getting rid of the one as the other? The Democrat has an answer ready at hand: The Democrats of Louisiana must apply the same forcible logic to Independentism that we apply to Republicanism. One is as great a menace to the continuance of good government as the other and both must be rooted out."

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I present a copy of the Madison Times, R. C. Weightman, editor and proprietor, P. W. Hickey, publisher, Saturday March 24, 1888, which contains the Democratic ticket at the head of its columns, and has an editorial headed "Governor McEnery," continuing as follows:

GOVERNOR M'ENERY.

This gentleman made a speech at Tallulah last Monday, that deserves some comment, in view of the position he occupies.

* * * * * * *

The governor of the State of Louisiana whose public proclamation that there shall be a fair and free election has been spread from one end of the State to the other, burgeons forth as the most violent and unscrupulous of bulldozers. In his speech at Tallulah he pictured in burning language the evil of carpet-bag rule. He turned back the pages of history fourteen years, and portrayed in language calculated to arouse the fiercest passions the hideous and unparalleled state of affairs then existing, and declared that rather than witness the return of such evils he would prefer to see the State wrapped in revolution from the Arkansas line to the Gulf, and so would every true man. He painted the evils that would result in case Warmoth should be elected, urged the necessity of presenting an unbroken front to the common Republican enemy, and wound up by declaring that during the present contest the law should be suspended until the danger was past.

The speech, throughout, was a plain and unvarnished plea for the strictest drawing of the color line, and a call on the white men of the State to unite, to defeat by fair means or foul the aspirations of the Republican party, through its most conspicuous and ablest lieutenant—Warmoth. Coming from a private citizen such utterances, mean nothing but the vaporings of a narrow-minded individual, but coming from the governor of the State of Louisiana it means far more. It means that the boasted political freedom of this State is a fraud, that political freedom means only to vote the Democratic ticket, and nothing else, it means that the Northern men who are invited and urged to bring their families among us and settle are deceived; it means that Louisiana is to be set back at least twenty years in her march to prosperity and progress; it means that the negro is a Democrat only by compulsion; and it means that failing to be governor, that Governor McEnery cares not for the prosperity of the State, and the welfare of its people.

The Madison Times, of April 7, 1888, follows up this editorial by another:

WHICH DOES HE MEAN?

Not a Democratic paper in the State has ventured to challenge the strictures made in the Times of March 24 on Governor McEnery. It is hard to overcome cold facts, and Governor McEnery did publicly pledge himself to see that there should be a free vote and a fair count. General Nicholls never wanted anything else, and it has been the proud boast of the public men of Louisiana that the State was Democratic on a fair vote. The Times-Democrat and the States both stoutly maintain that there is to be a free vote and fair count, and place implicit confidence in Governor McEnery's pledge to that effect. The Times does not. The governor can not mean that he will see to it that there shall be a free vote and a fair count, and that in order to secure it he will countenance suspension of the law until the count is accomplished. If he intends that there shall be a fair election there is no occasion for a suspension of the law. A free vote and a fair count do not run hand in hand with a suspension of the law, and Governor McEnery can not be sincere in advocating both.

It is a beautiful and instructive position for the governor of this State to occupy, publicly pledging himself that the election shall be absolutely fair and above suspicion, in one breath, and in another advising the suspension of the law. If he is seeking notoriety, he is seeking well, he will surely get it, for he is the most conspicuous figure in this State to-day, and his fame will become national. He holds the election machinery of the State in his hands. He can use it to insure a fair election and close his administration with a crowning glory, or he can prostitute it to the basest uses and retire from office buried under a load of everlasting infamy.

The following article appears in the same paper:

WHAT IT MEANS.

Governor McEnery's utterance at Tallulah, "let the law be silent until the danger is passed," could not be more significant if volumes had been written and it is a plain and unvarnished warning to those who would jeopardize the public safety, that they must expect the direst consequences.—Tensas Gazette.

That is about the way Governor McEnery was interpreted here. Any one can interpret such an utterance. "He who runs may read." It authorizes any villainy, murder, assassination, anything vicious and cowardly, whether it was intended to mean it or not, and that is wherein it is so infamous.

The Madison Times of Saturday, April 14, contains the following editorial:

NEARLY OVER.

The agony is nearly over. In a few days the election will have been held and the result known. Whether the horrible advice to suspend the law has been heeded or not will then be known. On Governor McEnery will fall the odium of promulgating such an outrage on civilization, and on him in any event will fall the horror of political darkness forever. He has effectually destroyed any political aspirations he may have entertained, and no administration can afford to publicly reward the apostle of such a creed. In her most desperate straits Louisiana never witnessed the open and avowed advocacy of such measures, and it remained for Governor McEnery to be the first public man in the State to not only indorse but to advise the suspension of the law. He may have hoped to be a judge of the supreme court of the State, but he has placed it beyond the power of any administration with any self-respect to place him in such a position.

Yet, Mr. President, that judgeship was kept vacant by Governor McEnery until after he had succeeded in electing as his successor Francis T. Nicholls by the means which have been described, and then Governor Nicholls appointed Samuel D. McEnery to fill that judgeship, and he is now a judge for fifteen years in the State of Louisiana as the reward of the deeds which have appeared in the testimony which I have submitted.

Will the Secretary read the letter of H. B. Holmes, stating to the public why he, an independent Democrat, retired from the canvass?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TO THE PUBLIC.

After the excitement of the campaign is over and men take time to reflect, no one will doubt that I was the choice of a majority of the resident voters of this parish for the office of sheriff and that my nomination in the mass-meeting was fraudulently defeated by the votes of non-residents imported for that purpose. The refusal of my opponent to accept my proposition to submit our claims to the State central committee, of which the member from this parish was his earnest supporter, would of itself be sufficient, if any evidence was needed, to prove this fact, which is now a matter of public notoriety. We agreed afterwards to submit our claims to a primary election, but before the time fixed for the election the parish executive committee, composed mainly of the strong supporters of my opponent, instructed the delegates to the district convention to stay out of it unless allowed the representation which this parish committee desired.

This was a usurpation of power unheard of before in politics, and was in effect an order to disband the party. My opponent was one of the delegates to the convention, and took part with the rest in bolting the district convention and in putting up an independent district ticket, headed by his strong personal friend, Mr. Montgomery, for the senate. I then became convinced that it would be useless for me to expect that a parish committee which had ordered and an opponent who had taken part actively in the independent movement would be controlled by any party rules, and recognized that I would have opposition in any event, and therefore I withdrew from the primaries and announced my candidacy as the rightful nominee of the party.

Since that time I have been opposed by a campaign of calumny and abuse, and although it was found impossible to obtain a basis on which to rest any charge against my past conduct, either as a citizen or as an official, the minds of the people have been kept constantly inflamed with base and malicious charges, all founded on what it was alleged I intended or was in the act of doing. All malicious falsehoods, but so systematically and carefully concocted and so industriously circulated that in most instances I was the last to hear of them, and in every instance it was impossible to trace one to its source. Then an alarm was raised, lest we should be forced to submit to negro supremacy and again of danger to the State ticket. It is of course true that there was no foundation for either of these war cries. One has only to reflect a moment to know that negro supremacy could not exist unless supported by Federal bayonets, and that the election machinery of the State renders the election of a Republican State ticket an impossibility. Still these alarm cries served their purpose, in that they alarmed and inflamed the public mind, and when properly supported by judicious lying, had a strong tendency to prejudice the public against my candidacy.

Next the State administration entered the race—removed the returning officer, a life-long Democrat and a sterling officer, whose only offense was that he supported my candidacy, and placed in his stead the nephew of my opponent, who worked actively for the election of the Republican ticket four years ago, and in the person of the governor of the State proclaimed that the law should be suspended until what that official was pleased to term "the danger" was past. Following this remarkable utterance of the chief executive of the State, armed men were introduced into the parish, and have been kept here ever since without, so far as I could see, the slightest cause or necessity, the negroes being perfectly quiet, and seeming to seek for nothing except to be protected, and the real object being, as I am convinced, to prevent my re-election to the office of sheriff.

My conviction as to this is strengthened by the fact that the worst of the raids was made in the section owned mainly by my warm personal friends and supporters. If I continue to be a candidate I must expect to meet these men, who have been imported, at every polling place. My only chance to succeed would be to follow the advice given by his excellency the governor of the State and suspend the law until after the election by bringing in an equal number of men (which I could do) and meeting force with force; in short, by bringing on a civil war. Rather than do this I have concluded to give up my rights and withdraw from the race.

H. B. HOLMES.

Mr. CHANDLER. There we see another Democratic candidate disappear. Whether he will be first a mugwump and then join the Republican party, or whether the bulldozers have effectually whipped him in, remains to be seen; but this is a Democratic exposition of the election methods of Governor McEnery.

The Madison Times of Saturday, April 21, 1888, in an editorial headed "Of no use," says:

The honorable Sam is a terror when he turns himself loose. He is such a hard man to base calculations on. He will promise on his word of honor that there shall be a free vote and a fair count, and before these words have time to get cool he will fiercely advocate the suspension of the law. No one knows better than he does what it means, yet he deliberately proclaims it, and while doing it has his covetous eyes fixed on the vacant judgeship. He a judge! Why, the very stones would cry out in indignant protest. A man sworn to execute the law advising the suspension of the law he is pledged to execute, hoping to be made judge! Why, General Nicholls would prove false to every public utterance he has ever made and to his own manhood to recommend such a man for judge. He could not do it.

But Governor Nicholls did it. I ask the Secretary to read the editorial in the same number of the Madison Times, headed "The law was suspended."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The article will be read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE LAW WAS SUSPENDED.

Governor McEnery has covered himself with glory. He is, in the first burst of enthusiasm, inspired by party success, hailed as the saver of his State, and for a brief moment is invested with heroic attributes. But his triumph will be brief; with the sober second thought will come the consideration of the results of the suspend the law process. The ridiculous majority of over 60,000 (or perchance 70,000) will make trouble in local and district matters; the unparalleled Democratic majority will excite derisive sneers through the North, and will go far towards electing a Republican President (though as opposed to Mr. Cleveland that would not be a terrible misfortune), and when these things come about the curses both loud and deep showered on the head of S. D. McEnery will make him quail in dismay before the storm.

Only a suspension of the law could produce such an unnecessary and exaggerated majority, and Louisiana, and the Democratic party, if it indorses such methods, will become a by-word and a reproach. A weapon has been put into Republican hands to break Democratic heads, and the heads will surely suffer. A mistake has been made, and it won't be long before everybody will know it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now come to the letter of Henry C. Warmoth, dated at New Orleans, April 13, 1888, addressed to his fellow-citizens of Louisiana, the whole of which I shall put in the RECORD. I will state the material points of his allegations against Governor McEnery. His charge is that Governor McEnery and General Nicholls were reconciled after Nicholls was nominated; that an arrangement was entered into by which McEnery agreed to take the stump for Nicholls; that Nicholls when elected would appoint him on the supreme bench in the place of Justice Todd, whose term had expired, the vacancy to be left open in order to allow the arrangement to be carried out; that McEnery opened the campaign on the 15th of March, in his speech at Tally's opera house, declaring that the laws should be silent, and demanding that the power of the negroes to organize should be broken up in its incipiency. Governor Warmoth further charges that Governor McEnery wrote to the returning officers as follows:

Warmoth is developing too much strength. We must beat him. See to it that your parish returns a large Democratic majority.

And Governor Warmoth also says:

I dare Governor McEnery to deny that he has written this letter, not to one, but to many returning officers, besides many other leading Democrats.

The charge of Warmoth against Governor McEnery was made in the former's circular of April 13, 1888; it was read in this Chamber on the 1st day of May, 1888, by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] in his speech, and so far as I know it has not been denied by Governor McEnery that he sent out such letters to the returning officers. On this state of facts it seems to me that I can join with Governor Warmoth in his charge that Governor McEnery "organized a conspiracy to have the votes of the Republicans suppressed throughout the State of Louisiana," and that it was "his purpose to have ballot-boxes stuffed, returns falsified, and results declared which are false, and men put into office by fraud and violence."

I insert the whole of Governor Warmoth's letter, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 13, 1888.

Fellow-citizens of Louisiana:

I address you in the interest of law and order, decency and fair play. I accepted the Republican nomination for governor with the greatest reluctance, and with the fullest assurances from Governor McEnery that we would have a "free and fair election." He has repudiated his pledges, falsified his word, and has organized a conspiracy to carry the election by fraud and violence.

Governor McEnery, in his speech in New Orleans, in January, just before the election of delegates to the nominating convention, said: "So far as my administration of the election laws is concerned, I pledge you to-night that not only in the city of New Orleans, but throughout the State of Louisiana, I will see an honest and fair election; that every vote cast is counted as deposited, and that no substitution of ballots is practiced, but that the voice of all the voters in the State as deposited in the ballot-box shall find expression and receive recognition, and the officers elected commissioned. To that end, I will remove any registrar or returning officer in the city or State that I have reason to believe will aid in the suppression or changing of the popular will."

When the executive of the State, charged with the enforcement of the laws, and having absolute control of the elections in all their details, announces that he will this time make an exception to the rule, and pledges his word that he will "see an honest and fair election, will allow no substitution of ballots, and that the voice of all the voters of the State shall find expression and receive recognition," we are expected to believe that the man will stand by his word of honor, though he failed as an officer to observe his oath.

The convention was held on the 10th of January, and after a bitter and protracted contest General Nicholls was nominated for governor over Governor McEnery. The Nicholls men on the committee on resolutions were asked to report a resolution indorsing Governor McEnery's administration. The question was submitted to the caucus of Nicholls men, who voted it down. J. D. Houston, a McEnery leader, informed the Nicholls caucus that unless the vote was reconsidered and Governor McEnery indorsed, he would offer a resolution in the convention declaring that the Democratic party demanded a "free vote and a fair count." Terrified by this threat, the Nicholls caucus reconsidered the vote by which they refused to endorse Governor McEnery's administration and adopted the resolution. It was reported by the committee on resolutions, adopted by the convention, and no resolution was introduced on the subject of a "free vote and a fair count."

No intercourse was had between McEnery and Nicholls for several weeks after this convention. The manner in which McEnery spoke of Nicholls showed the utmost bitterness and contempt for him. He repeated again and again his determination to have a "free election and a fair count." Republicans were told by him to go ahead; that there would be no bulldozing and no cheating at this election; that as Nicholls had denounced him and the Ouachita and Tensas plan, he should have a fair election "just once, and see how he liked it."

This condition of affairs continued till I decided to accept the nomination for governor on the Republican ticket. In an interview between Governor McEnery, General McMillen, and myself at the St. Charles Hotel, Governor McEnery reiterated his declaration that he would see that a free, honest, and fair election should be held in April. These assurances were again and again repeated by Governor McEnery to a number of persons whose names can be forwarded.

About the second week of March certain Federal officials brought Governor McEnery and General Nicholls together, and over a dinner at Moreau's these two belligerent leaders were united in friendship. The details of the trade are not known to me, but it was reported and generally believed throughout the State that McEnery would take the stump for Nicholls and that he would be appointed on the supreme bench in place of Justice Todd, whose term has already expired. Whatever the agreement may have been, McEnery began the campaign at Shreveport on the 15th of March at Tally's Opera House.

Speaking of my election, he said:

"I tell you there is danger, and North Louisiana will have to save this State from disgrace. If you permit the negroes to organize, you will have to break it by power, and go right now and break it in its incipiency. Before I will see such another state of affairs I will wrap the State in revolution from the Gulf to the Arkansas line. The white people under the Radical régime were fast going towards the condition of Hayti, and I now ask you to establish to the world that we, the white people, intend to rule the destinies of this country. We have now a Gaul at our doors, and it is time we shall say that the law shall be silent, and uphold our liberties at all hazards."

Governor McEnery was followed by Colonel Jack, of Natchitoches, who said:

"You have heard the assurances of our chief executive, that come what will or may, he will wrap this State in revolution, from the Arkansas line to the Gulf, rather than have Radicalism come into power. And I tell you we are in danger, with the astute and wily Warmoth as a leader—the wily, crafty, and insidious gentleman from New Orleans.

"If this state of affairs should confront him, all Governor McEnery would have to do would be to issue his fiat or manifesto, and the people of North Louisiana would come to his rescue and redeem the State as they did before; and if what I say is treason let them make the most of it."

McEnery and Jack made similar, but more extreme speeches at Monroe and Tallulah, and McEnery has followed it up in other speeches throughout the State.

Not satisfied with this he has written to his returning officers, whose duty it is to fix the polling places, appoint the commissioners and clerks of election, and return the votes in all of the parishes of the State, as follows:

"Warmoth is developing too much strength. We must beat him. See to it that your parish returns a large Democratic majority."

I dare Governor McEnery to deny that he has written this letter. Not to one, but to many returning officers, besides many other leading Democrats.

The result of all this is that the Republicans will have no commissioner at any single polling place in the State of Louisiana. There are over one thousand polling places in the State of Louisiana. There are three commissioners of election appointed by the returning officer to each poll. Not one of these 3,000 officials will be a Republican; every one of them will be a Democrat, and most of them selected for the purpose of not counting the votes, but to cheat the Republicans out of their votes.

Is General Nicholls in this conspiracy? Will he accept the high office of governor when it is stolen for him? Will he dare to put a man on the supreme bench of the State who has been guilty of all the offenses he ever charged him with, and added his broken oath as executive of the State?

I charge that Governor McEnery has organized a conspiracy to have the vote of the Republicans suppressed throughout the State of Louisiana, and that it is his purpose to have ballot-boxes stuffed, returns falsified, and results declared which are false, and men put into office by fraud and violence.

I appeal to the honest people of Louisiana in the name of all that is honorable and right to condemn this conspiracy.

H. C. WARMOTH.

Mr. President, it may be said that all my remarks hitherto have proceeded upon the theory that all the colored voters in Louisiana desire to vote the Republican ticket, and do vote the Republican ticket whenever they have an opportunity to vote. The contrary of this was alleged by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] in his speech on the 1st day of May, contained in the RECORD of May 5. I read from that speech:

When that election shall be investigated through and through you will find that the colored people as well as the white people rallied around Nicholls.

I have here extracts from some of the papers of Louisiana, among them extracts from papers edited and owned by colored men, in which they urge the colored voters to cast their votes for Nicholls.

He also says:

The leading Republican organ in the city of New Orleans, edited and owned by white men and Republicans, the Item, says.

And then proceeds to quote the statement that there has been a voluntary accession of the negro vote to the Democratic party. I have first to say that the statement of the Senator from Louisiana that the Item is the leading Republican organ in the city of New Orleans, edited and controlled by white men and Republicans, is incorrect. I do not understand that it is a Republican paper or has ever pretended to be; I do not know whether it is owned in whole or in part by Republicans; but I have in my hand a copy of the Daily City Item, New Orleans, Monday evening, July 9, 1888, and I find at the left of the heading the words, "A strictly impartial paper." I do, however, find that the Item is publishing paragraphs which I do not see in the regular Democratic papers. I ask the Secretary to read one taken from the Item of June 28, headed "Enfranchisement of the ballot."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF THE BALLOT.

"Editor of The Item:

"As ex-Governor McEnery had suspended the law until the election of April 17, 1888, for governor was over, I would like to know if the law stands suspended until the November election is past? You will greatly oblige a subscriber.

"L. P. S. A.

"P. S.—Be kind enough to publish this and your answer in to-morrow's Item."

Governor McEnery of course did not intend to, nor could he, control the action of his successor in his construction of the constitutional mandate to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. The alleged suspension of the election law could only have been intended to count in the State contest.

This presented a most extraordinary phase. The bare possibility that Warmoth might be elected and thus undo the political reforms of ten years appealed to a man of Governor McEnery's patriotism with the force of threats of insurrection or invasion. Desperate cases require desperate remedies. The governor came to the rescue, and the State was happily saved by a majority of more than 80,000.

As Governor Nicholls is pledged to the policy of a free ballot and a fair count, we take it that the apprehension of our correspondent is ill-founded. We have a double assurance that no suspension of the election laws will be permitted in November, for not only is the governor specially pledged to their enforcement, but there will be no necessity for such an exercise of unlimited power. Besides this, the laws of the United States will have some bearing on the November election, and the governor of a State can not legally suspend a Federal law, even for a patriotic purpose.

Mr. CHANDLER. I also submit another article from the Item—I do not know the date—headed "A Nut for the Whitewashers:"

A NUT FOR THE WHITEWASHERS—IT MIGHT CRACK WITH A LOUD REPORT—A WITNESS ON ELECTION METHODS.

Recently the business office of the Item sent out letters to a number of country subscribers who had fallen behind in payment of subscriptions. Among them was one to an able and distinguished Democrat, who has rendered his State and party good service, both before and since the war, and was an ardent champion of Nicholls and reform in the late State campaign.

His response to the demand to "pay up" is not only worthy of production for its philosophical acceptance of fate's stern decrees, but contains a hint to the Baton Rouge committee that is so vigorously stirring up the processes which it was found necessary to adopt to save the State from falling back into Radical misrule:

"———, July 4, 1888.

"Business Manager of the Item, New Orleans, La.:

"Your favor reached me in due course of mail. I do know that a paper can not be run without cash, and am very sorry to add, as another fact that I am too familiar with, that a farm has to be run without it.

"Such is and has been my condition for twenty months. It is the result of too much confidence in those I transacted business with, and of the political iniquities of the last election. I was an independent candidate for ———, and was certainly elected by the voters by a large majority, but was methodically counted out by the Democratic immaculate commissioners of election on account of the unprecedented popularity of Nicholls (whom it was known I supported) and the correlative unpopularity of Warmoth.

"I am the victim of a partnership and an Isaac on the altar of Democracy. He escaped immolation by the faith of his father, and I hope I may be able to survive and recuperate by an unconquerable will and unexhausted energy. Bear with me; I am working like a mule, and as soon as I can will pay like a man. I will not go into bankruptcy.

"I am planting cotton, raising corn, potatoes, pinders, pigs, calves, and chickens, and as many rats as a 70-acre farm can provide for. Have the finest grass crop you ever saw in spite of every effort to kill it.

"Yours, truly, "——— ———."

If Messrs. White, Rogers, and Crandall desire the name and parish of our correspondent they may have them on application to the Item.

The Secretary will please read an article from the Item of July 9, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The article will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

If the returning officers at the late State election had made the majority, say, eight, instead of eighty thousand, thus leaving Louisiana seemingly in the happy condition of being "doubtful" in the Presidential contest, there is no reasonable favor or consideration that our Representatives might have asked of Congress that the two parties would not have scrambled over each other in their eagerness to grant. And this might have been done just as well as not. In the hands of such able political managers as we are blessed with, the State would be quite safe for the Democracy, regardless of nominal majorities. As it is, we are so superfluously and irreclaimably "solid" that, as the Item showed from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a day or two ago, when eleven of the items of appropriation to Louisiana water courses were stricken from the river and harbor bill, by the Senate, not a solitary voice was raised in their defense and on behalf of the just claims of our people, by either a Democrat or Republican. Our local leaders should study "practical politics."

Mr. CHANDLER. The other newspaper cited by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] was the New Orleans Progress. He says:

I read now from a newspaper edited by a colored man, in the city of New Orleans—the New Orleans Progress.

I have received a copy of the New Orleans Progress, which is an interesting document. This number is that of April 28, 1888, volume 1, No. 8. So, being a weekly paper, it had been then published about eight weeks. I will read an editorial from the Progress which shows what kind of a colored Democratic paper this is:

We have several times been asked, "Who owns the Progress?" In reply we here give the names of the coproprietors, some holding, of course, larger and other smaller interests. The paper was started, not as a business venture, but as a channel for the expression of the views and opinions of its proprietors.

It was started as a matter of fact about eight weeks before the election, at the instigation of the Democratic party, in order to afford some excuse for the enormous fraudulent majorities which they knew their returning officers were about to send to the secretary of state:

An estimate of the probable weekly expenses was made and was divided into a certain number of parts or shares, each proprietor or associate, according to his ability, taking, or rather pledging himself to pay weekly, one share, two shares or more, or a fraction of a share, or his pro rata thereof, as the case might be. The agreement is verbal, but has been faithfully kept by every member, though we are glad to state that after the first few issues the paper has supported itself thus far, and bids fair to become permanently self-sustaining.

Then the names are given:

L. A. Martinet, New Orleans; M. G. Bobe, Madison; Abe Davis, St. Mary; Dan W. Williams, St. Mary: Alex. Brent, Iberia; Ovide P. Martin, Ascension; Frank Harris, Assumption; Simon Lee, New Iberia; Wm. Gorgous, St. Mary.

Mr. Gorgous is the only white man who has any interest whatever in the paper.

Men who contribute of their substance to express their faith and to support the Democratic cause can be reckoned as faithful Democrats. Hence a colored Democrat is not such a rarity in Louisiana. But it will be observed that these men, with the exception of the chief editor, are employés of the mint—

All of them except one—appointed for their service to the party at the request of their Congressmen, and herein is a lesson for the young men's Democratic association. They have just elected a city government with the aid of the colored voters. Let them use their influence with the officials elect and see to it that their deserving allies are as fairly and justly dealt with, and when next time comes around they will be able to rely on a very large proportion of the colored vote of this city without any effort to secure it.

That is the Progress, a Democratic colored paper in New Orleans—all but one of its owners Cleveland office-holders.

Further, on this question whether the colored people voted the Democratic ticket and whether the Progress represents the colored people of Louisiana, I ask the Secretary to read the letters which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letters will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

REPUBLICAN STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE,
New Orleans, La., July 15, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Your favor dated New York, July 11, 1888, in which you state that the Democrats in the Senate will complain of our assumption that all colored voters are Republicans, and will claim that thousands of colored men voted for Nicholls, and will cite the New Orleans colored Democratic paper's utterances to prove this, received yesterday.

In reply thereto I would state that to the best of my knowledge and belief there is only one paper published in New Orleans, edited and controlled by colored men, which supported the candidacy of Nicholls, and which claims to be Democratic in principle, namely, the Progress. This paper was first issued on Saturday, March 10, 1888, making six issues prior to the election on the 17th of the past April. This paper is still in existence, and is supposed to be published by the Progress Publishing Company, with L. A. Martinet as editor, M. G. Bobe associate editor, and Abe. Davis business manager. The first two mentioned persons are very fair in complexion and would never be taken for negroes, unless they were specially pointed out. A list of the stockholders will be forwarded you. With one exception they are all colored men; and again, with another exception, they are all employed in the Federal service in this city (the mint).

The editor of this paper, Mr. Martinet, was for many years supposed to be a Republican, he having affiliated with that party up to and including the Presidential election of 1884. In 1872 he was elected to the Legislature from St. Martin Parish, and was re-elected in 1874. Both times he was elected as an avowed Republican by Republican electors. While in the Legislature he was appointed deputy naval officer at this port under the then naval officer, Mr. A. F. Riard. The position was worth $2,500 per annum, and he was retained therein until the winter of 1876, when he was either removed or permitted to resign, it being claimed against him that he voted in the State election of that year for Nicholls, the Democratic candidate for governor.

Whether true or not he did not leave the Republican party, for in 1880 he was found supporting the cause of General Grant for President, and in the Congressional election of the same year supported the Republican nominee in his district (the Third), the Hon. C. B. Darrall.

In the same year a split was brought about in the Republican party of this

State, and Mr. Martinet allied himself with what was known as the Beattie faction (Beattie was the Republican candidate for governor in 1879), and was made either secretary or a member of the Beattie executive committee of the Republican party of this State, which was supposed to be in direct antagonism to the regular Republican organization, the most conspicuous member thereof at that time being Senator Kellogg. In fact, the two factions were generally known as the Beattie and Kellogg factions. In the latter portion of 1881 or the earlier portion of 1882 Mr. Martinet succeeded in getting General Badger, collector of customs at this port and a warm personal friend of Mr. Kellogg, to appoint him a clerk in his office. In a few months thereafter, or just preceding the appointment of Governor Pinchback by President Arthur as surveyor of customs at this port, Mr. Martinet was appointed deputy surveyor of customs, the salary of which was $2,500 per annum.

About this time Mr. Martinet left the Beattie wing of the party, and as he lived in the same Congressional district as Mr. Beattie and Governor Kellogg, and both of these gentlemen being candidates for the Republican nomination for Congress, he supported the claims of Mr. Kellogg, who was nominated. Beattie ran as an Independent Republican, but was defeated, Kellogg being elected. Martinet was secretary of the Kellogg campaign committee. In 1883 Mr. Martinet was editor of a Republican paper, the Louisiana Standard, which was published in this city and owned by Federal employés. In the State election of 1884, which occurred in the spring, Mr. Martinet was a delegate to the Republican State convention (at the same time being president of the Republican committee for St. Martin Parish) which nominated John A. Stevenson, lately deceased, for governor, and supported his candidacy. In the same convention he was elected a delegate to the National Republican convention of 1884 to represent the Third Congressional district, attended that body, and voted for President Arthur.

Returning home, Mr. Martinet advocated the election of Blaine and Logan, not only doing so through the columns of the paper which he edited, but also from the hustings of the Third Congressional district. After the national convention of 1884 he became dissatisfied with Mr. Kellogg (the man whom he had supported for Congress in 1882), and refused to give him his support for re-election, preferring Mr. Gay, the Democratic nominee, who was indorsed by a faction of Republicans headed by Mr. Martinet. In October of the same year he resigned his position as deputy surveyor of customs. Be it remembered that all of this time he was supporting Blaine and Logan. After the result of the election had been ascertained to be Democratic, it was announced that Mr. Martinet had espoused Democracy and all its attendant horrors.

Later on he was offered the position of assistant book-keeper in the United States mint, this city, by a Democratic superintendent. This he declined, his reasons I have heard stated being that he wanted something better, something that would compensate him for his so-called martyrdom in his support of Mr. GAY. Later on he succeeded in getting his brother-in-law, a white man, appointed to a position in the coiner's department of the mint; he has since been discharged. He also succeeded in 1885 in getting his brother appointed to a position in the railway mail service, running out from this city.

In 1886 he was appointed a trustee of the Southern University by Governor McEnery. This school is a State institution for the education of persons of color.

At the election of officers he was a candidate for secretary of the board of trustees, an office which pays $50 per month, but through the instrumentality of the colored members of the board (they are half colored and half white) he was defeated and a white man elected. His wife is a teacher in this school. So unpopular is he with the colored people of this city that a mass-meeting of them was held, he was denounced, and a committee appointed to wait upon the governor and ask his removal. When interviewed by a daily paper here (I believe the Times-Democrat) as to the causes of his unpopularity with the colored people and the reasons for their denunciations of him, he answered in sum and substance that it was because of his being a Democrat. This answer of his completely refutes his assertions, made recently in the Progress, that a considerable number of negroes in Louisiana were Democratic and voted for Nicholls. For if they denounced him because of his being a Democrat it does not stand to reason that they would vote for a Democrat.

Mr. M. G. Bobe, the associate editor of the Progress, was a Republican as long as the Republican party kept him in office and for a few years prior thereto. His first office of importance was received at the hands of the Republicans of Madison Parish, in 1879, he being elected in that year to the constitutional convention of 1879 as a Republican. He was nominated by the Republicans in the same year for secretary of state on their ticket headed by Mr. Beattie. In 1884, having lost the position of deputy collector of internal revenue for his district (the Fifth Congressional), he supported the candidacy of J. Floyd King, Democrat, as against General Frank Morey, Republican, although advocating the election of Blaine and Logan. In 1885 King succeeded in having Bobe appointed to a laborer's position in the coiner's department of the mint, which place he now holds. In the fall of last year he resigned as a member of the Republican State central committee from the Fifth Congressional district.

Abe Davis, business manager of the Progress, lives at Franklin, St. Mary's Parish, which is in Congressman GAY's district. For a number of years prior to the Presidential election of 1884 Davis had been postmaster at Franklin, La., which is a Presidential office, and had always been a Republican, bold and aggressive, supporting Blaine and Logan and Kellogg in 1884. When the present Administration came into power Davis had nigh two years of his original four to serve before the expiration of his commission. The Democrats of Franklin were divided as to whom should be postmaster, so Congressman GAY, to avoid antagonisms, allowed Davis to serve out his time, and Davis, evidently feeling in a reciprocal mood, commenced to feel the spirit of Democracy taking possession of him, and so well did he impress the facts of his conversion upon the Democrats of his section that last year when he retired from his postmastership they brought him to New Orleans and put him to work in the United States mint, where he now is.

I will supplement this letter by another to-morrow.

Very respectfully,

P. F. HERWIG,
President Republican State Central Committee.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Washington, D. C.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 16, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will find copy of the Progress with article relative to the stockholders of the same. (See page 3, marked.) Excepting Mr. Martinet and Mr. Bobe, all of the gentlemen mentioned as stockholders reside in the Third Congressional district of this State, now represented by Mr. GAY. They one and all, excepting the white man (of whom I know nothing except that he is not a late convert to Democracy), advocated the election of Blaine and Logan in 1884, and probably will be great admirers of Harrison and Morton after the 6th of November next.

While upon this subject I would state that it is my candid and honest opinion that there are not five hundred colored men within the borders of Louisiana who voluntarily vote the Democratic State ticket. The Democrats claim that they do, and cite as an instance the stockholders of the Progress, who (probably excepting Mr. Martinet, and he is an erratic Frenchman), together with several other colored men in the Federal service here, claim to be Democrats, and who became such simply because the Republicans refused to give them an office, or else because the Democrats have given them one.

I trust that your resolution will pass the Senate, for I feel assured that the publishing of the evidence brought out before an investigating committee will but make votes for Harrison and Morton, as well as show up the rottenness of the Democracy.

Any further service that I can render you will be cheerfully done.

Very respectfully,

P. F. HERWIG,
President Republican State Central Committee.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. CHANDLER. As still further bearing upon the question whether the Louisiana negroes vote the Democratic ticket, I will put in an editorial from the Louisiana Standard, edited by T. B. Stamps;

NEW ORLEANS, August 11, 1888.

The Louisiana negroes, then, did not vote the Democratic ticket. They voted wherever permitted to vote at all for the Republican nominees. There is not to-day in all Louisiana the one Democratic negro to the five hundred Republicans. Possibly it might be better if there were. It might conduce, maybe, to the greater division among the whites. We are not discussing theories. We are dealing with actual facts. The one Democratic negro out of five hundred we count a reasonable estimate. Where found, again, he is almost invariably so Democratic through Democratic boodle. The four hundred and ninety-nine are unswervingly Republican. We are not here dealing with local issues. Locally, the negroes may vote for Democratic candidates.

They are Republicans all the same upon a square party fight. They were here unquestionably true and zealous enough. They voted straight, or not at all.

The Louisiana election was but the wholesale cheat and a lie. That better than 80,000 majority for Nicholls was made up out of whole cloth. It is the result of ballot-box stuffing, and falsified returns. The Republican ticket should in honesty have been duly returned. The Hon. Henry Clay Warmoth and the Hon. Andrew Hero should to-day in honesty be governor and lieutenant-governor of Louisiana. No really intelligent man in Louisiana believes for a moment that Nicholls was elected. Even his most ardent friends decline to so claim. It would be an insult to his intelligence to assume that he believed it himself.

Louisiana was stolen. That is the long and short of it. The Democratic officials are filling their stolen offices.

The larger proportion of the members of the Louisiana General Assembly were returned through stolen negro votes. The fraudulent members, so fraudulently returned, went through the farce of a fraudulent election for two United States Senators.

These are but the plain unvarnished facts. They are the facts which will be brought out should the Chandler resolution result in a Senatorial investigation. May the Northern Mugwumps, with the Springfield Republican, make the most of them.

Ex-Governor Henry C. Warmoth has written me a letter on this point, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE OAKLAND HOTEL, ST. CLAIR SPRINGS, MICH., July 16, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: The statement that at the late election in Louisiana the colored people in any considerable numbers voted the Democratic ticket is absolutely false.

If the negroes were Democrats, why was it that the Nicholls managers, having become alarmed, sought McEnery, whom they had abused from one end of the State to the other, covering his name with the vilest epithets ever applied to a man in his position, and begged him to apply the methods by which he had carried the negro parishes heretofore so successfully, methods which General Nicholls had bitterly denounced in his speeches and which Governor McEnery had defended as necessary in order to keep the State in the hands of the Democrats and to "save white civilization from destruction?"

It is susceptible of proof that the greatest consternation existed among the Nicholls leaders for fear McEnery would carry out his threat "to see an honest and fair election."

It is also well known that a conference was brought about between Nicholls and McEnery, and that it resulted in an agreement that McEnery should use his unlimited power to elect Nicholls, and that McEnery should have the vacant judgeship on the supreme bench, which McEnery kept open for months after it should have been filled, in order that Nicholls might give it to him on his accession to office. This consideration was too much for McEnery. It is an office having a term of twelve years and a salary of $6,000 per annum. He went shamelessly back on his public pledge made in January: "So far as my administration of the election laws is concerned, I pledge you to-night that not only in the city of New Orleans, but throughout the State of Louisiana, I will see an honest and fair election; that every vote cast is counted as deposited, and that no substitution of ballots is practiced, but that the voice of all the voters in the State as deposited in the ballot-box shall find expression and receive recognition and the officers elected commissioned. To that end I will remove any registrar or returning officer in the city or State that I have reason to believe will aid in the suppression or changing of the popular will."

If it is true that the negroes were Democrats, why did McEnery take the stump after this conference and agreement, and in the most shameless manner draw the color line, tell the people that the contest was between the white and black races; that the State was in the greatest danger of Africanization, and that they must rise and save their civilization. Why did he tell the people that the negroes "regarded Warmoth as a demigod, and would rally to his support as one man;" why declare in his speeches all over the State, "I tell you there is danger. If you permit the negroes to organize you will have to break it by power, and go right now and break it in its incipiency."

Why did he "suspend the law till the danger was over." Why is it that independent Democrats who were running for local offices with the support of the Republicans were told that they were "helping to establish negro rule, and that unless they withdrew from their candidacy they would be killed."

Why were returning officers, the personal and political friends of Governor McEnery, removed from office when suspected of being friendly to the Independent ticket in the parishes? If it is true that the colored voters were Democrats, why did the Democratic press and orators unanimously denounce the Republicans for being a negro party and intending "negro rule?" Why were Hawkins and Johnson, the colored candidates for the Legislature in the parish of Madison, driven away from their homes by the members of the Democratic committee? Why were the one hundred men whipped, killed, or driven away from the parish of St. Mary just prior to the election, all colored people? Why did the brother of Senator GIBSON and his band of night riders in the parish of Terrebonne visit the homes of colored men only, killing some, whipping others, and firing volley after volley into the houses of others, whose only crime was that they were Republicans, and would not come out of their houses to be killed or whipped? Why was William Adams shot down in the streets of the city of Monroe on the Sunday morning before the election? Having failed to kill him, why was he decoyed into the court-house on a promise of protection and there murdered by having his throat cut from ear to ear, and his body dropped into the middle of the Ouachita River? This parish gave the Republican ticket 5 votes, and Nicholls was returned 2,994.

If all the colored people and all the white people were Democrats, why did the returning officers refuse to give the Republicans representatives among the commissioners of election at the polls, in two-thirds of the parishes of the State, and all of the largely negro parishes?

Why did General Nicholls's trusted personal and political friend, Colonel Patten, the register of voters in New Orleans, appointed by Governor McEnery, at the request of Nicholls, just before, and to conduct, the election, refuse to accord the Republicans a commissioner of election, at the polls in New Orleans? Why did Judge White, one of the senators-elect, his attorney and the manager of the Nicholls campaign, contest so vigorously this right, and yield only after we had obtained a decree from two of the State courts and had it confirmed by the Supreme Court?

If the negroes and white people are Democrats in Louisiana, why was it necessary for the Young Men's Democratic Association of the city of New Orleans, whose independent ticket the Republicans supported for city offices, find it necessary to turn out en masse with Winchester rifles and sit up with the boxes for two days and nights to prevent the roughs under the lead of the Democratic managers from falsifying the count or destroying the boxes?

If the negroes were inclined to vote the Democratic ticket, why did they not do it in the localities where the elections were conducted with some show of fairness? Why is it that it is claimed they did it only in localities where we had no representative at the polls, where the colored people were in very large majorities, and where they were almost unanimously returned as having voted the Democratic ticket? If the colored voters are Democrats in Louisiana, where did I get the 51,000 votes for governor at the late election which the returning officers generously returned for the Republican State ticket? It is one of the marvels how it occurred that in fourteen parishes I received 20,919 votes, and Nicholls 20,177, while in 27 other parishes, in which the bulk of the Republican vote is known to be, Nicholls received 60,659 votes, while I only had 3,013 returned for me.

This can be accounted for as the effect of the resolution adopted by the Democratic State committee, in which it declared that the representation in any State convention to be called thereafter should be apportioned on the vote cast at the coming election for Nicholls. This extraordinary action, taken on the eve of the election and months before a state convention was to be called, was known at the time to be intended as a bribe to the desperate men who rob the ballot-boxes in Republican parishes to repeat the awful practices throughout the State which had made Tensas, Ouachita, Madison, and the Felicianas to be known as "McEnery parishes," and under which and by which means fifty or sixty thousand Republican votes were stolen and given to the candidates on the Democratic State ticket.

If the Senate decides to investigate this election it need not summon Republicans as witnesses. It will find hosts of honest Democrats who know the facts and will willingly tell them. No honest man need fear the truth.

Yours, very truly,

H. C. WARMOTH.

Mr. CHANDLER. The colored voters of Louisiana will certainly find encouragement for voting the Democratic ticket when they contemplate the long line of negro massacres which have taken place in that State, beginning with the Mechanics' Institute massacre on the 30th of July, 1866, where two hundred persons were killed, the larger portion of them negroes, and where Dr. Dostie and several other white leaders were killed; when they consider the Colfax massacre, in Grant Parish, April 13, 1873, when the court-house was set on fire and afterwards fifty-nine dead bodies of negroes found; when they consider the facts stated in General Sheridan's report in 1875, in which he estimates that three thousand five hundred persons, mainly colored, had been killed or wounded in Louisiana for political reasons. Would the eight negroes who were shot dead on Thursday last in Freetown, New Iberia Parish, where they had sought the house of their pastor, Rev. Mr. Nora, have voted for Cleveland next fall if they had lived? Consider the fearfully wicked Coushatta and Red River murders and the St. Landry riots of 1868, and the estimates made by General Hatch in 1868 of the riot in Canal street, where three white men and one hundred negroes were killed, and his estimate that two hundred and ninety-seven blacks were killed in one month—all these murders being political.

The Louisiana Standard of August 18, 1888, is getting a little impatient over these wholesale massacres of colored people. I ask the Secretary to read the editorial which I send to the desk from that paper.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE END HAS COME.

The killing of colored men at Lockport, Lafourche Parish, and the Abbeville, Vermillion Parish, affair this week, is the straw that breaks our patience. We say to the governor and the white people of this State that this must end. We call upon the church people and their ministers and all classes of our people to assemble in mass meeting immediately for the purpose of taking steps to remove our people from these hell-holes on earth. What a crying shame to the people of this State, who will witness not only political murder, but interference in a man's private business. If this is "regulating," there are some pretty big guns in this State needing a little of this medicine.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Richmond Planet, John Mitchell, jr., editor, has been keeping an account of the lynchings of colored men in the South, and I find this list in the Planet of Saturday, July 21, 1888, which I will send to the desk, and which certainly affords encouragement to the negroes for voting the Democratic ticket, for the murderers of these negroes were all Democrats.

"Shall this barbarity continue until the God of retribution martials his strength against the barbarians?"

Mr. CHANDLER. It is now my desire to state briefly the principles which it seems to me justify an investigation as proposed by the resolution. I do not know that objection will be made to it, or that it will be contended that it is not within the province of the Senate to make the investigation.

One eminently justifiable object is thus stated in the resolution: To see whether Louisiana has a republican form of government as the result of her recent April election. If not, her Legislature had no right to elect GIBSON or White or to perform any act of government; the Senators should be rejected and legislation by Congress should provide for establishing a republican government in Louisiana.

If the facts are as they now appear upon the evidence which I have submitted, such Congressional interference is imperatively called for.

In this connection I submit a letter furnished to me, showing the unfairness of the Democratic apportionment and the kind of a Legislature likely to result in Louisiana upon a fair election:

NEW ORLEANS, August 19, 1888.

SIR: I addition to the facts contained in my letter of yesterday to you, I desire to state additionally, in reference to Republican representation in the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, that the same has been curtailed by the Democrats through bulldozing and ballot-box stuffing. The General Assembly is composed as follows: Senate, 26; house of representatives, 98; total, 124. In the senate there are only 4 Republicans, when upon a free ballot and a fair count we should have 16 members at the very lowest.

In the house of representatives we have 12 Republicans, when of a verity we should have 60, as the following statement will show. The parishes enumerated are those reported by the secretary of state in his report of 1888 (a copy of which I sent Senator INGALLS) as having a majority of blacks; consequently they are, when the votes are allowed to be cast without intimidation, Republican.

Parishes.	Black majority.	How represented.

In addition to the above parishes, which are undoubtedly Republican, if intimidation and frauds are not resorted to, there are the parishes of Caldwell with one member, Catahoula with one, Grant with one, Washington with one, St. Helena with one, and the seventh, fourteenth, and fifteenth representative districts of the parish of Orleans with two, one, and one members, respectively, that are Republican, made so by the votes of white people. Again, in apportioning the State the Democrats gave to parishes like Concordia with 4,104, Ascension with 5,312 voters, Pointe Coupée with 4,436 votes, and St. James with 5,235 votes only one representative from each parish, while to parishes like De Soto with 2,899 votes, the Second ward of Orleans, with 3,910 votes, the Fifth ward with 3,830 votes, the Ninth ward with 3,511 votes, the Tenth ward with 4,426 votes, the Eleventh ward with 4,452 votes, two representatives are given each ward, and to the Third ward of Orleans with 5,708 votes, three representatives are given. This statement shows that in making the apportionment the Democrats conceded the first-named parishes, and wards of the parish of Orleans to the Republicans, or else why not have given them as big a representation as were given to the last-mentioned parishes and wards, always conceded to be Democratic?

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Washington, D. C.

2. The investigation it seems to me would be justifiable in order to determine whether or not the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments have been violated; whether the right of suffrage has been denied to any citizen contrary to those amendments, with the view of having steps taken by Congress either to reduce the representation of the State in Congress, or to protect citizens in their right of suffrage.

3. The investigation is required to determine whether or not any of the existing statutes of the United States have been violated, and whether prosecutions have been or ought to be instituted to punish any violations.

4. The investigation is called for to enable the Senate to determine whether legislation is demanded for the purpose of altering the regulations prescribed by Louisiana for the election of Representatives in Congress.

5. There is a broader ground of inquiry, to see whether the State of Louisiana properly performs her functions as a local government, with a view to remonstrating with her for her failure. The power to investigate is not limited by the power to legislate.

I do not wish to enlarge, Mr. President, upon these reasons, but to my mind they are each and all sufficient.

Mr. President, the transactions in Louisiana to which I have called the attention of the Senate and of which I ask an investigation are a part of an elaborate system adopted not merely in Louisiana but by the Southern rulers of this nation for the wholesale suppression of the votes of colored citizens in deliberate defiance of the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution. Declarations innumerable might be cited in proof of the purpose of our Southern masters, and that the national Democracy adopt their platform. I will refer only to a few in addition to the Louisiana utterances already given.

In the Weekly Pelican of August 4, 1888, is an article which I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the article.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THURMAN A NEGRO HATER.

Allen G. Thurman, the Democratic candidate for Vice-President of the United States, was a negro hater before the war and has always been one since. In 1867 he was a candidate for governor of Ohio, and here is a copy of the ticket as voted:

"DEMOCRATIC—WHITE MAN'S TICKET—IN FAVOR OF EQUAL TAXATION.

On constitutional amendment (giving negroes the right to vote and hold office), No.

"For governor—Allen G. Thurman.
"Lieutenant-governor—Daniel S. Uhl.
"Treasurer of State—Cochran Fulton.
"Auditor of State—John McElwee.
"Attorney-general—Frank H. Hurd.
"Supreme judge—Thomas M. Key.
"Comptroller of the treasury—William Sheridan, jr.
"Board of public works—Arthur Hughes."

Not satisfied with running on such a ticket (luckily he was defeated), he again came to the front in 1868 with his negro-hating propensities, and in a speech delivered at Mansfield, Ohio, on January 21, he said:

"Of all the delusions I have ever known, the idea of political equality between the white and black races seems to me the greatest. For more than four thousand years the history of this world has been written, and in all that time there is not a recorded annal of a civilized negro government; there is not one instance of political equality between the two races that has not proved injurious to both; and yet it is proposed to confer upon an inferior race the dominion over one-third of the Republic, and to make it a balance of power that nine times out of ten would, for that reason, control the whole country. There can be but one end to this scheme, if it be much longer prosecuted. It is impossible that the race to which we belong can submit to negro domination; it is impossible that so inferior a race as the negro can compete with the white man in the business much less the politics of the country. The extermination of the negro or his expulsion from this country must be the inevitable result of the Radical policy if persisted in. But before that happens what untold evils may await us? What anarchy, what confusion, what impoverishment, what distress! Worse than Mexico, worse than the South American republics will be the condition of a large portion of this country if that policy prevails.

"And here let me caution you, my friends, that the question of negro suffrage was not settled by your votes last October. It is true that you voted it down in Ohio, but it is equally true that what you refuse to permit here you are asked to impose upon others. It is equally true that what you have solemnly condemned a Radical Congress may impose upon you in spite of your condemnation—impose upon you by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, ratified by other States, though rejected by Ohio. If you would guard against political equality with the negro you must not be satisfied with sending its opponents to the Legislature of your own State, but you must keep its advocates out of the halls of Congress."

Mr. CHANDLER. The minority of the Senate Reconstruction Committee of 1872 (Forty-second Congress, second session, report No. 41), Messrs. Frank P. Blair, Thomas F. Bayard, S. S. COX, JAMES B. BECK, and others, made utterances as follows:

We do not propose to discuss at large the question of negro government in these pages.

* * * * * * *

No government can long exist "half black and half white."

* * * * * * *

The mind of every thinking man is troubled about our future. He knows that a conflict of races must be the inevitable result of such a policy.

* * * * * * *

There can be no permanent partition of power nor any peaceable joint exercise of power among such discordant bodies of men. One or the other must have all or none.

* * * * * * *

But whenever that party—

The Republican—

shall go down, as go down it will at some time not long in the future, that will be the end of the political power of the negro among white men on this continent.

* * * * * * *

Pseudo philanthropists may talk never so loud and eloquently about an "equality before the law" where equality is not found in the great natural law of race ordained by the Creator. That can not be changed by statute which has been irrevocably fixed by the fiat of the Almighty. Wherever the two races exist coequally by compulsory legislation, antagonism will exist also. There can be no peace or harmony in such a condition of political organization, especially when the natural repulsion is intensified by the teachings of recreant portions of the opposite race.

* * * * * * *

It will be the political death of the negro on this continent. So far as it relates to his future solidity as a race, commingled with the whites within the Union, he will be in a worse condition than he was in a state of slavery, for the inevitable tendency will be to segregate him from the white race, and, if not transported to some other country, he will slowly but surely pass away like the aborigines, and his place among us, like that of the Indian, will be known no more forever.

FRANK P. BLAIR,
T. F. BAYARD,
S. S. COX,
JAMES B. BECK,
And others.

In the Birmingham (Ala.) Age, a protection Democratic paper, so called, is the following paragraph:

Senator EDMUNDS, from the committee, reported favorably, and the Senate passed, a resolution yesterday to investigate the suppression of the colored vote in the recent municipal election at Jackson, Miss. What is the use investigating it? Even the newspapers at Jackson do not deny that the negro vote was suppressed. The white people of that city had grown tired of negro misrule. It was in reality a struggle for supremacy between the two races, and, of course, the whites won. This is the whole story, and a Congressional investigating committee will learn nothing but the facts already publicly admitted by the people of Jackson. Now, Senator EDMUNDS, the question is, what are you going to do about it?

The Democracy of New Hampshire stand upon precisely the same platform. Hon. Harry Bingham, the leading and typical Democrat, in a debate in the New Hampshire Legislature on national resolutions expressed himself as follows:

Mr. Bingham said he did not believe it was desirable to have a government of the people in which negroes and white men participated in common and on an equality. He believed that the negro was not capable of self-government; and if he was to be present with white men at all it must be as subject to the control of white men. Only in that way could he be made useful to society.

The result in those Southern States where the colored voters mainly live is in accordance with the authentic declarations of the purposes of the Democracy. No colored citizen votes and has his vote counted in any Southern State where that vote will affect the result of the election. He may vote the Democratic ticket if he chooses; he can not vote the Republican ticket. And while suppressing the votes of the colored people the Southern Democrats also smother the votes of any white Republicans who may unhappily live within their borders. With this avowed and universal defiance of the fifteenth amendment is the American Republic confronted on the threshold of the momentous Presidential election of 1888.

The question thus presented is of more importance than any other now pending or which can be imagined as likely at any time to arise. It is the fundamental question in a republic. Shall all legally qualified voters be allowed to vote as they choose and to have their votes honestly counted? If the answer is to be in the negative, there is no republic. The Government is either that of a despot or of an oligarchy. Threatened with such a subversion of our institutions the whole nation should arouse itself to meet the supreme issue which is of more importance than banks or tariff, currency or commerce, lands or houses or goods. Shall the vital principle of free suffrage embodied in our Constitution be a living force in the Government or shall it be disregarded, trampled upon, and destroyed by means of murder and other violence, false returns, and other frauds, adopted as ordinary political methods by the Southern Democrats to enable them to again control and govern the nation which they tried to destroy by secession and destructive and bloody civil war? If the nation will not meet and rightly settle this issue, which is above and beyond all other issues, it cares not for republicanism; it is unworthy of either liberty or prosperity.

The question is of immense importance to the North. Shall the South control the nation by unfair, dishonest, and unconstitutional methods, and while thus kept in power attack and destroy Northern industries? From 1800 to 1860 the South, with the exception of the four years of John Quincy Adams, governed the nation either by Southern Presidents or by Northern Presidents who were tools of the South. They believed they controlled Mr. Adams when they elected him, and for his subsequent independence they deprived him of a second term. The South was able thus to control the Government for the sixty years before the slave-holders' rebellion because they had additional Congressional and electoral representation based upon three-fifths of the colored population. They sought to extend slavery into free territory. When the North resisted they brought on the deadly civil war which at last resulted in freedom and in suffrage for the colored people. Then the South assumed greater Congressional and electoral representation than ever, based upon the five-fifths of the colored population. As soon as possible they suppressed the votes of the whole colored race, and by doing this ever since 1874, excepting in one Congress, they have controlled the national House of Representatives, and in 1884 they took possession of the Presidency.

A fair estimate of the representation in the national House and in the electoral colleges, based upon three-fifths of the colored population, is 24; add 16 for the other two-fifths, and 40 is to-day the number of Southern Representatives and electors based upon that population; and the increase of 16 has been given to the South as a reward for their causeless and bloody rebellion. These 40 votes were in 1884 all cast for Cleveland for President; 19 of them would have chosen Blaine, and all the colored men entitled to wield the power of these votes earnestly desired to effect Blaine's election. Of the 40 votes 10 would have made the present House of Representatives Republican, and would have prevented the passage of the Mills tariff bill, which is threatening so many American industries.

Aided by this unfair and extraordinary inequality obtained by reason of the colored people, whose votes they suppress and nullify, the South has secured the executive branch of the Government; it almost controls the legislative; it is reaching forward to the judicial branch. It threatens the manufacturing and all other industries of the North. It means to hold in its hands the decision of all our national questions, those of foreign policy, tariff, finance, internal improvements, and all expenditures, and to "get even" with the North on account of the temporary ascendency of the latter during the era of rebellion and reconstruction.

Will the North consent submissively to a perpetual political control of the country based upon a flagrant disregard and defiance of one of the principal fundamental conditions upon which the war was terminated, and which is now a part of the Federal Constitution?

If the North does so submit, by reason of that commercial spirit which led it before 1860 to acquiesce in the arrogant demands and infamous encroachments of slavery until a terrible civil war aroused the money-getters of the North to some sense of manhood, it will deserve to endure the injury and degradation which will be imposed upon it by the revived and omnipotent Southern oligarchy.

Above all, the question of free suffrage is of vital importance to the colored citizens of America. The ballot was not given to them in order to promote the success of the Republican party. The most thoughtful Republicans feared that the decision would result in the defeat of their party. It was given to them as a great act of wisdom and justice, in order that civil government at the South, which was to follow the rebellion, might be reorganized on a basis which would enable the freedman to protect himself in the enjoyment of his newly acquired right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness as a citizen on a legal equality with every other citizen. Without suffrage given the donation of freedom would have been a mockery and a snare. Without suffrage enjoyed, with suffrage permanently suppressed, the condition of the colored man at the South will grow worse and worse. His wages will be kept low; he will be robbed of his earnings. Ignorance and degradation and semi-slavery will be his ultimate portion.

Not then as a duty to the North, not out of gratitude to the Republican party, which, while it has done much for the colored man, yet has weakly faltered in its work, but as a duty to himself, to his wife, to his children, to his race, which is to multiply at the South until its numbers are as great as those of the sands upon the sea-shore, the colored citizen must cling to the ballot and never cease his efforts to vote for the principles and the candidates of his choice.

If the Republicans of the North, who prescribed universal suffrage as the last and final condition of the settlement with the South for its causeless and bloody rebellion, and embodied this condition in the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution, have not the fidelity, persistency, and courage to demand and secure its observance, but submit to its nullification by the oligarchy which now rules both the North and the South; and if they thus abandon the colored people to the wrongs and oppressions which now encompass them, they will deserve no better fate than to have the whips and the fetters from which Abraham Lincoln freed the bondmen applied to their own backs and clasped upon their own limbs.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert as an appendix a petition of Frederick Veazey, to which I adverted, and a previous paper on this general subject prepared by me and heretofore published.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

APPENDIX.

[The Weekly Pelican, New Orleans, La., Saturday, May 19, 1888.]

THE FRAUD EXPOSED—IBERIA PARISH RETURNED DEMOCRATIC SHOWN TO HAVE GONE REPUBLICAN—VEAZEY, REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE FOR SHERIFF OF IBERIA PARISH, FILES A CONTEST AND SHOWS THE DIRTY WORK UP—THE PETITION IN FULL.

To the honorable the Judge of the Twenty-first Judicial District Court, in and for the Parish of Iberia:

The petition of Frederick Veazey, a citizen of the State of Louisiana, a duly qualified voter thereof in the parish of Iberia, and a resident thereof, with respect shows: That in pursuance of the laws of the State a general election was held throughout the State on the 17th day of April, 1888, for the offices of sheriff of the several parishes, among other offices. That your petitioner was a candidate for the office of sheriff of the parish of Iberia at said election, and that Alfred G. Barnard was a candidate for the same office in opposition to your petitioner.

Now, petitioner avers that with a fair, free, honest, and peaceable election he would have been returned elected to said office by a majority of over 400 votes.

That in order to defeat your petitioner fraud, violence, and intimidation were used at the Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Ninth wards, which will more fully appear on the trial of this case.

That the election throughout the parish, with the exception of the First, Second, and Seventh wards, was a most shameful fraud perpetrated by the commissioners of election and returning officer, thereby defeating the will of the people in its choice of parish officers.

That the returning officer fraudulently and illegally made returns to the secretary of state of the general result of the election for the office of sheriff aforesaid to be as follows, namely: Total vote for Alfred G. Barnard, 1,775; total vote for Frederick Veazey, 377; thus giving the said Barnard, candidate for sheriff for said parish, an apparent majority of 1,398 votes.

Now, petitioner avers that the said return is illegal and false and fails to show the true and correct state of the vote of the parish in so far as the office of sheriff is concerned, for the following reasons, all of which were and are fully known to the returning officers:

That at all the precincts of the parish of Iberia no commissioners of the party opposed to those in power were appointed in order to assist in holding the election as required by law.

It being openly boasted by the leaders of the Democratic party of the parish of Iberia that the only way to defeat your petitioner and the other Republican candidates in said parish was by fraud and counting out, your petitioner, four or five days previous to the election, in company with the candidate for clerk of the district court, called on the said returning officer and demanded the appointment of commissioners to represent the Republican party at each voting precinct as required by law, which request was refused by the said returning officer, thereby showing that fraud was intended throughout the parish; that if fraud and "ballot-box stuffing" were not intended there could have been no valid or legal objection to the presence of a Republican commissioner at each voting precinct as required by law.

On the day previous to the election your petitioner again called on the returning officer and asked to be simply furnished with a list of commissioners of election appointed by said returning officer, for each voting precinct, which was refused by the said returning officer, all in direct violation of the election laws of the State, which require that the appointment and selection of said commissioners shall be made at least ten days and published at least six days previous to the election.

Petitioner avers that at the second ward in said parish there was a fair, free, and legal election; that there were thereat on the day of election cast for sheriff aforesaid 215 votes by the voters of the ward, of which, after due and proper count, 156 votes were returned cast for your petitioner as candidate for sheriff aforesaid, and 46 votes for Alfred G. Barnard, his opponent; that no legal or valid reason exists why the said votes should not be counted; that due return thereof was made by the commissioners of election of said ward, but that notwithstanding the returning officer of the parish, in violation of the law and of petitioner's rights, and with a view to defeat his election, did fraudulently, corruptly, and illegally disregard the votes cast, as aforesaid, and ignore them from his return; that in law and justice these votes should be counted, and the petitioner is entitled to the full benefit and effect of their count.

Petitioner further avers that at the Third ward his opponent is made to appear as having received a majority of votes, when in truth with a fair, free, and honest election, your petitioner's majority would have been at least 75 votes. That in order to defeat the will of the people, the voting precinct was placed on the west side of the bayou, on which side there are only about 12 voters residing, and the voters on the east side of the bayou in order to cast their votes had to cross Bayou Teche on a ferry or flatboat owned by a Democrat, who refused to cross over said voters unless they had in their hands a Democratic ticket and pledged themselves to vote said ticket and against your petitioner, thereby depriving a large majority of the voters of said ward from casting their votes for your petitioner, and to deprive him of the office to which he would have been legally elected, with an honest, fair, free, and peaceable election.

Petitioner further avers that at the Fourth ward, by "ballot-box stuffing," and the false and fraudulent returns of election at said ward, his opponent is made to appear as having received a majority of 234 votes, when in truth, as will appear on the trial of this case, less than 200 voters cast their votes, out of which your petitioner received 67 votes, and his opponent received 131 votes. That the commissioners of election at said ward precluded all entrance to the room in which the voting was done, by locking the door thereof and excluding all other officers and persons. That no commissioner of opposing political party was named or served, all being of the Democratic party.

That the returns, if any, made of the election in said Fourth ward are null, void, and of no effect, because the pretended "tally-sheets and statements of votes," now on file in the clerk's office of this parish, are not sworn to by the said pretended commissioners as the law directs.

Petitioner further avers that at the Fifth ward, by the false returns of election, his opponent is made to appear as having received a majority of 35 votes over your petitioner, when in truth, as will appear on the trial of this case, with a fair, free, honest, and peaceable election your petitioner's majority would have been over 125 votes, but in order to defeat your petitioner and the will of the people fraud, violence, and intimidation was used.

That the commissioners at said ward fraudulently deprived duly qualified voters from casting their votes, unless said voters would cast their votes against the Republican candidates and against your petitioner, all of which will more fully appear on the trial of this case.

That at the said Fifth ward the Republican leaders and voters were clubbed and driven away from the poll by the Democrats with the use of rifles, shotguns, and pistols. That the voters throughout the said Fifth ward were notified by "Democratic couriers" that if they came to vote it would be at the risk of their lives, all of which will more fully appear on the trial of this case.

Petitioner further avers that at the Sixth ward in said parish, by the false, illegal, and fraudulent returns of election his opponent, Alfred G. Barnard, is made to appear as having received a majority of 305 votes, when in truth, with a free, fair, honest, and peaceable election, your petitioner would have defeated his opponent by a majority of at least 100 votes. Petitioner further avers that at the said Sixth ward in said parish the polling place was held at the court-house, in the town of New Iberia, and the commissioners of election so arranged the voting box that it could not be distinctly seen by any person but themselves.

That they precluded all entrance to the room in which the voting was done by locking the door thereof and grating the windows where the voters casted their votes.

That no commissioner of opposing political party was appointed or served, all being of one political party, in direct violation of the laws of the State.

Petitioner further avers that the said court-house wherein the election was held in the said Sixth ward was in possession of the State militia from the opening of the poll on the 17th day of April to the 18th day of April, 1888.

That the members of said militia and others were armed with rifles and shotguns and made all kinds of demonstrations in said building and through the windows in full view of the voters of said ward, discharging and firing said guns, and in general by clubbing, striking, and driving the voters from the poll and taking by force of arms tickets from their hands, saying, "Unless you vote the Democratic ticket you can not vote here."

Petitioner further avers that on the grated window through which the voters casted their votes was a label containing the following words, namely, "What is the use?" the meaning of which was that it was useless to vote.

Petitioner further avers that numerous parties voted whose names were not on the poll-book and who were not residents and voters of this parish.

That the voting-box was stuffed wilh ballots not voted, with the knowledge and connivance of the commissioners of election. That at said Sixth ward the commissioners of election fraudulently continued to hold an unfair election with a view to defeat your petitioner and to deprive him of the office to which, with a fair, free, and peaceable election he would have been legally elected.

That the returns, if any, made of the election in said Sixth ward are null, void, and of no effect, because the pretended "tally-sheets" now on file in the clerk's office of this parish are not sworn to by the said pretended commissioners as the law directs.

That the "statement of votes" made of the election in said Sixth ward are null and void and of no effect, because it is not signed nor sworn to by the said commissioners as the law directs.

Petitioner further avers that at the Eighth ward, by the false, illegal, and fraudulent returns of election, his opponent is made to appear as having received 89 votes, and none for your petitioner; that in truth, as will fully appear on the trial of this case, less than 30 voters cast their votes in said ward and that the voting-box was stuffed with ballots not voted, with the knowledge and connivance of the commissioners of election.

Petitioner further avers that at the Ninth ward, by the false, illegal, and fraudulent returns of election his opponent is made to appear as having received a majority of 455 votes, when in truth, as will fully appear on the trial of this case, with a free, honest, and peaceable election, your petitioner would have defeated his said opponent by a majority of 300 votes, but in order to defeat your petitioner fraud, violence, and intimidation were resorted to.

That at the said ninth ward in said parish, the commissioners so arranged the voting-box that it could not be distinctly seen by any person but themselves.

That they precluded all entrance to the room in which the voting was done, by locking the door thereof and excluding all other persons.

That no commissioners of opposing political party were appointed or served, all being of one political party.

That the voting-box was "stuffed" with ballots not voted, with the knowledge and connivance of the commissioners of election.

That at said Ninth ward the commissioners fraudulently continued to hold an unfair election and to make false returns with a view to defeat your petitioner.

Petitioner therefore avers that the returns made of the election held on the 17th day of April, 1888, and the votes cast at the First, Second, and Seventh wards should be counted.

That the returns made of the election of the Third ward should both be rejected and ignored in the counts as fraudulent and illegal.

That the returns made of the election of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Ninth wards should both be rejected and ignored in the counts as fraudulent and illegal, and the following substituted for such illegal and fraudulent returns, to wit: Third ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 72 votes; Frederick Veazey, 148 votes; fourth ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 131 votes; Frederick Veazey, 67 votes; fifth ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 128 votes; Frederick Veazey, 253 votes; sixth ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 337 votes; Frederick Veazey, 445 votes; eighth ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 28 votes; Frederick Veazey, 6 votes; ninth ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 156 votes; Frederick Veazey, 458.

Petitioner avers that a petition signed by at least 20 voters of the parish of Iberia, asking the court to examine the facts of the election in so far as your petitioner's candidacy is concerned and to decide thereon, has been presented to the court and filed according to law.

Finally he avers that the emoluments of the office in controversy exceed $2,000 per annum.

Wherefore, the premises considered, petitioner prays that Alfred G. Barnard be cited to appear and answer this petition according to law and after due proceedings and trial by jury as provided by law, that it may please the court to decree and adjudge that the pretended returns of the alleged elections at the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, eighth, and ninth wards are fraudulent, illegal, null and void, and be entirely rejected from the count of votes at the election of April 17, 1888, in the parish of Iberia for candidates for sheriff of said parish, and the following substituted for such illegal and fraudulent return, to wit: Third ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 72 votes, Frederick Veazey, 148 votes; fourth ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 131 votes, Frederick Veazey, 67 votes; fifth ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 128 votes, Frederick Veazey, 253 votes; sixth ward Alfred G. Barnard, 337 votes, Frederick Veazey, 445 votes; eighth ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 28 votes, Frederick Veazey, 6 votes; ninth ward, Alfred G. Barnard, 156 votes, Frederick Veazey, 458 votes. That the returns made of the votes cast at the second ward are proper and legal and that said votes shall be counted for the respective candidates for sheriff aforesaid, in accordance with the returns thereof.

That petitioner be decreed and adjudged to have been elected sheriff for the parish of Iberia, at the election of April 17, 1888, and entitled to the office according to law, and that he have judgment to that effect, against said Alfred G. Barnard.

And he prays for costs and for general relief as in duty bound.

A. & C. FONTELIEU,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

"OUR MODERN SOUTHERN MASTERS."

[An article by Mr. CHANDLER in the Forum for July, 1888.]

The political control of the United States is now in the hands of a Southern oligarchy as persistent and unrelenting as was that which plunged the nation into the slave-holders' rebellion. Its members own President Cleveland, constitute the majority in the national House of Representatives, and include 24 of the 37 Democrats of the Senate, where 38 Northern Republicans, aided by 1 from the South, precariously hold nominal control. This complete Southern domination of the Government is as evidently founded on the colored people of the South as it was when the cries and groans of the bondmen invoked the vengeance of heaven on their oppressors.

Then, as now, the negroes entered into the basis of representation in Congress and the electoral colleges. Now, as then, the negroes have no voice or vote in the elections; but the white men vote for them and wield their power, and thereby rule the North and the nation. The excuse offered for thus trampling ruthlessly, by murder and fraud, upon the right of suffrage as guarantied by the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution is that negro suffrage would produce negro supremacy, and negro supremacy would curse the country. Is this attempted justification of wrong and crime sufficient?

In an article in the Forum for June Senator WADE HAMPTON attempts to establish the proposition that the "political supremacy of the negro" would involve "total and absolute ruin to the South, and infinite and irreparable loss to the whole country." In proof of this assertion, with which he begins his article, he recounts the history of South Carolina when "turned over to the negroes and their carpet-bag allies," and he makes this recital his whole contribution.

Believing as I do that the bestowal of suffrage upon the negro, whatever the consequences to the South, was an overwhelming and inevitable necessity under the circumstances then existing, it is not necessary for me to controvert the truth of the charge that the first civil government established in South Carolina, at the close of the bloody rebellion which that State had begun (which government, solely through the fault and malevolence of the white rebels, was composed of a large majority of loyal negroes), fell into corrupt practices, deserving a portion at least of the characterizations which have constituted the sole excuse for a forcible overthrow of that government by the white Democrats, quite as unjustifiable and cruel in its character as their original secession and war against the Union.

It may be that, in the providence of God, the temporary ascendancy of the negro was designed as a special chastisement of the guilty authors of the rebellion, and that the sins of the fathers were intended to be visited upon the children, even unto the third and fourth generations. Consider the lamentation of President Lincoln:

"The Almighty has his own purposes. 'Woe unto the world because of offenses, for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh.' If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of those offenses which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that He gives to both North and South this terrible war as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a loving God always ascribe to him? Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondmen's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, so still it must be said, 'the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.'"

Any defense of the so-called negro and carpet-bag government of South Carolina may well be left to Daniel H. Chamberlain, its refugee governor. He has meekly kissed the hand which smote him, and is now a New York City Democrat, a maligner of the Republican party and a defender or apologist for every crime of the Democratic party. Another similar outcast, ex-Governor Rufus B. Bullock, has purchased his peace and a safe return to Georgia by publicly advocating, while yet claiming to be a Republican, the deliberate abandonment by the North of the fifteenth amendment.

The account given by James S. Pike, of Maine, of the "Black Parliament" of South Carolina, which makes a large share of Mr. HAMPTON'S proofs, was written in the winter of 1872-'73, directly after the disastrous defeat of Horace Greeley, whom Mr. Pike had followed into the Democratic party because of the Republican policy of reconstruction; and his narrative is necessarily intended as a justification of himself and Mr. Greeley, and is an exaggeration and caricature. The redeeming features of "negro rule" he and Mr. HAMPTON wholly omit. Mr. George W. Cable wisely reminds us that the reconstruction party, though the upper ranks of society warred "as fiercely against its best principles as against its bad practices, planted the whole South with public schools for the poor and illiterate of both races, welcomed and cherished the missionaries of higher education, and when it fell, left them still both systems, with the master-class converted to a belief in their use and necessity."

(See Mr. Cable's thoughtful, philosophical, and candid article on "The Negro Question," published first in the New York Tribune, and lately by the American Missionary Society, 56 Reade street, New York City.)

The constitutions and the governments established in the Southern States under the reconstruction policy of the Republican party have all been torn down by fraud, violence, and murder; and these revolutions have been submitted to by the complaisant Northern people, tired of war and controversy, and anxious for commerce and money. The immediate question now is not one of negro supremacy, but of white equality; not whether the negro shall be the political superior of the white man at the South, but whether the white Southerner shall be the political superior of every citizen at the North.

It is necessary to look at the case historically. President Johnson began reconstruction with a proclamation, May 29, 1865, granting wholesale amnesty and pardon, and absolute impunity for their treason to all the rebels except certain specified classes, who were probably not one-tenth of the Southern whites, and he promised special pardons to the excepted persons. At the same time he authorized and directed the re-establishment of the Southern State governments. The only conditions which he imposed were that each State should assent to the thirteenth amendment abolishing slavery, and should repudiate all rebel war debts. Under these circumstances the Southern States made rapid work in reconstruction; and when the Thirty-ninth Congress assembled in December, 1865, Senators and Representatives appeared from the late insurrectionary States, headed by Alexander H. Stephens, the late vice-president of the Southern Confederacy. Legislating for the freedmen the Southern Legislatures had enacted infamous labor laws almost as restrictive and oppressive as slavery itself.

Although alarmed at President Johnson's policy and its results, Congress took no hasty action. June 18, 1866, the report from the Committee on Reconstruction was made, signed by W. P. Fessenden, James W. Grimes, Ira Harris, J. M. Howard, George H. Williams, Thaddeus Stevens, Elihu B. Washburne, JUSTIN S. MORRILL, John A. Bingham, Roscoe Conkling, George S. Boutwell, and Henry T. Blow.

The following extracts from that report show the reason why the loyal North, as a condition of recognizing President Johnson's reconstructed governments in the rebel States, determined to propose and demand nothing less than the adoption of the fourteenth amendment:

"By an original provision of the Constitution representation is based on the whole number of free persons in each State, and three-fifths of all other persons. When all become free, representation for all necessarily follows. As a consequence, the inevitable effect of the rebellion would be to increase the political power of the insurrectionary States whenever they should be allowed to resume their position as States of the Union. * * * It did not seem just or proper that all the political advantages derived from their becoming free should be confined to their former masters, who had fought against the Union, and withheld from themselves, who had always been loyal. Slavery, by building up a ruling and dominant class, had produced a spirit of oligarchy adverse to republican institutions, which finally inaugurated civil war. The tendency of continuing the domination of such a class, by leaving it in the exclusive possession of political power, would be to encourage the same spirit, and lead to a similar result.

"* * * The question before Congress is then whether conquered enemies have the right, and shall be permitted at their own pleasure and on their own terms to participate in making laws for their conquerors; whether conquered rebels may change their theater of operations from the battle-field, where they were defeated and overthrown, to the halls of Congres and through their representatives seize upon the Government which they fought to destroy; whether the national Treasury, the Army of the nation, its Navy, its forts and arsenals, its whole civil administration, its credit, its pensioners, the widows and orphans of those who perished in the war, the public honor, peace, and safety shall all be turned over to the keeping of its recent enemies without delay and without imposing such conditions as, in the opinion of Congress, the security of the country and its institutions may demand. The history of mankind exhibits no example of such madness and folly.

The instinct of self-preservation protests against it. The surrender by Grant to Lee and by Sherman to Johnston would have been disasters of less magnitude, for new armies could have been raised, new battles fought, and the Government saved. The anti-coercive policy which, under pretext of avoiding bloodshed, allowed the rebellion to take form and gather force, would be surpassed in infamy by the matchless wickedness that would now surrender the Halls of Congress to those so recently in rebellion until proper precautions shall have been taken to secure the national faith and the national safety. * * * Your committee came to the conclusion that political power should be possessed in all the States exactly in proportion as the right of suffrage should be granted, without distinction of color or race. This it was thought would leave the whole question with the people of each State, holding out to all the advantage of increased political power as an inducement to allow all to participate in its exercise. Such a provision would be in its nature gentle and persuasive, and would lead, it was hoped, at no distant day, to an equal participation of all, without distinction, in all the rights and privileges of citizenship, thus affording a full and adequate protection to all classes of citizens, since all would have, through the ballot-box, the power of self-protection.

In accordance with these views the Republican Congressional plan of reconstruction adopted in June (by the Senate, 33 to 11—by the House, 138 to 36) took issue with, and negatived that of, President Johnson, by requiring the addition to the latter of the fourteenth amendment. That amendment merely provided—

1. That no person who had been in Congress, or a United States or State officer, and had, therefore, sworn to support the United States Constitution, and had afterward become a rebel, should be capable of holding office unless Congress should by a two-thirds vote remove his disability.

2. That if in any State the right to vote should be denied on account of color, its right of representation in the lower House of Congress and in the electoral colleges should be proportionately reduced.

Before March, 1867, the fourteenth amendment had been adopted by twenty-one loyal States, which, with Iowa and Nebraska afterward acting, made twenty-three States, five less than the three-fourths of all the States necessary to ratification. It had been negatived by Delaware, Maryland, and Kentucky, and was unceremoniously rejected by ten insurrectionary States, as follows:

		For.	Vs.
Texas, October, 1866	Senate	.....	.....
	House	5	67
Georgia, November, 1866	Senate	0	36
	House	2	131
North Carolina, December, 1866	Senate	1	44
	House	10	93
South Carolina, December, 1866	Senate	.....	.....
	House	1	95
Florida, December, 1866	Senate	0	20
	House	0	49
Alabama, December, 1866	Senate	2	27
	House	8	69
Arkansas, December, 1866	Senate	1	24
	House	2	68

	House	1	.....
Mississippi, January, 1867	Senate	0	27

The Democratic party of the North persistently opposed the fourteenth amendment. Ohio and New Jersey, which, while they were Republican States, had adopted it, subsequently became Democratic and rejected it. But the six States of Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, and Alabama, when reconstructed, adopted it, and July 20, 1868, Secretary Seward, in a characteristic paper, certified that it was ratified by twenty-nine States, if Ohio and New Jersey had no right to retract. July 21, 1868, Congress declared it ratified, the Senate without a count, the House by 125 yeas to 32 Democratic nays. June 30, 1868, Frank P. Blair, who became Democratic candidate for Vice-President, declared that "there is but one way to restore the Government and the Constitution, and that is by the President elect to declare these acts null and void, compel the Army to undo its usurpations at the South, disperse the carpet-bag State governments, allow the white people to reorganize their own governments and elect Senators and Representatives. The House of Representatives will contain a majority of Democrats from the North, and they will admit the Representatives elected by the white people of the South, and, with the co-operation of the President, it will not be difficult to compel the Senate to submit once more to the obligations of the Constitution." The Seymour and Blair convention of 1868 declared as follows: "We regard the reconstruction acts, so called, of Congress as such, as usurpations, unconstitutional, revolutionary, and void." And as late as February 6, 1879, Senator, now Mr. Justice Lamar, and Senators Bayard and Garland, voted "no" on the proposition that the constitutional amendments had been legally ratified and that Congress ought to protect all qualified citizens in the right to vote for Representatives in Congress.

It was, therefore, found impossible to make the fourteenth amendment a part of the Constitution under the Johnson plan of reconstruction. This defiant rejection of the fourteenth amendment by the rebel States and the Democratic party, aided by President Johnson, who had betrayed and abandoned the Republican party, took place before March 23, 1867, the date of the first of the reconstruction measures of Congress looking toward negro suffrage. A fair estimate of the representation in the national House and in the electoral colleges, based upon three-fifths of the colored population, is 24; add 16 for the other two-fifths, and 40 is to-day the number of Southern Representatives and electors based upon that population; and under the Democratic plan of reconstruction the increase of 16 was to be given to the South as a reward for their causeless and bloody rebellion. These 40 votes were, in 1884, all cast for Cleveland for President; 19 of them would have chosen Blaine, and all the colored men entitled to wield the power of these votes earnestly desired to effect Blaine's election. Of the 40 votes 10 would have made the present House of Representatives Republican, and would avert all danger of the passage of the Mills tariff bill which is threatening so many American industries.

It was simply impossible that the victorious North should submit to such an immediate return to national political power of Southern rebels. Language can not add to the forcible expressions on this point in the reconstruction report, already quoted, from the pen of that strong and brilliant writer and speaker, William Pitt Fessenden. There were but two courses possible: One to keep the Southern States for an indefinite period under military domination; the other to organize Southern civil governments upon some plan which would afford justice and protection to the colored people and security against increased Southern power and rebel rule in the nation. Continued military control was repugnant to both North and South, and found few advocates. Therefore there inevitably came the reconstruction measures of Congress, based upon manhood suffrage. This, whether wise or unwise, the Southern leaders brought upon themselves by their contumacy and obstinacy in demanding to control, with more than their old power, that country which by deadly war they had fought for four years to destroy.

It also seems clear, after this lapse of years and with all our experiences, good and bad, of negro suffrage, that it was right and best in itself. The Southern whites, during their brief period of reconstruction under President Johnson's plan, had shown that they accepted the abolition of slavery as a form merely, and that, by means of atrocious vagrant and labor laws, they intended again to reduce the colored race to a state not far removed from slavery.

Without suffrage for the negro Northern public sentiment and honor would have demanded the constant interposition of the Federal power in the Southern States for the protection of the always loyal and now free colored citizens. The Southern whites would have broken any promises which they might have made, and would have evaded or defied any national laws not enforced by Federal officials. A perpetual irritation would have resulted from the measures of national protection extended to the disfranchised colored people. Any expedient for their protection which did not include the ballot in their own hands would have proved futile.

Senator HAMPTON, in 1879, said:

"When the negro was made a citizen it followed as a logical consequence, under the theory of our institutions, that he must become a voter. My objection to his enfranchisement, therefore, is confined to the time when and the mode in which this privilege was conferred upon him."

In 1888 we find him laboring to prove that "negro supremacy would bring disgrace and ruin to any State of the Union, and would be a perpetual menace to our republican institutions." His point is difficult to understand. Since 1876, when he became governor of South Carolina, the votes of the negroes of that State have been effectually suppressed, and for twelve years there has been no danger of what he calls "negro supremacy." Has the time yet come when the privilege of suffrage can be conferred upon the colored men of South Carolina and they be allowed freely to exercise it without the danger of "negro supremacy?" Doubtless not, in Mr. HAMPTON'S opinion; and such a time never will come so long as those colored men persist in the desire to vote with the Republican party. When they decide to give up their efforts to vote as they please, and conclude to vote as Mr. HAMPTON wishes them to do, the "time when and the mode in which" will in his opinion have arrived, and their votes will cease to threaten "negro supremacy," "disgrace and ruin" to the State, and to be "a perpetual menace to our republican institutions."

In adoption of manhood suffrage as the basis of reconstruction there was included no injurious proscription of the whites. All male citizens twenty-one years of age were allowed to vote and to hold office in the conventions to frame constitutions, except the limited class disqualified from holding office by the proposed fourteenth amendment. The constitutions so made left the right of suffrage in the hands of the great mass of Southern whites. If they had freely and in good temper participated in the work of reconstruction, all the bad government of which so much complaint has been made would have been avoided. But the Southerners who had perjured themselves to become rebels, and who were therefore under limited and temporary disfranchisement, were sullen and indignant.

They were encouraged by the utterances of the Northern Democrats, and were renewing with them their former political relations, with the view again to rule the nation by a solid South allied with a contingent of Northern Congressional and electoral votes. They kept the white men aloof from reconstruction. They stigmatized as a "carpet-bagger" every Northern man who for any purpose made his home in the new free South and became a Republican. They even more bitterly denounced as a "scalawag" any Southern white man who joined in organizing civil government. They preferred anarchy and chaos to impartial suffrage. They never for one moment rendered true allegiance to the new governments, and as soon as they dared they began to tear them down by violence and political murders.

This page of American history is more disgraceful, if possible, than were the crimes of slavery and rebellion. The bloody deeds planned and incited by cruel and brutal men, who yet claimed to be civilized and refined, and who even now consider themselves the only natural rulers of free America, can never be hidden or obscured by interposing the faults and defects of those loyal governments under which a race of slaves, unaided, despised and hated by their unrepentant and unsubdued late masters, were slowly groping their way from a condition allied to that of the brutes up to manhood, from bondage to liberty, and from ignorance to knowledge, performing as well and nobly as they could their new duties of freemen and citizens.

The State of Louisiana will always be dishonored by the political massacres of the Mechanics' Institute, of Bossier, Caddo, St. Landry, St. Bernard, Colfax Parish, Grant Parish, Coushatta, Catahoula, Tensas, and Ouachita; the State of South Carolina by those of Hamburgh and Ellenton; and the State of Mississippi by those of Clinton, Copiah, and Kemper; and the records of the Kuklux outrages, the cruelties, the assassinations, and the frauds which characterized the destruction by the Southern Democrats encouraged by Northern Democrats, of the only lawful and the first free governments of the South are, without exception, the most shameful and infamous in the annals of civilized humanity. The words of Reverdy Johnson, a Democrat, while unsuccessfully defending before a jury some of the Kuklux ruffians, will bear repeating:

"I have listened with unmixed horror to some of the testimony which has been brought before you. The outrages proved are shocking to humanity; they admit of neither excuse nor justification; they violate every obligation which law and nature impose upon men; they show that the parties engaged were brutes, insensible to the obligations of humanity and religion."

To the pre-eminent dishonor of Jackson, the capital of Mississippi, that city has furnished the latest illustration of Southern political methods. In order to overthrow a city government, simply because it was Republican, the Federal officials there resident, J. Bowmar Harris, United States district attorney, Samuel Livingston, deputy United States marshal, and R. E. Wilson, deputy collector of internal revenue, headed a movement to prevent the colored citizens from voting.

A secret, oath-bound, white league was organized to lynch negroes, and to attend, armed, at the voting precincts, the leading spirit in which band of assassins was one John H. Martin, editor of the New Mississippian. The movement was successful on January 2, 1888; but mark the sequel! On the 2d day of May, 1888, at Jackson, Martin wantonly shot General Wirt Adams, the postmaster, a man sixty-nine years of age, and of the highest character. Adams returned Martin's fire, and both fell dead in the streets. The young men of the South, who are encouraged by the most influential citizens to resort to murder as an ordinary political agency, will never refrain from using their fatal revolvers for private revenge.

And now so it is that the South, which during more than half a century dominated the nation by means of slavery and the power which slavery gave, has, after a period of rebellion caused by slavery, and a period of reconstruction prolonged by crimes against the freedman, again seized the reins of government, and has rewarded itself for its rebellion by increased representation in Congress, and in the body of electors which chooses a President. The North is supposed to have conquered. The Union is saved in form. The terms of peace, reunion, and reconciliation were the thirteenth amendment, abolishing slavery; the fourteenth, omitting the colored people from the basis of representation in States where they are not allowed to vote; and the fifteenth, giving to colored citizens the ballot in all elections, State or national.

The thirteenth amendment alone is in force—the fourteenth and fifteenth are a dead letter, openly and flagrantly disobeyed. Suffrage at the South for the black man does not exist; for the white man, even, it is almost a farce. A few leaders in each State, combining with similar coteries in other States, form an oligarchy which wields the whole political power of the solid South. United with the Democratic party of the North, who expect to control by corruption or fraud a few Northern States, their "plan of compaign" is exactly what it was before 1860. Our later Southern masters are not different from those of former years. They are able, always alert, and, whenever not opposed, are plausible, courteous, and full of kind and patriotic professions; resisted, their gentleness proves like that of tigers—they become fierce and defiant, sometimes brutal.

The North needs to undeceive itself. The South is in the saddle, and it means to stay there. It has the executive branch of the Government; it almost controls the legislative; it is reaching forward to the judicial branch. It threatens the manufacturing and all other industries of the North. It means to hold in its hands the decision of all our national questions, those of foreign policy, tariff, finance, internal improvements, and all expenditures, and to "get even" with the North on account of the temporary ascendency of the latter during the era of rebellion and reconstruction. The South will not again make the mistake of secession. It is easier and safer to rule the nation from the inside. The power which the election of 1884 gave will not be relinquished if murder and fraud at the South, and unlimited corruption and fraud in New York City, can retain it. If another Democratic administration is elected the Northern people will soon realize what the new Southern control involves, and will be loaded to the full with the burdens of which our Southern masters during the last three years have imposed only a small part.

Will the North consent submissively to a perpetual political control of the country based upon a flagrant disregard and defiance of one of the principal fundamental conditions upon which the war was terminated, and which is now a part of the Federal Constitution? Let it be borne in mind—it can not be too often repeated—that if the Constitution were in force Blaine, instead of Cleveland, would now be President, and the national House would be Republican and in favor of protection instead of Democratic and in favor of the Mills bill. If the colored citizens could vote and have their votes counted as cast, the election next fall would, with hardly the form of a contest, be Republican, and on the 4th of March, 1889, Cleveland would surrender the executive power to a Republican President, who would be sustained by a Congress Republican in both branches.

Although in the coming contest the votes of the negro will be unconstitutionally suppressed, and the South perhaps solidly Democratic, our Southern masters can be defeated if the commercial interests of the country are sufficiently aroused. They will do well to take the alarm. The indifference of the business men of the North to the encroachments of slavery made the war possible, and compelled the expenditure of six thousand millions to preserve the Union. It is better to protect our industries by a contest now, when they are yet undestroyed, than to fight to restore them after they have been stricken down and chains are riveted upon our limbs.

If victory is achieved, the conditions of reconstruction enforced, obedience to the constitution in all its parts compelled, and the vote of the Northern man, white or black, made equal to that of the Southern man, white or black, neither the North nor the South need fear negro supremacy.

Manhood suffrage was first tried immediately after a war, made by the masters to strengthen their hold on their slaves, had resulted in the discomfiture of the former and the freedom of the latter, but had disorganized society. In its reorganization the late masters refused to participate; the freedmen went ahead and did as well as they could. The failure, if it be such, of the first experiment, will not be repeated under new conditions and better auspices. The charge that the two races can not live side by side in the Southern States in political equality, the voters of each race freely participating in all elections, has not been proved. It is a mere clamor raised to excuse the suppression of the negro vote in order to obtain partisan power in State and nation. Wherever the experiment of impartial suffrage has been tried with any approach to fairness and good-will on the part of the whites, it has been remarkably successful. The colored men are not aggressive; they are docile, well-disposed, and anxious, if allowed to enjoy what they know to be their constitutional rights, to live peacefully with their white neighbors.

They submit readily to what is sometimes to them so offensively called the superior intelligence of the whites. They do not seek social equality. They are patient and long-suffering. But they will never permanently abandon the ballot, and whenever they reach the polls they will insist upon their right to vote the Republican ticket if they so wish. Their interests and their desires make them an ever-eager army of seven millions of people seeking their rights under the fifteenth amendment. In addition to this pressure, the manhood, the dignity, the self-respect, and the honor of all citizens of the North require that they should compel our modern Southern masters to desist from their attempt perpetually to rule, through crimes against the black man and against the Constitution, that country which they wickedly but vainly tried to destroy in order to fasten more firmly the chains of slavery, and to extend its accursed power and influence into the Territories of the Union.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3060) granting right of way to the Pima Land and Water Company across Fort Lowell military reservation in Arizona, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present an amendment from the Committee on the Judiciary intended to be proposed to the deficiency bill, or some other proper bill, which I ask may be printed, together with the memoranda accompanying it, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPOONER in the chair). It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

JACKSON (MISS.) MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 12) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, yesterday I gave notice that I should to-day move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolutions reported from the Judiciary Committee relative to the suppression of the vote of colored citizens in Jackson, Miss. I move that the pending measure be laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of those resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the pending business be informally laid aside to enable him to move the consideration of the resolutions which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions reported from the Committee on the Judiciary July 23, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate, in view of the report made to it in obedience to its resolution of January 12, 1888, in respect of the suppression of the votes of the colored citizens of the city of Jackson, Miss., and the participation in such suppression by certain United States officers as set forth and described in said report, does hereby express its strong condemnation of the conduct of said officers; and it also expresses its deliberate judgment that every officer of the United States so engaged or participating should be promptly dismissed from the public service as soon as authentic knowledge of such engagement or participation is brought to the attention of the appointing power.

Resolved, That a copy of this report, and of the testimony on which it is based, be communicated to the President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions are before the Senate, if there be no objection, and the question is upon agreeing to the same.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, addressed the Senate. Having spoken one hour and fifteen minutes——

A message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of my friend from Iowa, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

[For the speech of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, complete see the proceedings of the 27th.]

Mr. MORGAN. I hope an adjournment will not be had. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not press the motion. I understand the President of the United States has sent a message to the Senate which ought to be laid before us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the message can wait till to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. Hardly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPOONER in the chair). The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make that motion.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from Vermont that the Senate do now adjourn, on which motion the Senator from Alabama asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and therefore I shall refrain from recording my vote.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and I ask his colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] whether I shall observe my pair on this motion to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am clear that my colleague, if present, would vote for adjournment at this time of day.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I announce myself paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am requested to announce the pair of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] with this condition, that when there is less than a quorum I may vote. I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I voted a moment ago, forgetting that I was paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I now transfer the pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and will therefore let my vote stand.

Mr. BECK. I inquire if the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has voted?

Mr. FRYE. He has not voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is not recorded.

Mr. BECK. Then I desire to transfer my general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and I vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. That pair is transferred, and I vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I am paird with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I do not know whether he has voted or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware is not recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. If it suits the Senator from Iowa we may transfer our respective pairs. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. We can transfer our pairs and vote.

Mr. ALLISON. That is quite agreeable to me, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE. My pair has been transferred, and I vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. EDMUNDS. The pair of the Senator from Delaware has been announced with another Senator.

Mr. SAWYER. Then I will let my vote stand.

Mr. HEARST. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. STANFORD] on all political questions. This looks to me as bordering on politics, and therefore I shall not vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—23.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 23, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

VETO MESSAGE—W. S. CARPENTER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States; which was referred, with the accompanying bill, to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 2088, entitled "An act for the relief of W. S. Carpenter."

This bill appropriates the sum of $126.26, to be paid to the beneficiary named therein for his salary as an employé in the railway mail service from the 3d day of October until the 20th day of November, 1882.

Mr. Carpenter was employed as a railway postal clerk at a salary of $800 per annum. He abandoned his route about the 2d day of October, 1882, without any leave of absence or explanation at the time, leaving his work in charge of one Jones, another railway postal clerk. He appears to have been paid for all the work he did, unless it be for two or three days in October, for which he apparently makes no claim.

There is nothing in the Post-Office Department showing that the absence of Carpenter was claimed to be on account of sickness, though there are a number of communications relating to the case.

The regulations of the Department permit the performance of the duties of a postal clerk by an associate in case of sickness, but never without the written permission of the division superintendent after an arrangement between the parties in writing, signed by them and filed with the superintendent.

Among a number of communications from railway mail service officials relating to the conduct of Carpenter, all tending in the same direction, there is a letter from the chief clerk of the railway mail service at Peoria, Ill., under whose immediate supervision Mr. Carpenter performed service, written to the superintendent of the sixth division of said service at Chicago, and dated November 16, 1882, containing the following statement:

"I desire to call your attention to the case of W. S. Carpenter, Gilman and Springfield R. P. O., as follows: October 10 he was requested to appear at the post-office at Springfield, Ill., for examination on Illinois scheme. I went to Springfield for the purpose of examining him, but he failed to put in an appearance. Upon my return home I found a letter from him stating that he did not expect to remain in the service, hence his failure to report for examination; and, furthermore, that he would send in his resignation to your office by the first of the following week. This he had not done the 12th instant. He has not been on duty but two days since October 1. He left the run in charge of Mr. Jones, of the same line, telling him he did not know when he would return and for Jones to keep up the run. He has no leave of absence, either verbally or otherwise. What his motives are for conducting himself in this manner I can not imagine. I have written him on the subject, but can not hear from him. When in Springfield the 3d instant I requested the postmaster there to not pay Carpenter for October until he received notice to do so. I then notified you of the facts in the matter. I would respectfully recommend that Carpenter be relieved from further duty and a successor be appointed. He is of no account at the best; has no interest in the work, and should be removed. I would also recommend that he be paid for but the two days' run in the month of October."

Four days after the date of this letter Mr. Carpenter was notified that an order had been issued discontinuing his pay and services.

These facts stated present the case of an employé of the Government abandoning his duties without leave or notice, in direct violation of rules, and claiming compensation for work done in his absence by another employé whose entire services were due the Government.

To allow a claim so lacking in merit would endanger discipline and invite irregularity and loose methods in a very important branch of the public service.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 22, 1888.

LIGHT OFF PAMLICO POINT, NORTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7421) for establishing a light off Pamlico Point, North Carolina, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference requested. The only difference between the two Houses in relation to the bill is this: The Senate have amended it so as to provide for an appropriation of money to erect the light-house, while the House has merely authorized its erection. The House in passing bills of this character does not make an appropriation in the bill, but simply authorizes the erection of the structure and leaves the appropriation to be made by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the gentleman is quite right in asking that the House non-concur.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., GULL SHOAL, PAMLICO SOUND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7604) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at or near Gull Shoal, Pamlico Sound, North Carolina, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. CRISP. That bill is in the same condition as the preceding one, and I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference requested.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, NANTUCKET, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8752) providing for the establishment of an additional life-saving station on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

On motion of Mr. CRISP, the House non-concurred in the Senate amendments and agreed to the conference requested.

LIGHT-SHIP, GREAT ROUND SHOAL, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10183) to establish a light-ship off Great Round Shoal, near Nantucket, Mass., with amendments of the Senate thereto.

On motion of Mr. CRISP, the House non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate and agreed to the conference requested.

H. C. MARKHAM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 165) for the relief of H. C. Markham with amendments of the Senate thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CIRCUIT COURT, WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the House non-concur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference requested.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amendment?

Mr. CULBERSON. It refers only to the time of holding the courts.

The SPEAKER. The Senate has adopted a substitute for the entire bill, but the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] states that it relates only to the time of holding the courts. If there be no objection, the amendment will be non-concurred in and a conference agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LANDS FOR PEORIA AND MIAMI INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8074) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the united Peoria and Miami Indians in the Indian Territory, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and agree to a conference.

Mr. ADAMS. I object.

The bill and amendments were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

THOMAS STRODDER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8087) for the relief of Thomas Strodder, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The SPEAKER. This is merely a formal amendment correcting the number of the regiment in which the beneficiary served. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 2 strike out "one hundred and."

The amendment was concurred in.

DELIA NEWMAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7013) to place the name of Delia Newman on the pension-roll, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of this bill is also formal. It will be read by the Clerk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 3, strike out "of company regiment" and insert "a member of Capt. James Bradley's company."

The amendment was concurred in.

JAMES STILLWELL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6371) granting a pension to Jesse M. Stillwell with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The SPEAKER. This amendment also is merely formal.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 2, strike out "Lionsville" and insert "Zionsville."

The amendment was concurred in.

RAILROAD THROUGH FORT LEAVENWORTH MILITARY RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3226) granting the Leavenworth Rapid Transit Railway Company the right to construct and operate its railroad through a portion of the military reservation of Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, a bill similar to this has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs of this House. The object of the bill is simply to allow the Rapid Transit Railway Company, now in operation from Leavenworth to Kansas City, to extend its line about a mile and a half up to the fort, so as to afford facilities for the transportation of Government freight, as well as of officers and soldiers connected with the fort, and persons who may desire to visit it. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That license and authority are hereby granted to the Leavenworth Rapid Transit Railway Company to construct and operate its railroad, from its present terminus at the south boundary of the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., into and through said military reservation to a point and terminus near the military prison, and at its said terminus near said military prison to construct a depot and such side-tracks, turn-tables, and other facilities as may be necessary for the convenient operation of its said railroad; and for the purpose aforesaid, the use of a strip of land 50 feet wide for its right of way extending from the south boundary line of said military reservation to said terminal point near said military prison, and the use of a tract of land not exceeding 2 acres in area for said depot, side-tracks, and terminal facilities, are hereby granted to said railway company: Provided, That the route of said railroad through said military reservation and the location of the depot grounds and the plans of the depot and all other buildings to be erected by said railroad company on said military reservation shall be submitted to and shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War. And the said company, its successors and assigns, shall occupy and use said railway and depot grounds subject to removal therefrom and the revocation of the license and authority herein given, whenever the public service, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may require such revocation and removal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish the gentleman from Kansas would explain the difference between this bill and the House bill which he has stated is on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. The bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of this House proposes to give a right of way of 100 feet; the Senate bill restricts the right of way to 50 feet. In addition to that, the Senate bill includes a clause providing that the Secretary of War may at his pleasure revoke this privilege. The franchise proposed to be granted to the railroad company is to be subject to revocation at any time by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ROGERS. The bill contains no grant of land?

Mr. MORRILL. No grant of land.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is virtually a grant of land as to two acres.

Mr. MORRILL. Not exceeding two acres.

Mr. HOLMAN. Land to that extent is granted by the bill, unless the Secretary of War should in the future think proper to reclaim the land. Now, it is to be presumed that in the course of time this reservation will be turned over to the Interior Department as a part of the public domain, and will no longer be subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War. It seems to me it should be provided that if the reservation should at any time, by its abandonment for military purposes, become a part of the public domain, the right of the railroad company as to these two acres of land shall cease.

Mr. MORRILL. The contingency which the gentleman contemplates is extremely remote, because the Fort Leavenworth reservation is the most important military reservation in the West. It is the largest of such reservations, and the Government is annually expending there a large amount of money. It is scrupulously holding this reservation.

This right of way has been restricted to 50 feet, because General Sheridan said he was utterly opposed to having any more land taken than might be absolutely necessary. This measure has been favorably reported upon by General Merritt, commandant of the Department of the Missouri, also by General Sheridan while living, as well as by Secretary Endicott. The amount of land granted can not exceed two acres; and is to be fixed and located by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the general policy has been in such cases to grant a right of way without requiring compensation; but I do not think we have been in the habit of granting so large a body of land as two acres for depot purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Quite a number of bills granting right of way through military reservations have been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and are now on the Calendar. I think it would be well to have some time set when they may all be taken up and disposed of, for I do not believe there is any good reason to object to any of them.

I do not object to this measure proposed by the gentleman from Kansas, and commend him highly for his industry and ingenuity in getting his military reservation bill through. I hope, however, that the House will before very long give the Military Committee a day to dispose of quite a number of bills of a similar character, which are entirely unobjectionable.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think that a railway company obtaining such privileges as are here granted could afford to pay for the land, at all events?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think that in a great many instances it will be of much convenience to the reservations to have the railroads through them. It is a measure of economy in some cases, saving the cost of transportation, and certainly a matter of great convenience.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object in the present instance to the request of the gentleman from Kansas, but it strikes me that a railroad corporation deriving such a privilege as this ought to be willing to make compensation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman from Indiana thinks this is an undue favor to a railroad corporation, then he ought not to withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, thinks it is unobjectionable as affecting the military reservation under the control of his committee, I hardly feel myself justifiable in interposing an objection.

Mr. LAIRD. It is recommended by your Secretary of War, any way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the bill (H. R. 8639) on the same subject will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

H. C. MARKHAM.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] asks unanimous consent to set aside the order made this morning with reference to the bill (H. R. 165) for the relief of H. C. Markham. This is a bill to remove a charge of desertion, and the amendments of the Senate seem to be merely formal in character.

The Clerk will report the amendments.

The amendments were read at length.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments; and if there be no objection the order by which this bill was referred this morning will be rescinded, and the Senate amendments will be concurred in.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills; which were read twice and referred as follows, namely:

The bill (S. 2110) granting the right of way for the construction of a railroad through the Hot Springs reservation, State of Arkansas—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 3421) granting a pension to Mary B. McVean—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 3422) granting a pension to Kate C. Van Arnum—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

UNITED PEORIAS AND MIAMIES.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 8074) to provide for allotment of lands in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies in the Indian Territory may be permitted to remain on the Speaker's table. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is interested in that bill, and I ask that it remain on the table until he is in his seat.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the order heretofore made this morning with reference to the bill in question will be withdrawn, and it will be allowed to remain upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a request of the Senate for the return of the bill (H. R. 4792) to pension J. W. Porter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the order returning this bill will be made, and the Clerk of the House will be directed to return the bill to the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, for ten days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LAWLER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOLMES, until Tuesday next.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following members as managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the session of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri: Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. CASWELL.

MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which I ask may be disposed of now.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 12, 1888.

Resolved, That the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be allowed an annual clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until March 3, 1889, at the rate of $2,000 per annum; and the Committee on Appropriations are hereby instructed to make provision for such clerk at the said rate of $2,000 per annum, from said March 3, 1889.

The committee to whom was referred the resolution by Mr. DUNN, chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, asking that the clerk of said committee be made an annual clerk with pay at the rate of $2,000 per annum, until March, 1889, having had the same under consideration, and not seeing clearly the necessity for such action, report back said resolution without recommendation.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. The report being without recommendation by the direction of the committee, I now yield the time to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to state to the House the reasons which induced me to submit that resolution. The clerk of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries is a session clerk. The jurisdiction of that committee has been very largely extended, taking not only all legislation relating to the merchant marine but also to the fisheries. There is an important investigation pending, which the committee will have to make a request of the House for authority to continue during the recess of Congress. There is also another resolution ordered to be reported, providing for another investigation relating to the menhaden fisheries, which the House will probably order when it is presented. These investigations, taken with the extended range of legislation which has been sent to the committee, is enlarging the work of the committee very greatly, requiring a rapidly-increasing and extensive correspondence to enable the committee to act advisedly in all these matters, and my experience on other committees has taught me, by comparison with the importance and magnitude of this work, that this committee ought to be provided with an annual clerkship. If it is made annual now, it will enable the committee to avail itself of the services of that clerk in these investigations during the recess of Congress—and they must be continued during that recess—and also keep up the extensive correspondence which is necessary in relation to the legislation pending before the committee. I therefore ask the House to agree to the resolution before the committee, so that I may know whether to ask for authority to employ a clerk in these investigations or whether we shall use this clerk. I will therefore ask the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WATER-RESERVE LANDS, WISCONSIN.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 1880.

The SPEAKER. That is the special order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This bill will only take a moment or two to dispose of. It is in regard to the right of way on certain reserved lands in the State of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title, as the bill has been read. On the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], consideration was postponed until this morning.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1880) declaring that certain water-reserve lands in the State of Wisconsin are and have been subject to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875.

Mr. ROGERS. I should like to hear that bill read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands in the State of Wisconsin described in and withdrawn from sale by the proclamations of the President of the United States issued March 22, 1880, April 5, 1881, and November 28, 1881, for the reason that said lands would be required for or subject to flowage in the construction of dams, reservoirs, and other works proposed to be erected for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and certain of its tributaries, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be, and to have been at all times heretofore, subject to the provisions of a certain act of Congress, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, as fully, effectually, and to the same extent as though said lands had not been described in said proclamations, or withdrawn from sale thereby, but had remained with the body of public lands subject to private entry and sale: Provided, however, That any and all parts of said lands acquired by any railroad company under said act of Congress shall at all times be subject to the right of flowage which at any time may become necessary in the construction or maintenance of dams, reservoirs, or other works which may be constructed or erected by or under the authority of the United States for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River or its tributaries: Provided further, That the railroad companies availing themselves of this act shall, in addition to filing the maps now required by law to be filed, also file maps of definite location of their proposed lines of railroad, over said water-reserve lands, in the office of the Secretary of War, and until the approval of said maps by the Secretary of War no right to occupy said lands shall vest in such companies; and no location shall be permitted which takes for right of way or stations lands needed for the use of the present reservoir system, or in the construction of dams or other works, or any proposed or probable extension of the same, or which will obstruct or increase the cost of the present or prospective reservoir system; or shall any railroad company be permitted to take material for construction from any of said reservoir lands outside the right of way granted herein.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This bill simply declares the former action of Congress relating to certain public lands is intended to cover lands known as water-reserved lands, subject, however, to additional provisos that are adopted in this bill. This bill was examined by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Inasmuch as reservations at the head of the Mississippi River are contemplated in that bill to be made in the interest of navigation, the bill was referred to the Secretary of War, and the provisos that he thought necessary were put in this bill. I know but little about it beyond what is disclosed in the record and the report of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this bill ought to have been considered by the Committee on Public Lands. It was, however, referred to another committee. I have not had an opportunity of looking into the subject myself and am not at all aware whether this is a proper measure or not. I only wanted to know why the matter, being one which affected public lands, did not go to that committee. Assuming the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to be correct, I am aware of no objection to the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. So far as I know there was no sinister purpose in sending this bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It was sent in the course of business at the Clerk's desk, not at the request of anybody. The only question is upon the construction of the reservations of water at the head of the Mississippi River. I suppose myself that no present member of Congress will probably ever engage in that work, although of course I can not say. But the bill is so guarded that it can not unfavorably affect the work whenever the time comes to construct it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GROSVENOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PIMA LAND AND WATER COMPANY.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3060) granting right of way to the Pima Land and Water Company across Fort Lowell military reservation in Arizona, and for other purposes, and that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pima Land and Water Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the Territory of Arizona, is hereby granted the right of way, 500 feet in width, for their aqueduct and irrigating canal to, from, across, through, and out of the Fort Lowell military reservation, and the right to construct dams, water ways, and canals for the purpose of developing water and for the purpose of storing the same; and for that purpose sufficient land for the construction and maintenance of the same, not to exceed, however, 1,000 acres and not to interfere with any buildings or improvements on said reservation: Provided, however, That the said company shall supply the garrison, gardens, and orchards of Fort Lowell, free of charge, such quantities of water as may be required for irrigating purposes, not to exceed 100 miner's inches, and the location of the said canals and water ways to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. MAISH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3060) granting right of way to Pima Land and Water Company across Fort Lowell military reservation, in Arizona, submit the following report:

The Pima Land and Water Company have a canal in course of construction from the Santa Cruz River, for the purpose of conveying water to the desert lands lying between the Fort Lowell military reservation and the city of Tucson, Ariz., and also for the purpose of supplying water to said city. In order to accomplish these laudable purposes it is necessary to cross said reservation. The projectors of the enterprise agree to furnish water to said military post.

The bill has been favorably recommended by the Secretary of War and the General of the Army, which letters are hereto appended and made part hereof. The proposed canal will be a great benefit not only to said post, but to the lands through which it passes.

Your committee therefore recommend that said bill do pass.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, March 2, 1888.

SIR: In reply to the request of your committee, dated the 7th ultimo, for the views of the Department upon House bill No. 3060, Fiftieth Congress, first session, "granting right of way to the Pima Land and Water Company across Fort Lowell military reservation, in Arizona, and for other purposes," I have the honor to inclose a report upon the subject, dated the 29th ultimo, by the Lieutenant-General of the Army, and to concur in his opinion that in view of the proviso in the concluding lines of the bill its passage would be of no detriment to the service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 29, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a bill, H. R. 3060, Fiftieth Congress, first session, referred by you for my report, with the remark that its passage, in view of the proviso incorporated in the concluding lines of the bill, would be of no detriment to the service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General, Commanding.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 29, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith bill H. R. 1938, Fiftieth Congress, first session, referred by you for my report, with the remark that the bill should be modified by substituting in section 1, lines 8, 11, and 12, for "four miles" the words "five miles."

The strip of land that would thus be retained in the reservation embraces the principal sources of the water supply of the past, and should not be surrendered.

If the bill is modified as suggested its passage would be of no detriment to the service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General, Commanding.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MACDONALD. What is the extent of the right of way granted?

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I think it is 500 feet in width, sufficient to permit of the protection of the banks of the canal. The report explains the matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has the bill been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. It is reported by that committee.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES K. ERWIN.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10862) for the relief of Charles K. Erwin, and that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLAND. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. BLAND. Has this matter ever been before Congress until now?

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. It never has been.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. STRUBLE. I desire to remind the Chair of the special order assigned for this morning.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up for consideration the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of higher privilege. The special order will come up afterwards.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Before proceeding further with the consideration of the conference report, I desire that some limit may be fixed for the debate.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is applicable to this report at any time when it is moved.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am aware of that; but I am willing that there shall be further debate if gentlemen wish, although I have no desire myself to debate the report at any considerable length.

I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to indicate what time he desires.

Mr. SAYERS. It occurs to me that two hours and a half will be sufficient for the discussion of this matter, the time to be equally divided between those in favor of the report and those opposed to it.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I send to the desk a resolution which I desire to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 13th day of August, 1888, the following resolution was introduced by Mr. DUBOIS: "Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to furnish to the House of Representatives a list of pardons granted by the President of the United States to persons convicted of the crimes of unlawful cohabitation, adultery, and polygamy in Utah and Idaho Territories since March 4, 1885, giving the name, date of sentence, length of sentence, and date of pardon in each case," and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary on said day, and the same has not been reported to the House within the one week as provided by the rules: Therefore,

Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the consideration of the resolution, and the same be now considered by the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, is not present at this moment, and I have no knowledge myself of this resolution——

Mr. DUBOIS. I believe I have the floor. I will yield to the gentleman after I shall have made a statement. I desire to disavow any intention to cast a reflection on the Judiciary Committee of the House. The honorable chairman of that committee and two of its members have told me that they would be glad to report the resolution, but the chairman informed me that there was a bare quorum of the committee in the city, and I think that two ineffectual attempts were made last week to get a quorum together. Owing to the lateness of the session, and for fear that a quorum of the committee may not be got together, and for no other reason, I have introduced the resolution which has just been read.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have just come in. What is the proposition before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] offers a resolution to discharge the Committee of the Judiciary from the further consideration of a resolution of inquiry introduced by him in regard to prosecutions under the law against polygamy, and to bring the resolution before the House for consideration at this time.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to say that the Committee on the Judiciary have not had an opportunity to hold a meeting for the last two or three weeks on account of the absence of some of our members. It is now understood, however, that we can have a meeting to-morrow with direct reference to this resolution and a resolution in relation to the charges against a district judge in California in connection with the admission of Chinese. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] will withdraw his proposition.

Mr. DUBOIS. I suggest that the resolution lie over for two days.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will lie over, subject to the right of the gentleman from Idaho to call it up at any time. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3474) amendatory of an act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., approved February 3, 1887.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. CRAIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 216) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States authorizing the President to veto separate items in appropriation bills; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the discussion of the conference report on the Army appropriation bill, it has been agreed between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and myself that the debate may be limited to one hour and a half, the time to be divided equally between those in favor of the report and those opposed to it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that debate on the conference report upon the Army appropriation bill be closed in one hour and a half, the time to be equally divided between the supporters of the report and those opposed to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yesterday I believe an hour was occupied on this subject, and most of the time, I think, was used in support of the report. Has that matter been taken into consideration?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir. I do not wish to say anything at all to-day. I am willing to give away all my time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MRS. GENERAL WARD B. BURNETT.

Mr. STRUBLE. I desire to make a request in regard to the special order fixed for to-day. I think it evident that no quorum is present this morning. I therefore ask unanimous consent that if it be disclosed during the day that a quorum is present I may call up the special order, not, however, to interfere with appropriation bills, conference reports, or the Oklahoma bill, and that if action be not taken to-day, I may call the bill up one week from to-day for final disposition so far as this session is concerned.

A MEMBER. Is it a pension bill?

Mr. STRUBLE. Yes, sir; it is the bill increasing the pension o Mrs. General Ward B. Burnett.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] asks unanimous consent that if the bill increasing the pension of Mrs. General Ward B. Burnett be not reached to-day, he shall have the right to call it up one week from to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STRUBLE. Is it understood that I may call the bill up to-day?

The SPEAKER. That right will rest with the gentleman. The order is that if the bill be not called up to-day, the gentleman shall have the right to call it up one week from to-day.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next the House take a recess from 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to bills on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Patents to which there may be no objection.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. From the character of the bills reported from that committee it would be well, I think, that they be considered during a day session.

Mr. BLAND. Why fix a night session? We are going to be here all the fall anyhow.

Mr. WEAVER. I did not hear the remark of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I say that from the character of the bills which have been presented in regard to patents I think it would be well to have them considered during a day session. My friend knows that the attendance here during the day, even when a quorum is in the city, is very slim; and in the evening there would be practically nobody here—only enough to organize.

Mr. WEAVER. In view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio I ask that Saturday week, after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Patents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman now omits the clause limiting the order to bills to which there is no objection?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that Saturday week, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Patents. Is there objection?

Mr. LYMAN. Unless the gentleman will embody in that request a proposition fixing a day for the consideration of legislation from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I shall object.

Mr. WEAVER. I am not a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and am not running its business. I am voting for all pension bills; and I am as much in favor of pension legislation as my colleague [Mr. LYMAN]. But the Committee on Patents has had no hearing at all during this session, which has now extended over eight months. I hope the gentleman will not interpose objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] objects, unless the request be modified.

Several members called for the regular order.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The discussion on agreeing to the conference report on the Army appropriation bill will now begin at three minutes after 1 o'clock.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to detain the House but a very few minutes. Nor do I propose to discuss the merits of the Army bill proper. It may be a good bill, and it may have defects, I am not sure, but I am willing to accept and confirm the action of the gentlemen who prepared it, and report it, subjected as it has been to the scrutiny of the House.

I desire to call the attention of the House, not to the items that are properly in the Army bill, but to the fact that under the guise of amending the Army bill the rules of the House have been violated and defied by adding to the bill the provisions of the fortifications bill, and in so doing the House is treated with disrespect.

The real question is not whether the Army bill as prepared by the Military Committee of this House, and as passed by this body, possesses merit which entitles it to favor, but will this House in the conduct of its business maintain its sense of self-respect and preserve its own dignity. That is the precise question.

If in point of fact the Senate had reported in the same bill an amendment which provided for building two cruisers, another which appropriated $200,000 for experiment in the manufacture of sorghum, and another giving $50,000,000 for pensions, there is not a member of this House belonging to either one of these committees who felt any respect for himself or for the authority of the rules of the House who would not indignantly resent the usurpation.

That is the precise question now before us, though in a less aggravating form, whether that kind of legislative juggling will be permitted or not. It is a great deal more important to the House to maintain its rightful authority and defend its jurisdiction and the rights of its committees than it is to become seriously troubled to determine whether we will appropriate $1,500,000 or $3,000,000 for the purchase of steel ingots. If the House is satisfied to submit to this indignity I must submit. If it is satisfied to permit the members of one committee to violate the rules governing our legislative proceedings, and in so doing insult another committee, I am sure I can stand it.

One word touching that aspect of the matter to which my friend from New York [Mr. TRACEY] referred yesterday. He said it has been intimated, if I understood him, that he was solicitous about the plant at Watervliet arsenal, because it would aid him in his canvass. Now, I honor him for doing all he can for his constituency, and he deserves honor for every proper effort to secure that great plant for his district. I have no criticism to offer on his conduct. On the contrary, it is thoroughly commendable. But I want to say to my friend, if this House consent for any purpose to an utter disregard and defiance of its rules, then the House has proved itself to be of such character that he need not be thoroughly anxious to acquire a seat upon this floor. That is putting it strong. It is putting it justly.

Now, as to competition in the purchase of steel. The item does not belong to this bill, and hence is not a proper subject for this discussion. You have already passed the fortification bill providing for the purchase of a plant and the purchase of steel. You have made abundant provision, in the judgment of the War Department and in the judgment of the House, for all these things. You have done it in the exercise of rightful jurisdiction, through a committee of this body, and that bill is now being considered in the Senate. Hence those items covered by that bill and improperly injected into this are not proper subjects for discussion at this time. It is not a question whether we will purchase one or five million dollars' worth of steel ingots for guns, but whether we will provide for it by orderly methods and in a manner worthy of this legislative body.

But since it has been adverted to I will say a word touching the proposed purchase of steel for heavy ordnance. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has argued that we must purchase at least three times as much as will by any possibility be required, in order that we may be able, presumably, to get it at a cheaper rate. His argument is to the effect that if we purchase but $1,500,000 worth of steel we must purchase it from one plant, since there would be, as he claims, but one bidder, all other competitors being crowded out. He says the purchase of but $1,500,000 worth of steel will enable one plant now in the business, by reason of its supposed advantages, to bid for the steel at a rate to exclude all competition; and for that reason we must purchase a vastly larger quantity, regardless of our needs, as a means of securing competition and a lower rate. I call his attention to the fact that if a single plant now in existence can crowd out all others where the amount of steel to be purchased is but $1,500,000—in other words, if there is enough margin on $1,500,000 worth to enable them to crowd out all competition, will he tell me how it occurs that they can not do the business on a closer margin and successfully crowd out all competition when the amount is three times as great, and the time within which additional steel will be wanted is extended to ten years or more?

To state the proposition differently, if they can manufacture steel at a margin of, say, 10 per cent. where $1,500,000 worth is purchased, and can crowd out competition, can they not more successfully do it where there is $3,500,000 worth to be bought, added to the other fact that no additional quantity will be required for ten or twelve years? Is not that sound logic and business sense? The Secretary of the Navy advertised for $1,000,000 worth of gun-steel, and what was the result? He had three bidders. As my friend very properly says, there was in that instance additional steel to be bought. But that is just the point exactly that I want to make here. Now the War Department testified before our committee. It spoke through the Ordnance Corps that $1,500,000 worth of this steel would last five or six years, the Government working at its utmost bent, and that no more steel would be required in all that time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman put that question several times to me, and now I want him, as a frank and candid gentleman, as I believe him to be——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not think you are mistaken about that. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I want the gentleman to give me his opinion on this point: if it is not a fact that when the Government advertised at the time to which he refers for the purchase of $1,000,000 worth of steel for heavy ordnance, it was not understood at the same time that there was to be an additional purchase of $3,000,000 and over for armor plates? Now, the people who desired to manufacture the steel if the Government, when it wanted only $1,000,000 worth of steel, and had advertised for that amount, with the understanding that no more was to be wanted—it is not likely that they would have made the bids to which the gentleman has referred. But it was clearly understood at the time that $3,000,000 of purchase was to follow very soon, and now will the gentleman tell me as a fair and candid man if the bidders for $1,000,000 worth of steel in that case were not induced to become bidders by the hope of securing the other order for the remainder. In other words, I repeat, if the Government having purchased $1,000,000 worth of steel for the guns was not also expected to purchase some three millions more for armor plates? And was not that really the inducement?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is precisely the point I have been making, if the gentleman had paid attention to me; that is just the logic I want to apply here. Now turn it and let us see. We propose to purchase $1,500,000 of steel. Bids to supply that quantity will be made with knowledge of the fact that three or four times as much will be required in the near future. This will induce competition to supply the first lot in the hope of getting contracts to supply a part of the quantity needed afterwards. But if there is but one plant fully equipped, and a proposal is submitted for all the steel needed in the next ten or fifteen years, as my friend proposes, the result will be, first, that the established plant will crowd out all competition, because there will be no other steel required for ten or twelve years, and, second, the advantages resulting from improved metal and improved methods of producing it will be lost to the Government.

My friend must not forget that the processes for producing steel are being constantly improved. They make better steel now and at lower cost than they did a few years ago, and we have every reason to believe that the art will not cease to develop, but that this same improvement and reduction of cost will advance with the coming years. But yet in the presence of that knowledge my friend would authorize a contract to be entered into with one plant already established, giving them a contract for ten or twelve years to supply steel, thus at once practically reducing the chances for competition, but holding out inducement to combine, and excluding all possible advantage to result from the advent of methods for improving the quality and cheapening the cost of production. Beyond that it is by no means clear that a new metal or alloy may not at any time supersede those now in use; so that, to my mind at least, the purchase of vast quantities of steel confessedly in excess of what will be needed in ten years, thus presuming that we have reached the end of the march of improvement in the production of metals and in the manufacture of guns, has no trace of wisdom or economy in it, and suggests advantages to the contractor rather than to the Government.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to interpose here a little correction?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. Both gentlemen seem to be mistaken as to the fact they are using to illustrate their arguments. At the time to which the gentleman refers, when the gun steel for the Navy was advertised for, there was also an offer for the armor. The whole four millions was offered at the same time, but there were three separate bids for the gun steel, ranging from about $833,000 up to nearly $1,000,000, but only one bidder for the armor and armor plates. But all of these bids were offered at the same time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly; but there were three bidders for the steel forgings for guns, as the record discloses.

Mr. HERBERT. I also take this opportunity to correct the RECORD. My friend from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] called my attention to the fact that the RECORD the other day had it that in answering a question of this kind I had said there was $1,000,000, when what I really did say was $4,000,000.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that steel forgings require a certain kind of plant. One million dollars was for the purchase of steel for guns and there were three competitors.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will not the gentleman admit that the same establishment which can turn out steel forgings for guns can turn out steel forgings for armor.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is very likely, but I do not know whether it can or not. The machinery would of course be vastly different.

Mr. SAYERS. But they did not bid for that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. They did not bid for steel forgings for guns.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Did not the successful bidding firm get both contracts?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not know, and I do not care. It is not of the slightest concern whether it did or not. Even if it were true, it would not justify the purchase of a supply for ten years during the development in gunnery and in metals and in the manner of producing them, which is of constant and accelerating growth.

But this whole matter properly belongs to the appropriation bill already passed by the House and now pending in the Senate; and it is not justly a pertinent question at this time of whether we shall buy more or less steel. These items have no business on this bill. And this House by a vote of nearly ten to one has determined what amount of steel ought to be purchased, and the bill carrying those items has passed and is now pending in the Senate, and I protest that it is not proper to consider them in this connection and upon this bill, because it is otherwise ordered in the rules, and because they are here in utter defiance of the mandate and the well-established precedent and practice of the House and in utter defiance of the rights of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, it is not of consequence to me more than to other members of this body, but I feel some little spirit of resentment when the House indicates in any degree a disposition to permit one of its committees to be thus insulted by having subjects specially committed to their care taken in charge by another committee and reported in direct and inexcusable violation of the law governing our procedure.

I do not criticise the gentlemen of the committee, except in this: that after the Senate, in disregard of the rules of the House, and regardless of our rights, added these amendments, the Committee on Military Affairs aggressively assume that they have, by this action of the Senate, been clothed with full jurisdiction the same as if it had been conferred by the affirmative action of the House.

The Senate can not, by its action, oust or confer jurisdiction in cases where the House has conferred or denied it by distinct rules ordained for the government of its proceedings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH].

Mr. MAISH. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker, no fortification bill has been reported to this House from the Committee on Appropriations, to use the elegant language of the gentleman from Missouri, since the "Committee on Appropriations has been deflowered." Now, Mr. Speaker, there has not been a bill for fortifications passed that has been introduced into this House by that Committee on Appropriations for the two years, or since the rules have been changed, and therefore the practice of this House for many years affords no argument in favor of the Committee on Appropriations. I had hoped that the question of jurisdiction had been disposed of and would not be entered into again. I thought that the House had heard as much of it as it cared to hear. I maintain that the dignity of this House has not been insulted, and I maintain further that the jurisdiction of no committee has been trespassed upon. I hold, and I think no lawyer can give a fair and candid examination to the rules who will not hold, that the subjects incorporated in the Army bill by the Senate legitimately belong to that committee. Mr. Speaker, the report from the Committee on Appropriations itself suggests that the members of that committee have some other idea of the word "fortifications" than the gentlemen of the committee have given to it on this floor. They say in their report upon the fortifications bill that—

> The Committee on Appropriations in presenting the accompanying bill making an appropriation for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial, and service, and for other purposes.

They incorporate, according to their own admission, a very great many subjects in their bill outside of all they themselves have said to be embraced in the word "fortifications."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am almost ashamed to go over this subject again; it has been so frequently presented to this House. The rule, for it is but one rule, defining the powers and authority of the various committees provides, as follows:

> All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named under the preceding rule, as follows:

Then it proceeds:

> Subjects relating,
> 1. to the election of members: to the Committee on Elections.

Then it goes on to enumerate the various committees, defining their powers, until we reach clause 3, which I do not find at this moment, but which I will state from memory, gives among the subjects belonging to the Committee on Appropriations the subject of "fortifications."

Then we come down to clause 12, in which we have the following words:

> To the military establishment and public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy: to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Now, I maintain that a fair interpretation of this rule gives to the Committee on Military Affairs jurisdiction—if not exclusive jurisdiction, at least concurrent jurisdiction—of the matters which the Senate has chosen to incorporate into the Army bill. If concurrent jurisdiction, then it is within the power of the House to confide this subject either to the Committee on Military Affairs or to the Committee on Appropriations. Because the House voted a few days ago to appropriate $1,500,000 for the purchase of steel ingots in the fortifications bill, that does not bar it from voting to-day $3,500,000 in the Army bill.

Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] suppose that the materials to be purchased with the $1,500,000 appropriated the other day will be consumed in one year? Yet the principal objection he has made to the appropriation of $3,500,000 is that it can not be consumed within a year, or until this House meets again and may make another appropriation. The scheme of his committee spreads over a period of six years. According to the showing of the report of the Committee on Appropriations $1,500,000 will procure ninety steel guns of various calibers. Ninety guns for the defense of 4,000 miles of coast! Three million five hundred thousand dollars will purchase, according to the estimate given by the Committee on Appropriations, two hundred and ten guns of various calibers. Two hundred and ten guns for the defense of the entire coast of the United States of America, exclusive of Alaska! It is wholly insufficient. We want at least a thousand of these guns for the defense of our coast.

I wish also to call attention to the fact that the armory at Watervliet is now capable of turning out guns of 10-inch caliber, and, as General Benét states in his letter to the Committee on Appropriations, in one year it may be put in a position to turn out guns of 12-inch caliber. So that we do not need to wait one, two, or three years for the erection of the new works at the Watervliet armory. It can turn out now the 10-inch caliber guns provided for in the bill, and within a year it can begin to turn out the 12-inch gun, and thus within a very short period, two or three years, it will be practicable, in my judgment, to commence the construction or the assemblage of 14 and 16 inch guns. The gentlemen who are so excessively sensitive upon this question of jurisdiction seem at the same time to be exceedingly anxious that some provision shall be made for the defense of our country, but I can see no hope in the direction of the Committee on Appropriations. They brought into this House a bill a few days ago providing for the construction of guns by private corporations. An analysis of that bill will show that it is utterly impracticable.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], if he were in his seat, how many tests would be made under the provisions of the bill which his committee has reported and by which they hope to put the country in a proper state of defense.

It provides that guns of a certain type, equal to the best in the world, shall be purchased if they meet the required tests. All the tests may be made in one year. Two million five hundred thousand dollars is the maximum limit of expenditure, but the ultimate expenditure may reach an amount beyond $13,000,000. According to the bill which that committee reported the Government of the United States may be made liable for the payment of more than $13,000,000 for ordnance within one year, and after the Government has contracted for their purchase they become utterly worthless as compared with guns improved after that period. The bill also proposes that the construction of ordnance shall be submitted to the competition of private corporations for the purpose of encouraging home manufacturers; but, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the bill limits the competition to American manufacturers.

As I understand it, the Government would be required to purchase guns of the manufacturers of the Old World if their ordnance should be found to be superior to those manufactured by American manufacturers.

Mr. SAYERS. To what bill does the gentleman refer?

Mr. MAISH. I refer to the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me correct the gentleman. The provisions of that bill require not only that the material shall be of American manufacture, but that the parties engaged in manufacturing the guns shall be bona fide residents of the United States.

Mr. MAISH. I ask the gentleman to refer to the provisions of the bill. I say, sir, that the bill enables foreign manufacturers to compete with American manufacturers for the sale of ordnance.

Mr. SAYERS. I call the gentleman's attention to page 10 of the bill, where it is provided that all materials purchased under the provisions of this section shall be of domestic production.

Mr. MAISH. I have noticed that provision.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well. Then there was an amendment adopted by the House, with the consent of the Committee on Appropriations, providing that any person engaged in the manufacture of steel for which the fortifications bill provides shall be a resident of the United States.

Mr. MAISH. But, Mr. Speaker, does that answer my objection? I allege that the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations would allow foreign manufacturers of ordnance to compete with American manufacturers, and I ask the gentleman to point out the provision in the bill which prohibits them from doing that.

Mr. SAYERS. I will read to the gentleman from section 4:

That all tools, machines, and materials for said guns shall be manufactured in the United States.

Mr. MAISH. Yes, sir; I admit that the bill contains that provision; but it does not provide that the guns which are to be submitted to test shall be manufactured in America.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not see the gentleman's point.

Mr. MAISH. If the gentleman can persuade this House that by "material" is meant the finished piece of ordnance, I grant he is correct.

But, Mr. Speaker, whilst we are contending over questions of jurisdiction no progress is being made towards putting the country in a state of defense. I have felt the weight of a great responsibility. I have endeavored to discharge my duty. When a grave public necessity confronts us, I care very little how it is met; my chief anxiety is that it should be met. When the subject of the public defense was, by the action of the Senate, committed to the committee of which I am a member, the question that presented itself to me was whether their action was right.

The warning words of Samuel J. Tilden made a deep impression upon the minds of the people of this country. They feel that it would be a criminal neglect of duty for this Congress to procrastinate the subject longer.

The report of the Board of Ordnance, submitted to President Cleveland on May 12, 1885, presents the defenseless condition of our country in language that can not be too solemnly considered:

It is of no advantage to conceal the fact that the ports along our seacoast—a length of about 4,000 miles, not including Alaska—invite naval attack; nor that our richest ports, from their greater depth of water and capacity to admit the largest and most formidable armored ships, are of all the most defenseless.

The property at stake exposed to easy capture and destruction would amount to billions of dollars, and the contributions which could be levied by a hostile fleet upon our seaports should be reckoned at hundreds of millions.

It is impossible to understand the supineness which has kept this nation quiet—allowing its floating and shore defenses to become obsolete and effete—without making an effort to keep progress with the age, while other nations, besides constructing powerful navies, have not considered themselves secure without large expenditures for fortifications, including armored forts.

Our nearest neighbor, though, reasoning from the past, she should have no occasion to dread a naval attack from us, has nevertheless constructed armored forts at Halifax and Bermuda, both as a refuge for her fleets and as outposts for offensive operations.

In the mean time we have acquired great riches and apparently dreamed that prosperity should inspire friendship and not envy in less favored peoples—forgetting that riches are a temptation, and that the plunder of one of our seaports might abundantly reimburse an enemy for the expenses of a war conducted against us.

Had another policy prevailed and been consistently pursued towards the formation of a suitable coast defense, we should at the present moment have nothing more serious to engage our attention than a measured development in the strength of the works of defense and in the power of guns, in order to keep pace with the gradual progress in the means of attack.

Unfortunately the immense labor of novel constructions must be undertaken under circumstances where careful workmanship is required and haste would be impossible. Under the most favorable conditions a long period would be required to place the defense upon a secure basis, and who shall guaranty that this can be effected free from complications with foreign powers? The Gun Foundry Board has estimated that it would require at least three years to establish proper plant for the construction of modern guns. It would in all probability require two years more to get out and prove the first 16-inch gun. That there may be no delay in mounting the guns as fast as completed, the work upon the extensive foundations for the gun emplacements, as well as magazines, shell-rooms, engine-rooms, and other constructions necessary for the service of the guns, should be commenced at the earliest moment.

No stronger justification for the action of the Committee on Military Affairs can be produced, and I think it will be found ere long that we pursued the only course that promised any relief for this acknowledged demand of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAYERS. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that one of the propositions discussed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] is not involved in this debate; that is, as to what committee had jurisdiction of this subject-matter under the rules of the House. My friend has discussed that as though it were still an existing question. That question has been disposed of by the deliberate action of the House. The House has decided that the subject-matter involved in these Senate amendments connected with fortifications belongs to the Committee on Appropriations. That has not only been decided by the presiding officer, but acquiesced in by every gentleman on this floor; yet the Senate of the United States with full knowledge of this fact, for it appeared of public record before this report was prepared, insists that the House shall acquiesce in a policy which lowers the dignity of the House and violates its rules. I hope the House will not allow this to be done. If there were nothing else involved here but that single question, I hold that this House owes it to its own dignity not to consent that its rules shall be violated by the Senate with a full knowledge of the fact.

I have had the honor to represent in part the House on a good many conferences, and I have never yet known the Senate to consent that a proposition placed upon an appropriation bill in violation of its rules should become law. Yet, for a long period our rules were in direct conflict with those of the Senate. We allowed legislation on appropriation bills when in the interest of economy; the Senate did not. Yet, whenever that issue came up between the House and the Senate, the House, inasmuch as it was trenching upon a rule of the Senate, uniformly receded. The Senate never receded in a single instance that I can call to mind.

If the House should now recede from its position in regard to these matters pertaining to fortifications as involved in the amendments of the Senate to this bill, the House will do what up to this time the Senate has never done; it will forget its own dignity. The Senate at least has not forgotten that in the controversies between that august body and this House it has always maintained that its rules should be respected. If, therefore, there were no other question involved here, I should insist that the House owes it to itself to see to it that the Senate shall be informed that the House of Representatives expects to be treated with the consideration and respect which have uniformly been accorded by the House to the Senate.

But, Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with a question which goes away beyond that. We are to determine in connection with this report how far this side of the House will disregard the obligation assumed by gentlemen here when they were elected to seats on this floor, the obligation to see to it that the affairs of this Government should be economically administered. I know that there are two forces at work here which render a reasonable economy almost if not absolutely impossible. There is a state of things which renders frugal and honest government practically impossible. The great surplus in the Treasury is demoralizing Congress. The hard earnings of the people hoarded in the Treasury is the prize that organizes these lobbies and loads down the appropriation bills. With organized forces in your corridors from all sections of the country, forces increasing every hour with plausible schemes to reach your Treasury, the idea of economy and honesty in Government is simply out of the question. Experience demonstrates its impossibility. No greater misfortune could fall upon the country than these hoarded millions.

But to add further to our misfortunes and make a record for the present session of Congress which will be a source of indignation at least to our constituents, there comes in a new factor in addition to the corrupting surplus in the Treasury, a state of the rules of this House which offers facilities for improvident legislation. The spectacle of a controversy between two committees of the House over large expenditures is not encouraging, a controversy as to which committee has proper jurisdiction of an important matter affecting the public interest! Gentlemen must now see what a fatal mistake has been made. The whole country will see that there has been committed a serious mistake somewhere as to measures tending to economical government. Under your present rules I predict that in less than three years more, if this fatal surplus remains and the rules remain unchanged, your committees will be rivaling each other as to which shall make the heaviest drains upon the public Treasury.

The old rule as to a responsible Appropriation Committee, and the rule of the Forty-fourth Congress of frugal appropriations, were safeguards for prudent and frugal legislation. If our promises to the people in the future are to be fulfilled they must be restored. Neither of them has ever been departed from in any material degree without the departure resulting in the extravagant and lavish expenditure of the public money. Let us consider the matter. An Army appropriation bill carrying $29,381,300, and our Army composed of twenty-five thousand men! A Naval appropriation bill of $19,943,225.45. I do not blame gentlemen who represent States where these vast sums of money are to be expended, especially in erecting public establishments. As a rule, all gentlemen here display the same anxiety to have money appropriated for expenditure in their districts. No one questions all this.

It is perhaps proper enough; no gentleman has the right to complain of it. When a gentleman here yields to the instruction on the part of his constituents, and asks for an appropriation for a public building in his district, it is all proper enough to do. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] and other gentlemen who represent districts where the large amounts of public money are to be expended, can with equal propriety ask for these large appropriations, but can the other Representatives on this floor, can the Representatives on this side of the House, who fill seats on this floor by virtue of the plighted faith of the Democratic party that the Government shall be economically administered, can they afford to permit it to be done?

Think of it, gentlemen, $19,943,225 for the naval service; $29,381,300 for the Army! And yet the conference report actually reduces the Navy from the amount named in the bill when it passed the House.

Mr. TRACEY. I object to the gentleman from Indiana making such insinuations as to my motives. It is not parliamentary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not said a word about the gentleman's motives.

Mr. TRACEY. I would vote for the appropriation because I believe it to be right, just the same as if it were for an appropriation not to be expended in my district.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is nothing in the remarks made by me which the gentleman can make objection to. I referred to the practice indulged in by gentlemen in yielding to the demands made by their constituents in asking for appropriations for public buildings.

Highly as I esteem my friend, I doubt whether he would feel the same interest in this bill if the appropriation were for Rock Island instead of Watervliet arsenal. Nor, sir, would I expect him to feel the same interest in one case as in the other.

Over nineteen millions for the Navy for this year, more than twenty-nine millions for the Army, nearly fifty millions altogether—nearly equal to the entire expenditures of the Government only thirty years ago!

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Why did not the gentleman from Indiana make opposition to the large increase in the Navy—ten millions last year and five millions this year? Why did not the gentleman make opposition then?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have always maintained the same opposition against extravagant appropriations. I opposed as well as I could the bills referred to. I have found opposition to such appropriations under the present rules useless, and wholly without effect.

You can have no economy under the present rules, and must yield to the constant demands of the Senate to enlarge the appropriations. I now give notice that I shall introduce next Monday a resolution, for reference to the Committee on Rules, for the restoration of the old order of things, under which severe economy was accomplished, and honest and upright government was preserved.

I can speak more freely now on this subject as I am not a member of the Committee on Appropriations. What I predicted at the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress, when the rules were changed in this regard—what I predicted would happen has already been more than fulfilled. With the corrupting surplus and under the change of the rules economical government can not be maintained.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Indiana does not want to do injustice?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Committee on Appropriations most undoubtedly has been fully as extravagant as any other committee. When it brought in an Army bill appropriating $24,000,000, why did he not criticise that committee?

Mr. HOLMAN. The demoralization under the new rules affects that committee as well as the other committees. It has, it is true, a larger number of bills, and the demoralization will and does affect that committee as it does any other committee of the House. It is absolutely impossible to avoid it.

Where the committee has but one appropriation bill, or only partial appropriations, it becomes impossible to preserve economy. It becomes unconsciously the mouthpiece of every bureau of the Department and every interested party in and out of the Departments. The pressure is irresistible with an overflowing Treasury. However anxious my friend may be, and I am certain he is, to reduce the appropriations to the actual needs of the public service, he will find it impossible to do so. He can not keep the appropriations down to the proper figure. Take the single item of transportation in the Army bill, which involves millions of dollars. It was expected there would be a reduction in that item.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I served on the Committee on Appropriations for four years, and aided my friend from Indiana in the preparation of the Army appropriation bill, and I do not see why he should especially select the Committee on Military Affairs, when the Committee on Appropriations, as we both know, reported these large increases.

Mr. HOLMAN. Here you report over $29,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Those are the Senate amendments. And in the bills reported from the Committee on Appropriations for the support of the Army the amounts carried by the bill varied from $23,000,000 to $24,000,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; the appropriations ran all the way from twenty-three to twenty-four million dollars.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And twenty-four millions is just what we report in this bill. The Senate have made the increase.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; but the report involves over $29,000,000. I did not myself have charge of this particular bill at any time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think, if the gentleman will recollect, in the Forty-eighth Congress he, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY], and myself had charge of the bill as a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. That may be, but I never had special charge of the bill—I mean in the sense of having the control of it on the floor of the House.

But, sir, the idea of these enlarged expenditures is impressed upon the minds of gentlemen in the name of the most sacred impulse that can animate an American citizen, the impulse of patriotism. Gentlemen who represent the great constituencies of this country ought not to underestimate the greatness of their country, and yet that is just what we are doing when we insist that the expenditure of vast sums of money is now necessary for the defense of our coast.

The foremost of the nations, with the greatest resources possessed by any nation; with millions of men ready to defend the honor of the nation at any moment; a nation great by the arts of peaceful industry, with no schemes of conquest or plans of injustice, isolated from the traditional feuds and hatreds which monarchy has inspired and kept alive for centuries, ought not to oppress its people by vast warlike expenditures. It is not the fear of foreign invasion that prompts these warlike preparations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, so far as the question of the conflict of jurisdiction in regard to appropriations between the House and the Senate is concerned, arising from the supposititious violation of the rules of the House by the Senate, I have nothing whatever to say, because I am frank to own that individually I do not feel that my part of the dignity of this House has suffered anything, and consequently those gentlemen whose dignities suffer may rise and resist the injury while I will take my time for something else.

I notice that whenever you scratch the Committee on Appropriations the antique character from Indiana rises to defend it, to assert the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and to deny the existence of a nation and the functions that go with it. We are asking of the Congress of the United States an appropriation which shall manifest the existence of the military power of the Government, to-day evidenced alone by an occasional flag strung up between the heavens and the earth at some post or barrack, and 30,000 miles of our coast undefended.

The Committee on Appropriations shows a very commendable or noncommendable disposition to absorb everything and swallow up all the powers which the Congress of the United States in its grace has seen proper to confer upon the various committees of the House; and it has kept on absorbing with the same unsatisfied greed until it has succeeded in swallowing up the surplus, much to the disgust of the gentleman from Indiana and others on his side, I take it. [Laughter.] And this effort of the Committee on Appropriations is evidenced by the speech of the gentleman from Indiana and the members of the Committee on Appropriations who preceded him, and the whole proceeding will be evidence to those gentlemen who keep their eyes open that the purpose of the committee and its friends is to swallow up the apparently frank and open effort now made to secure legislation on this subject.

The clamor and cry about a conflict of jurisdiction in the House, and the invasions of the House by the Senate, and the placing of amendments upon the Army appropriation bill by that body, I say here, Mr. Chairman, are nothing but a trick and a contrivance by which it is attempted to array the prejudice of the House against the merits of this legislation and thereby destroy the only chance the country has of any possible legislation, if you want it. If you want legislation upon the subject, here it is now, and take it. The Committee on Appropriations arises by itself and its next friend in its behalf and asks the House not to take it. The gentleman from Indiana is peculiarly, unhappily, chronically the defender of economy; and yet he comes here and champions a bill committing the country to an expenditure of $19,000,000 as against an act of Congress now pending and in conference which carries but about $5,000,000 for the same object.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken; the House passed no such bill that I championed.

Mr. LAIRD. It has passed a bill which commits you to the policy of appropriating $19,000,000——

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh! no; nothing like it; only some three and a half millions.

Mr. LAIRD. I repeat, $19,000,000, as the bill shows, is the amount it carries; and against it we offer you a bill carrying but five millions. Now, you talk of economy. You say you want economy in the public expenditures, and yet your purpose, I submit, is perfectly apparent to defeat the legislation itself.

Mr. SAYERS. Here is the bill which the gentleman says carries nineteen millions. It carries less than four millions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. LAIRD. Well, I would like to have an hour more of time.

Mr. SAYERS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, the House is the proper authority to decide the question of jurisdiction as between its various committees; and at the proper time it will undoubtedly exercise that jurisdiction and determine the disputed question. If the Senate has by its amendments invaded any of the rights of this House, I am for resisting such invasions. But underlying all of this question is that of the propriety of making these appropriations as proposed by the bill now under consideration and what is known as the fortifications bill.

Living upon the coast of the United States, and living, too, upon a section of that coast which is entirely unprotected, either by forts or by fleets, I am free to say that I believe all this kind of expenditure is entirely unnecessary at the present time. Why? Because all that we need in this country in the way of a navy (and that is to be considered in such bills as this under consideration and the bill which has been sent to the Senate)—all that we need in the shape of a navy are some powerful monitors to guard the principal harbors of the country; because it is well known that of all vessels now afloat the monitor is the most impervious to shot.

The defense of the coast by fortifications is utterly impracticable at the present time, because a fort only protects that portion of the coast immediately within range of its guns, from 6 to 7, or, if you please, 10 miles; and what then becomes of the balance of the coast uncovered and unprotected by forts?

Mr. Speaker, the torpedo system of this country is in such a condition that any harbor upon our coast could be in a few days put in shape so that no man even in a White Hall row-boat could safely enter it, much less a man-of-war. These heavily armored vessels, belonging to the various foreign powers of which we hear so much, the only ones from which we have anything to fear, are naturally slow sailers, and it would not be possible for one of them under any ordinary circumstances to cross the Atlantic within less than ten or twelve days on an average passage. During that time information as to what was being done could be disseminated all over our country, all along the coast, and the purpose the vessel had in view in sailing to our shores be known. In that time we could, as a rule, be pretty well prepared to meet it.

What we need is a few heavy guns in addition to the monitors; they, too, can be moved quickly, and in that way we can amply protect our entire coast. Much criticism has been indulged in about the condition of the Navy and our defenseless coast line; but all the navy we need for foreign service is a few first-class and as swift cruisers as can be built, while all we need to guard our coasts, I repeat, is the torpedo and the monitor systems, and the monitors do not cost anything like as much as the cruisers.

Now, whenever you come to consider the question of the expenditure of vast sums of the public money, I am always ready to vote liberally when any general benefit is to be derived from such expenditures; but, Mr. Speaker, I am unable to see the necessity for the passage of bills providing for any such expenditure at the present time. Years ago, when different conditions prevailed, it might have been necessary; but that condition does not now exist. It is no longer necessary, for the reason that the only power with which we as a people are ever likely in the future to have any trouble with, which trouble might lead to war, is the Government of Great Britain. I think, all gentlemen will admit, that so far as any member of this House can speak with anything like an approach to a spirit of prophesy upon this subject, this is a fair if not an undeniable proposition. If, however, there shall be trouble arising in the future, or if difficulties occur between the Government of the United States and that of England, they will never attempt to invade this country through our seaboard, but they will come, if at all, from the Dominion of Canada.

And besides that, Mr. Speaker, while the gentlemen talk about English fleets appearing on the coast of the United States and destroying, or laying under tribute our great cities, the fact is that in our day war is conducted on a different and more human principle, and is not like the old religious or civil wars that carried with them in the past the murder of women and children and the destruction of cities; but the nations of the earth have themselves provided laws, so to speak, which regulate the carrying on of civilized warfare. In addition to that, the statesmen who are in charge of the affairs of the English Government at the present time are men of great character and ability, and they would allow no step to be taken by the commanders of their armies, or of their fleets which would lead to such retribution as would be visited upon them, for the destruction of cities or by laying them under tribute in the manner that has been suggested here.

It might be true that at this time we are unprepared for war with any great power, but is any war imminent? We had unfortunately and unnecessarily among ourselves the greatest civil war of modern times. I hope and think it is the last war with which this country shall be cursed.

What and what power are we to fear? We have had serious trouble and war only with England and Mexico in the past.

In comparison with the power and resources of our country those of Mexico were so insignificant as to make our series of victories at this day look somewhat insignificant.

If we ever have serious war with any power, it will be with England, whose traditions, form of government, and policy have always been and now are opposed to our system of government in toto.

It might be true that the English navy could do some damage on the coast; I do not know how war can be carried on anywhere without some damage to person and property. But can it be supposed for an instant that war between the United States and any foreign power would be carried on with no regard to the usages of civilized warfare? Most certainly not.

Like almost all governments, and I know of but one exception, and that was in the action of our own, England has dealt with all weaker powers in a spirit of domination and dictation unworthy of such a power. In the last two hundred years she has never, unaided, overcome upon the battle-field any power which matched her in numbers, or in resources, or in implements of war.

The war in the Crimea was her last great war, and if history be true, the French army, to say the least, gave her great assistance Since then she has contented herself with and reaped the glories of her arms afloat and ashore from battles in which she met semi-civilized and savage peoples, with the exception of the Boors in South Africa.

Except the demands made upon this Government when engaged in a war for its preservation, she has in the time mentioned committed no act of real hostility against any even respectable power.

Let her have the glory and prestige of bombarding with the most powerful fleet afloat the city of Alexandria, defended by antique cannon manned by half-starved Egyptian fellahs. Why, sir, that bombardment was a blot upon civilization! If those half-starved, rice-fed people had had modern guns of smaller caliber, comparatively speaking, they had not strength to lift the shots even by machinery to load them, and the shock and recoil of a 6-inch rifle would knock down a whole gun's crew of them.

Much has been said from time to time upon this floor about what England could do in the defenseless state of our country, which is one reason I speak thus of that power on the seas and upon the land.

Her great victories upon land certainly in the last century, where she had not the assistance and presence of the troops of other nations, have been confined to the slaughter of savages and semi-civilized people, armed either with guns that would not hurt a rabbit if he could be hit with one at sixty paces, or sharp sticks, when her own troops were provided with all the conveniences and armed with the most approved weapons of modern warfare.

All such appropriations as this bill carries are unnecessary at this time. We certainly are not going to declare war ourselves until we are ready, and how is any power to fight us unless they come over here to do so? We have no outlying provinces to protect, and the power so often mentioned here on this floor has them all over the world, in every continent, in every zone.

The first result of a war with England would be the loss of Canada to her if we wanted it, and a declaration of war would bring into the field an army of veterans here which upon this land would be invincible by any force which could be landed by England or all the European powers combined. The shock of the first gun fired would sever forever the chains which bind Ireland to England.

This much is not said in any spirit of bravado; with England we are friendly, it is to be hoped we shall remain so. We are of the same race, descended from a common stock, reared in one of the greatest countries upon earth.

The statesmen in charge of the conduct of the affairs over there are not barbarians, neither do they lack the ability to keep up the dignity and standing of that vast empire among the nations of the earth. War will never be declared without grave cause, and when in progress, if ever, will be carried on according to the usages of civilized nations.

We would have to wait for their fleet to come here, or invade Canada and make that the battle-ground. In that we have a great advantage.

We have a fine torpedo system, which makes, when used, our harbors inaccessible. Failing that, we have some monitors, the most impervious to shot of any class of war vessels, and can have more when necessary. They can be moved to any point threatened. We have a few and need more fine fast cruisers to carry our flag abroad and upon which to train and discipline our officers and sailors.

Such ships are now in process of construction or provided for, or will be provided for, and they should be as fine and fast as any in the world; they probably will be.

All this fear or probability of destruction and laying of tribute amounts to nothing. The question of the people of this country, any portion of them, paying tribute was settled long ago, and when the time comes the "millions for defense" will be forthcoming, but "never a cent for tribute."

Boasting never amounts to or accomplishes anything, neither am I ever given to it in the name of my country or for myself; but can any intelligent man doubt that the outcome of war between the United States and England or any other power would end in defeat and disaster for the latter? The end would come, and if any property of any kind was wantonly destroyed; if upon the levy of tribute the demand for it being refused, as it should be, and would be, was followed by the ruthless sacrifice of the lives of women, children, and non-combatants by England or any other power, retaliation upon the part of this Government would be entirely justifiable and fearful to contemplate.

After a time we would get prepared for war by land and sea, and the rulers of all powers know it. They know, too, with our wealth, population, mechanical and inventive genius, and illimitable resources, that the time would be short which we would require for preparation. Whenever any emergency has arisen the people of the United States have proven themselves equal to it.

Whenever England or any other power or powers shall so act towards this country as fears are sometimes expressed here they may, will, or can act, ancient history will be repeated in these enlightened days.

Rome destroyed Carthage. Let England or any other power or powers violate the rules of war, let there be any wanton destruction of life or property, let there be any tribute laid upon the cities or people of this land, in case of war, and the nation committing such deed or deeds will have its power broken and pay tribute for generations.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, it has been charged upon this floor time and again, and it has been especially charged by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], who addressed the committee a few moments ago, that the fortifications bill, which passed the House, carried with it $19,000,000. I desire simply to call the attention of the House to the exact items which passed this House and which make up the aggregate of that bill, showing that the gentleman is very far in error in the statement that he has made. The items making up the total of the bill are as follows:

For protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense	$100,000
For sea-walls and earth embankments	117,000
For torpedoes for harbor defense, the purchase of submarine mines, etc	200,000
For the manufacture or purchase and test of cannon and carriages, etc.	400,000
To complete guns now under fabrication	158,000
For gun foundry at Watervliet	750,000
For purchase of steel	1,500,000
For purchase of mortars	500,000
Being a total of	3,725,000

That is the amount of the bill which passed this House and is now pending in the Senate. I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RYAN. I wanted to call my friend's attention to a fact which I presume he has already brought to the attention of the House, but which I did not hear as I was not here during the time he made his remarks. That is in relation to this provision of the Senate amendments for the expenditure of five millions of money for the purchase of steel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. SAYERS. Whatever the gentleman from Kansas needs.

Mr. RYAN. The point I desired to speak of was that this five millions of money is to be expended in the purchase of steel forgings for 8, 10, and 12 inch guns. It is admitted that it will take at least ten years for the Ordnance Department to manufacture and assemble these guns.

Mr. MAISH. The gentleman is mistaken; it is $3,500,000.

Mr. RYAN. That is correct, and I thank the gentleman for the correction. This $3,500,000 instead of five millions is to be expended for the purchase of steel forgings for 8, 10, and 12 inch guns, to be assembled by the Ordnance Department, which will take at least eight years. Then what have we got? We will not then have a single, solitary gun from this enormous expenditure of money to cope with the high power guns of all the European nations. You have not a 14-inch gun; you have not a 16-inch gun; you have nothing under heaven with all this expenditure of money, after eight years of labor by your Ordnance Department, to cope with the higher-power guns of the world. Now, if it is wise at all to expend such a large sum of money for the purchase of steel, it ought to contemplate the manufacture by our own Ordnance Department, which has been so much lauded by the Military Committee, of guns of equal power at least with those that now exist and that can be brought to bear against us at any time. Why should we go to work here and give your Ordnance Department steel forgings that will employ them for a period of eight years and not receive from them a single, solitary gun that can cope with modern guns.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that would be unbusiness like and would be the very height of folly. Besides, sir, if we are to go any further than to provide steel forgings to give employment to our Ordnance Department for the assembling of 8, 10, and 12 inch guns, we should not purchase steel four or five years in advance of the time it can be used. The processes of steel manufacture have been gradually advancing so as to bring prices down year by year, and that condition of things is liable to go on in the future.

These are some of the business reasons that suggest themselves to me as sufficient of themselves to move this House and every man in it to disagree with the report, and ask at least of this committee that if they are to purchase three and a half millions' worth of steel forgings that they shall make provision for some guns of equal power with those now manufactured by the other nations of the world.

Mr. SAYERS. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. I care to say nothing upon the subject of the amount in the several bills in relation to fortifications. I do not care to repeat what I have said on a former occasion in relation to the issue between the two Houses. I regret very much that my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has seen fit to raise the question as to the appropriate division of appropriation bills at this time. I think the real issue is of too much importance to have the mind of the House diverted for a single instant by a controversy as to whether or not the division of the appropriation bills made under the rules of the House has resulted in disadvantage to the public service or no. If there is any advantage in bringing that proposition before the House, I fail to see it. If there is any purpose of inducing a conclusion by raising a prejudice against the several other committees, other than the Committee on Appropriations, who have charge of appropriation bills, I am unable to comprehend its wisdom; and I think my friend in his eagerness on that matter has injected it here, where, if it has any effect at all, it is to prejudice the real issue.

For one, I do not believe that the appropriations for fortifications ought to have been placed upon the Army bill by the Senate; but I am not willing that to facilitate the rejection of that amendment the country shall understand that the separation of these bills has brought about an action on the part of the several committees having appropriation bills to make them as large as possible. I happen, sir, to represent one of those committees, and I challenge the truthfulness of the statement of the gentleman from Indiana as to that. I know, sir, that so far as the work of that committee is concerned, having served on the Committee on Appropriations and having had charge of the postal appropriation as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and having likewise had charge of the same appropriations as a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, that the separation has resulted in a far better consideration of the bills and without the slightest disposition to magnify the appropriations. I believe that is true in reference to the bills of the other committees of the House.

I stand here, sir, supporting the claims of the Committee on Appropriations at this time, because I think that it is our duty in the interest of an orderly procedure of business that they shall have the matters allotted to them; that they are responsible for the consideration of other measures which give them peculiar advantages in reaching right conclusions. And I likewise claim, sir, the same thing obtains as to the bills of the other committees; that they have had much better consideration, and that they have produced more careful legislation. I protest against any effort in a matter disconnected with the question here that the gentleman from Indiana shall revive an old struggle in which he failed at the beginning of this session, and which, I believe, in the light of the experience we have had in the matter of separation of these bills, will bring him to failure again. I do not think the gentleman from Indiana does himself justice when he arraigns the several committees of this House having charge of these appropriations here, charging them with an effort to make the largest appropriations possible.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend does not quote me exactly. What I said was that inside of three years there would be an actual rivalry between the committees as to which should appropriate the most money.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish the gentleman would cite instances. It is very easy to make a statement that there is a rivalry amongst the committees as to which shall report the largest appropriations, but it is not just to the country or to the committees or to the gentleman himself to make such a charge without giving the House some facts to justify it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is my prediction.

Mr. BLOUNT. Ah, the gentleman says it is a prediction. I have nothing to do with his prophecies.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was a prediction that I was making.

Mr. BLOUNT. The House did not so understand you.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. DOUGHERTY and Mr. MAISH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to extend in the RECORD their remarks on the report of the committee of conference on the Army appropriation bill.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, how much time is left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All the time allowed in opposition to the report has been exhausted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, if the House will give me its ear for a few moments I will direct attention to the real issue presented here. There is no question of jurisdiction now pending or involved in the vote that will soon be cast. There is no question of order that can be raised, as has been ruled, not by the present occupant of the chair, but by the Speaker of the House. All this talk of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] about the "insult" which the Senate has cast upon the House, and about the infringement by the Senate of the right of the House to be governed by its own rules, is mere child's play and absurd. I will not impute to these gentlemen that it is their purpose to indirectly divert by such assertions the attention of the House from the real issue, but that is the effect of the line of discussion which they have pursued. There is not a member of this House who is not intelligent enough to understand that the Senate is an independent body, and that it has the right to amend in its own way any bill which this House may send to it. The Senate has no right to dictate to this House as to how it shall frame its rules in regulating its order of business, nor has this House any right to dictate to the Senate how it shall frame its rules or methods of procedure.

Now, what are the facts? The Senate has seen proper to place upon the Army appropriation bill amendments establishing a gun factory and authorizing the purchase of, from American manufacturing establishments, steel forgings out of which guns shall be made at its gun factory. That is the sum and substance of the amendments which the House conferees have agreed to in conference. I do not propose to argue the question of order. I have heretofore asserted, and will maintain when it is in order to do so, that under the rules of this House, it this was a new proposition, it would be in order to place these amendments on this bill, and that they come rightfully within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. In other words, that committee has the right to make appropriations to establish a gun factory and provide for the purchase of steel forgings to make steel guns or any other kind of guns for the Government. That is really all that is involved in these amendments. The only amendment which the Senate placed upon this bill which in my judgment encroached upon the right of the Committee on Appropriations of the House we non-concurred in. That was an appropriation for Fort Barrancas, in Florida. The House conferees, recognizing the right of the Committee on Appropriations to control that item, insisted on rejecting that amendment, and the Senate conferees agreed that, as it involved a question of making appropriations for fortifications, it might go out of the bill and be left for the fortification bill. The striking out of that amendment left the bill, in my judgment, stripped of every amendment which would in any degree infringe the rules of this House. But, as I have already stated, the question of jurisdiction is not involved here. The Senate, exercising their rightful authority under the Constitution, has amended the Army bill in accordance with its own judgment, and the sole question now is as to the merits of the proposition, and that is what I propose to discuss. Before I do so, however, I must say a word with reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. In my judgment there are some, but very few in number, who will vote against these amendments because they think they ought to go upon some other bill. I do not attribute such a motive to the gentleman from Indiana or to any considerable number of members of this House. The opposition which appears under that pretext comes from gentlemen who are opposed to any appropriation for making guns for the defense of the coast.

That is the real ground of their opposition, in my judgment, and that, I think, is the real objection of the gentleman from Indiana. Now, with these gentlemen we have a square issue, and I am ready to meet them in argument. I am one of those who believe that we ought to make some effort to prepare for the defense of the country in case danger should arise from complications with foreign countries, which may sooner than many gentlemen apprehend.

Why, sir, what are the facts of this matter? It is stated by the War Department that there is not one single modern steel gun owned by the Government of the United States which is capable of coping with the modern guns possessed by European governments, by China, Japan, and by one or two of the South American republics. It is stated that there is not to-day a first-class nation on the earth which could not, with a mere fraction of its navy, pass by any guns or fortifications that we possess, and bombard and lay under tribute any city upon either our Atlantic or our Pacific coast; and that if we were involved in war with any of these powers to-day, and had enlisted ten millions of men with muskets in their hands, they would be unable to defend any city on the seaboard. It has therefore been thought wise by the War Department that some steps should be taken looking to the protection of the coast by building heavy steel guns which will be capable of coping with the heavy guns which form the armament of the navies of the governments I have mentioned. It may be that we may not for many years need such guns; I trust we may not, but the far-seeing discover signs of danger which ought not to go unheeded. It is in times of peace that we should prepare for war. The guns that these amendments provide will be needed if war occurs, no matter if a hundred years or more may intervene.

Years ago one of the wisest statesmen this country has produced foresaw the need for this legislation. I refer to that distinguished gentleman whom we elected President of the United States in 1876—Samuel J. Tilden. [Derisive cries on the Republican side.] And he addressed to the Speaker of this House a letter containing as forcible an argument as could be framed, to the effect that the surplus in the Treasury of the United States could be put to no better purpose that that of fortifying our seacoast. I ask that this letter of his be incorporated in my remarks:

LETTER OF MR. TILDEN TO HON. JOHN G. CARLISLE ON OUR SEACOAST DEFENSES.

GRAYSTONE, YONKERS, N. Y., December 1, 1885.

DEAR MR. CARLISLE: As public opinion points to you as the Speaker of the next House of Representatives, I desire to submit a suggestion as to one of the public objects for which an appropriation ought to be prompt and liberal.

In considering the state and management of the public revenues the subject involves the questions whether we shall extinguish the surplus by reducing the revenue, or whether we shall apply the surplus to payments on the public debt, or whether we shall seize the occasion to provide for our seacoast defenses, which have been too long neglected. I am of the opinion that the latter is a paramount necessity which ought to precede the reduction of the revenue, and ought also to precede an excessive rapidity in the payment of the public debt.

The property exposed to destruction in the twelve seaports—Portland, Portsmouth, Boston, Newport, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, New Orleans, Galveston, and San Francisco—can not be less in value than five thousand millions of dollars. To this must be added a vast amount of property dependent for its use on these seaports. Nor does this statement afford a true measure of the damage which might be caused to the property and business of the country by a failure to protect these seaports from hostile naval attacks.

They are the centers not only of foreign commerce but of most of the internal trade and exchanges of domestic productions. To this state of things the machinery of transportation of the whole country has become adapted.

The interruption of the currents of traffic by the occupation of one or more of our principal seaports by a foreign enemy, or the destruction of them by bombardment, or the holding over them the menace of destruction for the purpose of exacting contribution or ransom would inflict upon the property and business of the country an injury which can neither be foreseen nor measured.

The elaborate and costly fortifications which were constructed with the greatest engineering skill are now practically useless. They are not capable of resisting the attacks of modern artillery.

A still greater defect exists in our coast defenses. The range of the best modern artillery has become so extended that our present fortifications designed to protect the harbor of New York, where two-thirds of the import trade and more than one-half of the export trade of the whole United States is carried on, are too near to the great populations of New York City, Jersey City, and Brooklyn to be of any value as a protection.

To provide effectual defenses would be the work of years. It would take much time to construct permanent fortifications. A small provision of the best modern guns would take several years. Neither of these works can be extemporized in presence of emergent danger. A million of soldiers, with the best equipments, on the heights surrounding the harbor of New York, in our present state of preparation, or rather in our total want of preparation, would be powerless to resist a small squadron of war steamers.

This state of things is discreditable to our foresight and to our prudence.

The best guaranty against aggression, the best assurance that our diplomacy will be successful and pacific, and that our rights and honor will be respected by other nations is in their knowledge that we are in a situation to vindicate our reputation and interests. While we may afford to be deficient in the means of offense, we can not afford to be defenseless. The notoriety of the fact that we have neglected the ordinary precautions of defense invites want of consideration in our diplomacy, injustice, arrogance, and insult at the hands of foreign nations.

It is now more than sixty years since we announced to the world that we should resist any attempts, from whatever quarter they might come, to make any new colonizations on any part of the American continent; that while we should respect the status quo we should protect the people of the different nations inhabiting this continent from every attempt to subject them to the dominion of any European power, or to interfere with their undisturbed exercise of the rights of self-government.

This announcement was formally made by Presinent Monroe, after consultation with Mr. Madison and Mr. Jefferson. It was formulated by John Quincy Adams. Our Government has firmly adhered to the Monroe doctrine, and even so late as 1865 it warned Napoleon III out of Mexico. It is impossible to foresee in the recent scramble of the European powers for acquisition of colonies, how soon an occasion may arise for our putting in practice the Monroe doctrine. It is clear that there ought to be some relation between our assertion of that doctrine and our preparation to maintain it.

It is not intended to recommended any attempt to rival the great European powers in the creation of a powerful navy. The changes which have rapidly occurred by the diminution of the relative resisting power of the defensive armor of ironclads, and by the increased efficiency of modern artillery—which on the whole has gained in the competition—suggest that we should not at the present enter largely into the creation of armored vessels.

In the questions that beset this subject until they shall have reached a solution, we can content ourselves with adding but sparingly to our Navy. But what we do add should be the very best that experience and science can indicate. This prudential view is reinforced by the consideration that the annual charge of maintaining a war vessel bears an important proportion to the original cost of construction.

In constructing permanent fortifications and in providing an ample supply of the best modern artillery the annual cost of maintenance is inconsiderable. Nearly the whole expenditure is in the original outlay for construction.

If we do not make the expenditure necessary to provide for our seacoast defenses when we have a surplus and have no need to levy new taxes, we certainly will not make those expenditures when we have no longer a surplus in the Treasury.

To leave our vast interests defenseless in order to reduce the cost of whisky to its consumers would be a solecism.

The present time is peculiarly favorable for providing for this great national necessity, too long neglected. Not only does the surplus in the Treasury supply ample means to enable us to meet this great public want, without laying new burdens upon the people, but the work can now be done at a much lower cost than has ever before been possible. The defensive works would consist almost entirely of steel and iron. These materials can now be had at an unprecedentedly low price. A vast supply of machinery and of labor called into existence by a great vicissitude in the steel and iron industries offers itself to our service. We should have the satisfaction of knowing that while we were availing ourselves of the supplies which would ordinarily be unattainable, we were setting in motion important industries and giving employment to labor in a period of depression. With encouragement by the guaranty of work, or perhaps by the Government itself furnishing the plant, the inventive genius of our people would be applied to the creation of new means and improved machinery, and establishments would spring into existence capable of supplying all the national wants, and rendering us completely independent of all other countries in respect to the means of national defense.

I endeavored to impress these ideas upon Mr. RANDALL the last time I had the pleasure of seeing him.

With my highest regards to Mrs. Carlisle and yourself, I remain,

Very truly yours,

S. J. TILDEN.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE.

This letter was written at the beginning of the present Administration. But, sir, it seems that not only the advice of Tilden, but the urgent recommendations of this Administration have been unheeded by the so-called economists of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I sometimes doubt the soundness of the economy of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The other day we had presented to us from the Committee on Appropriations a bill which involved appropriations of over $19,000,000. I resisted the consideration of that bill, and called on my friend from Indiana to aid me. To my amazement, sir, instead of aiding me to prevent the consideration of so extravagant and unwise bill, he joined hands with those who were urging its consideration in this House; and with his assistance the friends of that bill succeeded in voting me down. The bill then proposed to be brought up, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] stated in his report, involved appropriations of over $19,000,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am going to do the gentleman justice.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to correct you right here.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not yield my time. Let me get through with my statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois refuses to yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill to which the gentleman refers carried only about three and a half million dollars.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, it is true, upon a point of order made by myself, that bill was stripped of nearly $16,000,000 of appropriation that it carried; and it was finally sent to the Senate with a little less than $4,000,000 of appropriation. But at the time we voted to consider it, there were over nineteen millions in it. Now, if the gentleman from Indiana had been a true economist he would, in my judgment, have held up my hands in my effort at that time to prevent the consideration of that bill, which endangered the Treasury to the extent of more than $19,000,000. And it was an unwise measure in other respects.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I took that course because of the amendments on the present bill which called for appropriations of only about $6,000,000, and which in conference we have since been able to reduce to less than five millions.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman let me ask a question? He speaks of a bill carrying $19,000,000. Did not that bill as passed appropriate $3,725,000?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have already stated that upon points of order made by myself the bill was stripped of about $16,000,000 of appropriation, and as finally passed appropriated only $3,725,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. And I helped to make the points of order.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TOWNSHEND (to Mr. SAYERS). Do not take up my time.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to correct the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, be very brief.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from Illinois knows very well that by raising the point of order on the occasion referred to he struck from the bill the very last hope that the private industries of this country had of competing with the Government establishments in the manufacture of guns.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. SAYERS. Just one sentence more. Further, the gentleman knew that it would require thirteen years to expend that money if it were expended at all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have permitted the gentleman to make his explanation. He confesses what I have stated—that his bill did carry appropriations of $19,000,000 or more. He says that it would take years to expend that sum of money; but nevertheless the bill proposed to make a drain upon the Treasury to the extent of more than $19,000,000. And the gentleman from Texas had as a coadjutor on this floor the gentleman from Indiana, who, if he had been the faithful "watch-dog of the Treasury" that I have known him to be in the past, would have joined with me in seeking to prevent the consideration of so extravagant and unwise a measure.

Now, what danger has the passage of that bill put the Treasury in? The bill has gone through the House; it is in the Senate. When it is reached there is danger that the Senate may substitute for it one or the other of two very extravagant bills now pending in that body. One of these has been introduced by a very influential Senator from Maryland, a Democratic Senator, and involves an appropriation of $38,000,000. The other of those bills, having in view the same purposes as the fortification bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, has been introduced by a Republican Senator from Oregon, and makes an appropriation of $125,000,000. Now, when you strike down the Senate amendments to this bill you open up the opportunity to the Senate to wade into the Treasury, if it should suit their pleasure and we permit it, to the amount of perhaps $125,000,000. What do we do in this report? We put it beyond the power of the Senate, if this report be adopted, to make an appropriation of more than $4,742,000 for that purpose. If you accept the Senate amendments to this bill, you guard against a vast drain upon the Treasury; you prevent a larger appropriation for this purpose than the $4,742,000 contained in this bill.

Those of you who are in favor of $19,000,000, or $38,000,000, or $125,000,000, as provided in the bills to which I have referred, ought to join with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and vote down these Senate amendments. But if you wish to confine appropriations within the limited sum of $4,742,000, as fixed in this bill, you will accept the amendments of the Senate now and put at rest this matter, so as to avoid during this session larger appropriations for this purpose.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My time is very limited.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will detain the gentleman but a moment. As the fortification bill has gone to the Senate, what is standing between the House and legislation of the Senate in making an appropriation of $38,000,000? Is there anything of dignity, or the rules, or regulations, or courtesy in the way?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir; there will be no question of dignity or other question in the way, as the gentleman from New York has said, in passing the fortification bill as it left the House with the sum of $38,000,000, except it may be prevented by passing this bill. If you wish to find the line of economy you will do it on the bill providing for the establishment of a gun factory for the purchase of necessary steel forgings to make heavy guns, etc., as limited by this bill to the cost of $4,742,000.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] sat here and kept his temper when they increased the appropriations for the Navy last year over $10,000,000, and when this year the appropriations for the Navy were increased over what it formerly was of $5,000,000. When these large increased appropriations are made to build ships of war, if such increases of appropriation are deemed to be necessary and proper, why is it wrong to do something of the kind for the Army? We need an efficient Army as well as a Navy. If it is right as you say to-day to make an appropriation to build a gun factory at the navy-yard in this city for the Navy, to increase the appropriation for the Navy $10,000,000, why is it not proper and necessary to allow the Army to have the necessary guns to resist invasion in time of danger?

Now, this appropriation of $4,742,000 is not intended to be expended this year. The gentleman from Kansas who last spoke said it would take eight years to expend the money. Therefore it is but a small sum of money which the bill carries for this year or annually. It will take three years to build and equip the gun factory, and eight years to make the guns.

Mr. RYAN. It would be eight years before you could have a gun.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But a very small portion of this money is appropriated to be expended during the present year.

Mr. RYAN. You do not answer my question. Will it not be eight years before you will have a gun under this appropriation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not time to go into that. How much time, Mr. Speaker, have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] has time and again repeated the question which the gentleman from Kansas asked the other day, that a million of dollars of proposal by the Government some years ago to purchase steel to make guns for the Navy brought forward three competitors for the contract, and asks, why would we not get competition now for a million and a half dollars' worth of steel? But the fact has been thrown into the face of gentlemen that the offers of the Government were for $4,000,000 of steel, and that statement has been verified by the gentleman from Alabama. He said that while only one million and a half were then offered for guns, the fact was made known there would be three and a half millions more required for plate armor for the ships.

Mr. RYAN. Two of the bidders for guns did not bid for armor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. When the Secretary of the Navy offered to buy one million of steel forgings for guns, the South Bethlehem Iron Works said to the Navy Department, "We will not bid for your million of steel forgings unless you at the same time give us the right to also bid for the steel to make the heavy steel plates for armor for vessels."

Mr. RYAN. There were two other bidders.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The other two bidders said, "We will take the chance of making steel forgings for the guns with hope of contracts for the other forgings," but the South Bethlehem Iron Works said, "No, we will not allow our bid to be considered unless you give us the chance now for the whole $4,000,000." So the Bethlehem Iron Works got it because they could underbid the other with their bid for $4,000,000, instead of $1,000,000, as limited to others. Now, they have the only plant in this country, and if you adopt the fortification bill as it came into the House you will establish a monopoly of that company, and the Government will be forced to meet all the demands of that monopoly.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to state the facts in relation to that bid?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, let us have the facts.

Mr. RYAN. Give us all the facts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield one minute, then, to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HERBERT. The fact was, the offer was made at the same time for armor and armor plates, and also for steel forgings for guns. The advertisement said preference would be given to persons bidding for both; and the Bethlehem Company did bid for both. There were three bidders beside which bid for the steel forgings for guns and made no bid for armor plates. When the bids had all been received, the Bethlehem company, according to the terms of their offer, claimed that they were entitled to the contract. That is the whole of it.

Mr. RYAN. That is true. The Bethlehem company put in a bid for each, one for armor and one for steel forgings.

Mr. HERBERT. They bid for both, and claimed that they were entitled to both or none.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I decline to yield further. So far as the actual amount involved is concerned, there is $1,000,000 difference between the fortifications bill, stripped of its extravagant and in my judgment unwise provisions and appropriations, and the Senate amendments on the Army bill. You will not recognize that fortifications bill after it comes back here if you defeat this action now. You will either defeat all possibility of making appropriations for the Army or else you will force the adoption of a fortification bill with a large increase of appropriations. If you want economy, if you want efficiency of service, my honest conviction is that the wisest course to pursue is to adopt this report and put at rest all further controversy over this question of fortifications and coast defenses. I now call for the previous question on the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the report.

The question was put, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us have a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 61.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not wish to raise the question of no quorum, but I ask for tellers so that there may be a further test upon the question.

Mr. BYNUM. Does it not require a vote of one-third of the House to order tellers?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers can be ordered by one-fifth of the vote.

Mr. BYNUM. It requires a third; and the Chair can only ascertain that by a count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. You can ask for a division.

Mr. BYNUM. It is not necessary to ask a division; but I say there must be a count.

The question was then put as to ordering tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after the count). Fifty gentlemen have risen, evidently a sufficient number for the ordering of tellers, and the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 38, noes 61.

Mr. TRACEY. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to say here that so far as I am concerned I deem the action of the House as a verdict of the House upon these amendments; and if I am on the conference committee again, I shall make that fact known, leaving the question entirely with the Senate to determine. I have done my utmost consistently with the interests of the country to secure this legislation, and shall accept the decision of the House upon these amendments. [Applause.]

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. TRACEY. I had raised the question of no quorum, and I desire to make an explanation here. I am strongly of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of this House is in favor of these amendments if we had a quorum, as a vote was taken some time ago which practically decided the question by a majority of thirty, but many gentlemen are away at present, and I would like the vote continued until a larger number of members can be procured.

Mr. BURNES, Mr. MCMILLIN, and others. You can get it on the report of a further conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum was not made in time.

Mr. TRACEY. I made the point of no quorum at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will accept the statement of the gentleman that the point of no quorum was made in time. Does the gentleman demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, my belief is that the desire of the House is that not so large a sum as $3,500,000 shall be appropriated for the purchase of steel forgings. I think that is evident from the fact that many gentlemen who had informed me of their intention to support the Army appropriation bill with a sum similar to the amount in the fortification bill have voted against the acceptance of this report. Now, with the opportunity and expectation that the matter may be regulated in a further conference, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. SAYERS. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendments 26, 27, 33, and 35, on House bill 10234, and that the House request the Senate to appoint a committee for further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURNES. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to submit a report from the special committee to investigate the Government Printing Office.

Mr. BURNES. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee after action on the motion I have made.

The morning hour was dispensed with.

ADMINISTRATION OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now desire to submit a report of the special committee on the investigation of the Government Printing Office, and wish to ask that the minority have a reasonable time in which to file their views.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that will be agreed to, and the report will be laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask that 5,000 copies of the report of the committee, with the views of the minority, be printed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does that include the testimony?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not include the testimony. That has already been ordered printed by the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to present from committees be permitted to file them with the Clerk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

HIGHWAY BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE CHAMPLAIN.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 54) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain which separates the islands of North Hero and South Hero, in the county of Grand Isle, in the State of Vermont; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11249) amendatory of an act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., approved February 3, 1887; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES OVER THE KENTUCKY RIVER.

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11215) to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville Southern Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

UNION GAS COMPANY.

Mr. PHELAN also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11216) to authorize the Union Gas Company to lay conduit pipes across the Ohio River; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. PHELAN also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1786) to regulate appointments under the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PAYNE, JAMES & CO.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 575) for the relief of Payne, James & Co.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COLLIN & ADAMS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11146) for the relief of Collin & Adams; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes. The pending question is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], on which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has the floor.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few considerations in respect to this question of order. It struck me last evening at the end of the discussion on the point of order that the real question involved in the point of order is, after all, nothing but a pure question of law, and in that light, and in the view I take of it as such, I will discuss the question. The House by its special order on the 19th of December conferred jurisdiction upon the Committee on Appropriations to insert this matter of the French spoliation claims into the deficiency bill and gave that committee ample power for that purpose. Subsequently, however—in fact but two days later—the House adopted a set of rules, one of which contains a subdivision which is in direct conflict with the previous order of December 19th made in respect to this matter. The subdivision of the rule to which I refer and call the attention of the House is subdivision 3 of Rule XXI, and reads as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such works and objects as are already in progress, etc.

And here I pause to remark, first, that there is no question that this deficiency bill is a general appropriation bill. That is an accepted verity. In the next place, it conceded as matter of fact and of law that the payment of these French spoliation claims is not an "expenditure previously authorized by law." In other words, leaving out of view the special order which was made on the 19th of December, this third clause of Rule XXI, which I have quoted, would fit the case exactly, and would necessarily by its own vigor eliminate these French spoliation claims from the deficiency bill.

We have, then, in this case a special act—I will use that expression—if you please—a special act made on the 19th of December conferring jurisdiction on the Committee on Appropriations to insert these claims in the deficiency appropriation bill; and then, two days afterwards, we have an express direction in these rules—in the subdivision cited—that nothing of that kind shall be inserted in any such bill. For be it observed, that if you apply this subdivision of the rule to the facts of the case, and leave out of the view the special order of the 19th of December, the subdivision of the rule would read as regards this matter: "No French spoliation claims, the same not being an expenditure previously authorized by law, shall be inserted in the deficiency bill or in any general appropriation bill."

First, then, we have an act—for I treat the order of the House and its rules as equivalent to a legislative act—first, then, we have an act, that of December 19, giving jurisdiction to the committee to insert these items, and then we have a subsequent act, to wit: a set of rules, one of which contains a provision totally inconsistent with the prior order and which in express terms forbids the insertion of these items. Now, what is the rule that governs courts of justice in such cases? For if we understand that rule, I apprehend it is the rule we ought to follow in this case, for it keeps us in a safe and beaten path, and this is of the utmost importance both because of the amount involved in this controversy and because of the importance of the question in its general aspects.

I will now bring the attention of the Chair and the committee directly to the law on this subject as I understand it. I read first from Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, page 46:

When two passages of an act are so repugnant as to be mutually destructive, the earlier passage gives way to the later, which is taken, as in a will, to speak the latest intention.

That, as you note, is true even where these conflicting provisions occur in the same act. So where the last section, or the last provision, of an act conflicts with the first or with any prior section or provision the later section or provision of the act operates to the extent of such conflict as a repeal of the prior section or provision. But our case does not go to this extent, for here we have two distinct acts, if I may use that expression.

Again, the same writer says, page 134:

When the later of the two enactments is couched in terms which are negative in form—

That is precisely the case here—"No appropriation shall be incorporated," etc.—

When the later of the two enactments is couched in terms which are negative in form or in effect it is difficult to avoid the inference that the earlier one is impliedly repealed by it. For instance, if an act exempts from the licensing regulations the sale of a certain kind of beer, and a subsequent one enacts that "no beer" shall be sold without a license it would obviously be impossible to save the former from the repeal implied in the later.

I next call attention to Sedgwick on Statutory and Constitutional Construction, page 104. I read:

But, on the other hand, it is equally well settled that a subsequent statute which is clearly repugnant to a prior one necessarily repeals the former, although it do not do so in terms; and even if the subsequent statute be not repugnant in all its provisions to a prior one, yet if the later statute was clearly intended to prescribe the only rule that should govern in the case provided for, it repeals the original act. Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. "Subsequent laws abrogate prior contrary laws," which is very bad English. [Laughter.]

Again:

It has been repeatedly declared that every statute is by implication a repeal of all prior statutes, so far as it is contrary and repugnant thereto, and that without any repealing clause.

To the same effect is Potter's Dwarris on the Construction of Statutes, page 154. Here is what the author says:

If a subsequent statute, contrary to a former act, have negative words, it shall be a repeal of the former act. Every affirmative statute is a repeal of a precedent affirmative statute, where its matter necessarily implies a negative; but only so far as it is clearly and indisputably contradictory and contrary to the former act "in the very matter."

I refer also to the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in Daviess vs. Fairborn, 3 Howard, in which that court goes even further than the authorities I have already cited:

There are cases, however, where, though the latter statute be not repugnant to a former one and no express provision in the latter repealing the former, if the latter prescribe the only rules which shall govern—

Which is the case here—

it repeals the former one in all those respects in which it differs from the latter as to the governing rule.

I read further from a note to Dwarris, on page 156:

A subsequent act making a different provision on the same subject—

Which is exactly the case here—is not to be construed as an explanatory act, but an implied repeal of the former, if the latter act be incompatible with the former.

I will now call your attention to the case of the Columbian Manufacturing Company vs. Vanderpool, 4 Cowen, 556, a case directly in point. I will read the syllabus, and then make a brief statement of the case:

The real and personal estate of manufacturing companies are, by the act for the assessment and collection of taxes passed April 23, 1823 (sess. 46, ch. 262, s. 14), rendered subject to taxation; and that act virtually repeals the act for the encouragement of manufactures within this State, passed February 28, 1817 (sess. 40, ch. 64).

The facts of the case were these: In 1817 the Legislature of New York passed an act exempting the buildings, machinery, and the manufactured articles of certain manufacturing companies from taxation, for the purpose, I presume, of aiding such corporations to start in business. Subsequently, in 1883, the Legislature passed a general tax law containing no express words of repeal of the act of 1817, but making the real and personal property of all manufacturing companies subject to taxation. The court, in commenting on the act of 1823, says:

The fourteenth section provides that all incorporated companies receiving a regular income, etc., shall be considered persons within the meaning of the act, and assessments shall be made and taxes imposed and levied upon them and collected in the same manner as upon individuals; and that the cashiers of banks, secretaries of insurance companies, and secretaries or treasurers of all manufacturing companies shall make and deliver to the assessors, etc., a list containing the real estate occupied by such company, if any, and the amount of capital actually paid in (except, etc.), and the assessors shall insert in their assessment-roll, opposite to the name of such company, the amount of such real and personal property.

Then the court goes on and comments in this language:

The language of the fourteenth section is as broad and comprehensive as it is capable of being made, and in terms renders the real and personal estate of all manufacturing companies subject to taxation. Does it not, then, in relation to the act of February 28, 1817, fall within the general principle that leges posteriores, priores contrarias abrogant?

The one declares that all the buildings, machinery, etc., of every cotton, woolen, and linen manufactory shall be exempted from taxation; the other, that the assessments shall be made and taxes imposed, levied, and collected upon all incorporated companies, etc., as upon individuals; that the secretaries or treasurers of all manufacturing companies shall deliver a list of the real estate occupied by such company, and the amount of capital actually paid in, to the assessors, who shall insert it in their assessment roll, etc.; and that the secretary or treasurer shall pay the tax imposed upon such company.

Two statutes more directly repugnant to each other could not well be penned. Though the language of the later statute is not couched in negative terms—

Mark this language—

Though the language of the later statute is not couched in negative terms—

As is the case with the third clause of Rule XXI—yet it appears to me necessarily to imply a negative, and virtually to repeal the former.

I will call attention to one other case, and then stop. I refer to the case of Moore vs. Westervelt, 3 Sandford, 762. Before the adoption of the Code of Procedure of the State of New York, with which all lawyers are familiar, there was an old statute providing that if a public officer was sued for anything in connection with the duties of his office and he obtained judgment against the plaintiff in such suits, he should be entitled to double costs. Afterward the Code of Procedure was adopted, and without repealing the former act giving double costs, prescribed among other things the costs to which the prevailing party in a suit would be entitled. The court, in the case I have cited, held that the adoption of this code making provision for the recovery of costs by the prevailing party, and specifying what those costs should be, operated as an implied repeal of the former act giving double costs. I beg leave to quote a definition contained in this decision as to what constitutes a "repugnant and inconsistent" act which goes further than is necessary to go in the present case, but which is so apt and brief that I will read it:

A prior law is inconsistent with a subsequent when, if suffered to remain in force, it would defeat or frustrate in any degree the object and intent of the latter; and this it may do, even when the terms of the laws are perfectly consistent and imply no contradiction that would prevent the provisions in both from being carried into effect.

What can be stronger, clearer, and more to the point than that? Mr. Chairman, nothing can be clearer than that the special order adopted December 19, directing the Committee on Appropriations to insert these French spoliation claims in the deficiency bill, is repugnant to and inconsistent with the rules of the House as adopted two days subsequently. If you shut your eyes to that special and prior order of the House, leave it out of sight altogether, it must be apparent and clear to everyone, that under the third subdivision of Rule XXI, it would be utterly irregular and unlawful to insert these items—these French spoliation claims—in the deficiency bill. Under that third subdivision these claims could find no home or resting place in that bill.

And is not that the true test of repugnancy and incompatibility? If under that third subdivision of the rule standing alone, without the prior order of December 19, these French spoliation claims could not be inserted in this general deficiency bill, then evidently it requires no argument more than to state the case to show the repugnancy to and inconsistency with the prior rule.

It follows, then, Mr. Chairman, it follows to my mind, at least, from a judical standpoint, and in accordance with the authorities cited, that the adoption of our rules on December 21 operated in law and fact, under the judicial constructions with which we are familiar and to which I have briefly directed your attention, as a repeal of the former special rule, and that we are now acting, so far as these spoliation claims are concerned, under subdivision 3, of Rule XXI, and that the special order of the 19th of December is repealed and obsolete.

There are other of our rules, Mr. Chairman, which perhaps have a bearing on this question; but I believe in going right to the root of the matter, and I put this question in its true legal basis, as a court of law would put it in construing repugnant and inconsistent statutes. And I think that right here and on this occasion, owing to the importance of the subject, we ought to be governed by the same rules of law, and the same principles of construction which hold and are good in courts of justice. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I think these French spoliation claims have no place in this deficiency bill. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, permit me again to call your attention to Rule XXVIII—I called your attention to it before we adjourned—and to notice that the two words "order" and "rule" occurred—"that no order or rule shall be altered without one day's notice," etc. Rule XXVIII makes a distinction between "rules" and "orders." The Committee on Rules have to consider the rules of the House. They have nothing to do with an order which has been made by the House. The two words are distinct. An order of the House controls the Committee on Rules, as it does every other individual member of the House. In its capacity as the Committee on Rules it has nothing to do with an order of the House, I do not care whether made the day before the rules were reported or on the first day of the session. There is the distinction, and that rule has prevailed so long as I have known anything about the House of Representatives. The Committee on Rules are not asked or requested or in any way obliged to interfere with any order made by this House. That order is directed to the Committee on Rules just as it is to other members of the House until rescinded in a formal manner.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the committee long, but simply wish to remark in reply to the points which have been raised. There is, I conceive, one very important distinction between the precedents which have been cited in relation to statutes and the precedent which is now before this House. Even in the case of statutes, Mr. Chairman, as distinguished a jurist as Lord Kenyon has said:

It can not be contended that a subsequent act of Parliament will not control the provisions of a prior statute, if it were intended to have that operation; but there are several cases in the books to show that where the intention of the legislature was apparent that the subsequent acts should not have such an operation, then, even though the words of such statute, taken strictly and grammatically, would repeal the former act, the courts of law judging for the benefit of subject, have held that they ought not to receive such a construction. [Sedgwick on Statutory and Constitutional Law, page 124.]

Now, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the distinction to which I allude. In the construction of statutes of courts of justice they are construing the action of bodies foreign to themselves; but even in such cases, as Lord Kenyon has ruled, where the intention of the legislature is apparent that the subsequent acts, strictly and grammatically, have repealed the former act, the courts of law have held they ought not to receive such a construction.

But here we are, the very body that passed both the order and the rule. We are here, and we know what we intended. We know that we deliberately, by a vote of the majority of this House, 163 out of 325 of its members, made a solemn order that our Committee on Appropriations should do a certain thing. We know that when we did that we were already in the act of organizing, and had made arrangements to get our general rules for adoption, and that the very day on which the rules were adopted was a matter of little purpose in this connection. It was a contemporaneous act with the adoption of the rules themselves. We had taken the initial steps for the adoption of the rules; two days before that this order was passed, and the day we adopted the rules we adopted a provision in the rule which excepted expressly such orders as had been made.

We adopted it in a clause in a resolution in which the rule was not read. It was adopted with the whole code of rules. You, Mr. Chairman, and I and the rest of us know that this never entered—this particular item of the special rules that govern the Appropriations Committee—never entered into the intention in which we adopted a sweeping set of rules, that the rules of the last Congress should govern us except in certain particulars. The only thing in which the House could actually make its intention perfectly clear was in the changes in the body of the rules which it adopted. This was a body recently assembled. A large number of its members, if not a majority of them, were not present in the Forty-ninth Congress. Can it be said that there was an intention to repeal the purpose of the rule to which I have heretofore called attention, in the mode of the adoption of the general rules?

I hold as a matter of fact that we know what the intention was. We know that it was not the intention to repeal that order of the House. It was not contemplated when the rules were passed that such was the intention, and even if the Chair should construe it that the words "The rules of the House shall be the rules unless otherwise ordered" do not except from their operation orders of the House, yet you have the fact of the manifest intention of which we are able to judge on the part of the House when it adopted the rules, and that that manifest intention should prevail in this case.

Mr. YOST proceeded to address the committee.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The gentleman from Virginia is not addressing himself to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a suggestion. It is impossible, of course, for anybody to tell what bearing the speech of the gentleman from Virginia may have on the point of order until he progresses a little further; but I would be very glad if the gentleman from Missouri would waive his point and let the gentleman have a few minutes longer.

Mr. YOST. I shall not consume more than ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The pending question is the point of order as to whether or not the French spoliation claims, reported by the Committee on Appropriations in the general deficiency bill, are properly a part of that bill. The gentleman from Virginia is addressing himself to the Blair educational bill. I have no objection to his printing his speech, but I insist on the objection.

Mr. CANNON. A word, Mr. Chairman. I have listened with great care to the arguments made to the Chair touching the point of order. I have heard gentlemen argue the question of the amount of money that was involved in the claims, and all that kind of thing, as well as the history of claims themselves. I think, on the whole, I have heard some arguments during the course of this discussion at a little further distance from the point of order than that of the gentleman from Virginia, if anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman should not address himself to the subject, that seems to be contemplated in his remarks up to this time, at a moment when the committee is engaged in considering a question of order on a provision in an appropriation bill. The Chair has no doubt that the committee would indulge the gentleman later on and enable him to complete the remarks that he has commenced. But the Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have fifteen minutes to proceed now.

Mr. BURNES. If my friend from Virginia will yield a moment, I will make this suggestion: There will be further opportunity during the consideration of this bill for discussion, and I am satisfied the gentleman can have the reasonable time he asks at another time, but not now.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask unanimous consent after the point of order is disposed of that the gentleman may have fifteen minutes.

Mr. GEAR. He may as well have it now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard briefly on the point of order. I understand the practice to be that the rules of one House or one Congress are the rules of another House or another Congress until new rules are made. We find, sir, by an examination of the rules now prevailing that Rule XXI, that has been under discussion here, was a rule of the Forty-ninth Congress. The same clause which is claimed would allow the Chair to strike these spoliation claims from the bill on this point of order was a clause in the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress; and until the rules of the Fiftieth Congress were made the rules of this House——

Mr. BLAND. Let me interrupt the gentleman right there to ask if he pretends that one House can fix rules to bind another—that the Forty-ninth Congress can fix a rule binding the Fiftieth?

Mr. NUTTING. I undertake to say that the Speaker of this House has decided that the rules of the former Congress are the rules of this Congress until rules have been adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I say the gentleman can not produce any authority of that kind.

Mr. NUTTING. The Fiftieth Congress passed a resolution that the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress were the rules of the Fiftieth Congress until rules were adopted. At least that is what I am informed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Until that is done they are not the rules.

Mr. NUTTING. But that had been done at the time the order of December 19 was made, and the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress were in operation in this House on the 19th day of December. If that be true, and it is true, then this third clause of Rule XXI was in operation when the resolution of December 19 was passed. That being the case, the Chair must see and must hold that the order of the 19th of December was made with the very object to do away with the effect of clause 3 of Rule XXI. Now, if the House, in deliberate action, passed the special rule of December 19, to do away with the clause which is now claimed to be in the way, I think it is important for us to look very carefully before it is decided, that two days afterwards, when the rules were adopted and when the House simply adopted a rule which had been in force, it intended to abrogate the order of the 19th of December.

If you can, by looking into the intention of the makers of the law, hold that the two statutes are compatible with each other, then you must do it and let both stand. Mr. Chairman, let me go further. Here was clause 3, Rule XXI, in force at the very time the order of December 19 was made by the House for the purpose of giving this committee jurisdiction of this matter, notwithstanding clause 3, Rule XXI. Now, you must see that the order of the 19th of December was passed with the very view of doing away with this clause, which they claim is in force now, and which is claimed to be so dangerous to the spoliation claims in this bill, and upon which this point of order must be held good if at all.

Now, the House of Representatives, by this order of 19th of December, gave this committee authority and made it a duty that it put these spoliation claims in this very bill which is now in the House and report them to the House for its action.

Gentlemen have argued that that made no difference, because it did not appropriate money. Why, how poor that argument is! What was it made by the House for? What did the House order these spoliation claims put in the bill for? They had them put in the bill that they might come into the House for consideration and appropriations be made to pay them if the House thought best.

Will the Chair say by his decision that two days after the House had by special order given jurisdiction to the committee that it decided it would pass this rule so as to do away with the special order? Was it the intention of the Committee on Rules, and the House when they adopted the rules which the Committee on Rules reported, to do away with the order of the 19th of December? You must say that it was not. And when you say that, then this point of order is of no value.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. NUTTING. Now, one thing further in order to sustain my position. The chairman of the Committee on Rules is the Speaker of this House, and no one will question his being a parliamentarian. Immediately after these rules were adopted by the House he treated and continued to treat this subject as if the order of the 19th of December was in force. He did not believe that clause 3 of Rule XXI had abrogated the order of the 19th of December. If he had then, Mr. Chairman, he would not have referred to this committee the French spoliation claims as they came in. It will not do for you to say, nor will it do for this House to say that the Speaker of the House, in making these references, did not recollect that the rules being adopted the order was abrogated. It will not do for this House to say that it made a special order, and two days afterwards by an act, such as adopting the rules, annulled it. That would be to stultify its own action. That would be boy's play.

A special act or law is not abrogated by a subsequent general act or law, unless the special act or law is mentioned or intelligently referred to in the subsequent act or law.

Here we have a special act passed by the House, in this order of December 19. Clause 3 of Rule XXI does not in any way refer to that order. Rule XXI and clause 3 of that rule is precisely the same that it had been for many Congresses past.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The House of Representatives on the 19th of December last passed a resolution to the effect that the reports of the Court of Claims under the act of Congress in reference to French spoliation claims should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, when appointed, with instructions to report back "such claims as have been favorably decided, in the general deficiency bill." On the 21st day of December the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], from the Committee on Rules, submitted a report, which was to the effect that the committee recommended the adoption of the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress until the further order of the House, with certain changes which were therein set forth.

Among the changes was one amending clause 4 of Rule XXI so as to provide that bills of a private nature should be delivered to the Clerk, as in the case of memorials and petitions, and referred to appropriate committees. There was also a change in clauses 1 and 2 of Rule XXII, which were amended so as to provide that bills of a private nature should be delivered to the Clerk and indorsed with their names, and referred to appropriate committees, and it was expressly provided that if such bills should be improperly referred such erroneous reference should not give jurisdiction to the committee to which they might have been erroneously sent. This was the substance of the report of the committee, with some additional rules not necessary to be mentioned in this connection.

The rules were adopted on that day, namely, December 21. The rules of the Forty-ninth Congress contained, as has been stated in argument, clause 3 of Rule XXI, which is to the effect that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

That rule also provides, clause 5, that—

No bill for the payment or adjudication of any private claim against the Government shall be referred, except by unanimous consent, to any other than the following-named committees, namely: To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Pensions, to the Committee on Claims, to the Committee on War Claims, to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and to the Committee on Accounts.

These provisions were in the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress, as well as the provisions contained in clause 3 and clauses 30 and 31 of Rule XI, which define the jurisdiction of the respective committees that might have jurisdiction of this subject.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] makes the point of order that the rules of the House of Representatives, as adopted on the 21st of December, are in conflict with the special order or rule of the House, adopted on the 19th of December, in regard to the French spoliation claims. Gentlemen have referred in argument, especially the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE], to the fact that the findings of the Court of Claims in the French spoliation cases were referred by law to this House "for final action." Such "final action," when those reports reach the House, must be taken in accordance with the rules of the House, and when the House proceeds to take action upon them that action must be taken under the rules as they exist at the time.

What, then, are the rules of the House of Representatives at this time? Do they embrace the special rule adopted on the 19th of December, as well as the code of rules adopted on the 21st day of that month? The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in front of the Chair [Mr. O'NEILL], has called attention to Rule XXVIII, requiring that one day's notice shall be given of any proposed change or suspension of a rule. The gentleman will observe that that rule was adopted on the 21st day of December, and relates to the rules then adopted. It was not adopted on the 19th, and therefore it has no reference to the rule adopted on that day, which was adopted without qualification, and subject to any future action of the House.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The same rule, word for word, is to be found in all the books of rules going back through many Congresses.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The Chair understands. It has been adopted by Congress after Congress. But that rule, adopted by this Congress on the 21st day of December, requiring a day's notice of any proposed change or suspension of a rule, did not have a retroactive effect, so as to apply to a rule adopted on the 19th day of December.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING] referred to the fact that there had been some decision of the Speaker to the effect that by the very terms of the forty-fifth rule of the House the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress were the rules of this Congress until they were changed. The Speaker of the House has held, and other Speakers have frequently held, that under the Constitution of the United States, Article I, section 5, clause 2, each House may determine the rules for its own government, and that no House of Representatives could bind a future House in regard to its rules. And, in harmony with that view, the Speaker of this House has held on several occasions that there were no rules of this House until they were adopted by it.

The question, then, before the Chair is, as stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], whether the rules adopted on the 21st of December are inconsistent with and repugnant to the special rule adopted on the 19th of December. If there is such repugnance, then, according to the authorities cited by the gentleman from Minnesota and other authorities, to which the Chair will refer, such repugnance will destroy the former rule and leave the subsequent rules only in force.

The maxim of the law cited by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and universally recognized is to the effect that prior laws are abrogated by subsequent laws which are contrary to them—leges posteriores, priores contrarias abrogant. Gentlemen will observe by referring to one of the authorities cited in Potter's Dwarris on Construction of Statutes (page 154, note) that this same rule of construction is maintained in the Code Napoleon as to statutes of the French nation. In the same work (Potter's Dwarris, pages 144–5, note) will be found numerous citations to American authorities, all of which are to the same effect.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] cited yesterday a leading case (Cass vs. Dillon, 2 Ohio, 607), in which the opinion of the supreme court of Ohio was delivered by Judge Thurman when a member of that court. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the syllabus of that case it is stated:

> It follows that all laws in force when the latter took effect, and which were not inconsistent with it, would have remained in force without an express provision to that effect, and all inconsistent laws fell simply because they were inconsistent; in other words, all repugnant laws were repealed by implication.

This was the decision of the court pronounced by Judge Thurman. And, further:

> The repugnancy which must cause the law to fall must be necessary and obvious. If by any fair course of reasoning the law and the constitution can be reconciled, the law must stand.

In the case decided by the Ohio supreme court contention was as to whether a special law of the Legislature had been repealed by implication by the adoption of a new constitution. The court held that the two were not repugnant; but had there been repugnancy, the court was unanimously of the opinion that the prior special act would have been repealed.

Following the lines of this decision, if the two provisions now in question can be construed together so as to give both effect they must both stand. But in this case now presented to the Chair there seems to be a positive repugnance between the resolution adopted by the House on the 19th of December and the third clause of Rule XXI, which prohibits on a general appropriation bill any appropriation for an expenditure not previously authorized by law.

In the case in 2 Ohio Reports there was a dissenting opinion by Judge Ranney, which held that there was a repugnancy in the provisions in question; and that learned judge held even more pointedly to the effect that repugnant provisions of subsequent laws repealed prior statutes. The Chair has been unable to find a decision or a text-book which lays down a different doctrine. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has cited in argument several authorities which seem to the Chair conclusive on this point, and he invites members of the committee to give them a careful consideration.

From the examination which the Chair has been able to make in the brief time permitted, it seems that the rule is universally established in all courts of law that subsequent statutes which are inconsistent with prior statutes repeal such prior statutes by implication. If there is a repugnancy between the two, the former statute falls.

The Chair is therefore of opinion that the rules of the House, and especially clause 3 of Rule XXI, are utterly inconsistent with and repugnant to the special order of the House adopted on the 19th of December, and that the order adopted on that day was by implication repealed, and is no longer operative in this House or upon this committee.

The gentleman from New York has cited the fact that the Speaker of the House has continually referred these reports to the Committee on Appropriations, and it has also been urged that the Committee on Appropriations has reported these items in the bill. That is very true. It was the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to report this provision. It was not in the power of that committee to raise a question of jurisdiction with the House of Representatives. The Speaker, performing a perfunctory duty, had sent these claims to that committee. But if the claims had gone to the committee even by a resolution of the House, if subsequently to the 21st of December the House, by a vote of yeas and nays, had referred these reports to the Committee on Appropriations without instructions, the committee under clause 3 of Rule XXI, could not report these items in a general appropriation bill, but would be simply authorized to report them as other committees report bills of a private nature, which, when reported, take their places upon the Private Calendar.

If these reports had gone to the Committee on Appropriations by the direct action of the House, that committee, under the rules and practice of the House, could only report them back as other committees report back private bills. If, after December 21, under the suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote or by unanimous consent, the House had passed the resolution of December 19, such subsequent action would have repealed pro tanto the rules of the House and such claims would now be in order on this bill.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] made an additional point: that the resolution of December 19 of itself did not authorize the committee to report appropriations to pay these claims, but simply to report them back to the House. If there were no other question raised here, that would be a very important point for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole and the Chair. But as the other matter which has been cited is of so controlling a nature, the Chair is of opinion that one good reason is sufficient; and that is found in the perfect and complete inconsistency between the resolution adopted on 19th of December and the rules of the House as adopted on the 21st of December. Therefore, for the reasons stated, the Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] as to each of the items or paragraphs in section 4 of the bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as that order of the House of December 19 was adopted by a recorded vote of a quorum of the House in its favor; inasmuch as even in statutory proceedings it has become a maxim that repeals by implication are not favored; inasmuch as the Speaker of this House has, under the instruction of that order, referred these matters to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee, composed of able parliamentarians, has obeyed that instruction, notwithstanding the general terms of the rules of the House adopted December 21; inasmuch as, whatever technicalities may be interposed——

Mr. BLAND. I raise a question of order.

Mr. DIBBLE. I am about to state the reasons for my action. I am in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; there is nothing before the House.

Mr. DIBBLE. I propose to appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I am stating the reasons.

Mr. BLAND. That is what I supposed, and I submit that an appeal is not debatable.

Mr. DIBBLE. It is debatable; the gentleman is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. DIBBLE. Inasmuch——

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I rise to a question of order. Is an appeal debatable before it is taken? [Laughter.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I have stated my purpose to take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. DIBBLE. Inasmuch, Mr. Chairman, as this is a very important matter in regard to precedent—a matter of much larger proportions than the special items under consideration, for it involves the question whether, when the House has deliberately made an order and that order has been acted on time after time and day after day, as the subject-matter arose, the general provisions of the rules are to supersede such an order so deliberately made; and in fine, Mr. Chairman, as we are the very body that made the order, as we are the ones who can best decide whether we intended as a matter of fact on the 21st of December to repeal our deliberate action of two days before and become, as the poet has said,

> Variable as the shade
> By the light, quivering aspen made, in order to relieve the Chairman of heavy responsibility in a matter which concerns us, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? Is the committee ready for the question? [Cries of "Vote!"]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 55.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. BURNES were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 60.

Mr. DIBBLE. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. HALL. I am paired with Mr. SHAW, of Maryland, and have only voted to make a quorum.

Mr. DIBBLE. I understand an important message from the Executive is here, and I ask by unanimous consent that the committee informally rise for the purpose of receiving it.

There was no objection.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the deficiency appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was delivered to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Congress:

The rejection by the Senate of the treaty lately negotiated for the settlement and adjustment of the differences existing between the United States and Great Britain concerning the rights and privileges of American fishermen in the ports and waters of British North America, seems to justify a survey of the condition to which the pending question is thus remitted.

The treaty upon this subject concluded in 1818, through disagreements as to the meaning of its terms, has been a fruitful source of irritation and trouble. Our citizens engaged in fishing enterprises in waters adjacent to Canada have been subjected to numerous vexatious interferences and annoyances; their vessels have been seized upon pretexts which appeared to be entirely inadmissible, and they have been otherwise treated by the Canadian authorities and officials in a manner inexcusably harsh and oppressive.

This conduct has been justified by Great Britain and Canada, by the claim that the treaty of 1818 permitted it, and upon the ground that it was necessary to the proper protection of Canadian interests. We deny that treaty agreements justify these acts, and we further maintain that, aside from any treaty restraints, of disputed interpretation, the relative positions of the United States and Canada as near neighbors, the growth of our joint commerce, the development and prosperity of both countries, which amicable relations surely guaranty, and above all, the liberality always extended by the United States to the people of Canada, furnish motives for kindness and consideration higher and better than treaty covenants.

While keenly sensitive to all that was exasperating in the condition, and by no means indisposed to support the just complaints of our injured citizens, I still deemed it my duty for the preservation of important American interests, which were directly involved, and in view of all the details of the situation, to attempt by negotiation to remedy existing wrongs and to finally terminate by a fair and just treaty these ever-recurring causes of difficulty.

I fully believe that the treaty just rejected by the Senate was well suited to the exigency, and that its provisions were adequate for our security in the future from vexatious incidents and for the promotion of friendly neighborhood and intimacy, without sacrificing in the least our national pride or dignity.

I am quite conscious that neither my opinion of the value of the rejected treaty nor the motives which prompted its negotiation are of importance in the light of the judgment of the Senate thereupon. But it is of importance to note that this treaty has been rejected without any apparent disposition on the part of the Senate to alter or amend its provisions, and with the evident intention, not wanting expression, that no negotiation should at present be concluded touching the matter at issue.

The co-operation necessary for the adjustment of the long standing national differences with which we have to deal, by methods of conference and agreement, having thus been declined, I am by no means disposed to abandon the interests and the rights of our people in the premises or to neglect their grievances, and I therefore turn to the contemplation of a plan of retaliation as a mode, which still remains, of treating the situation.

I am not unmindful of the gravity of the responsibility assumed in adopting this line of conduct, nor do I fail in the least to appreciate its serious consequences. It will be impossible to injure our Canadian neighbors by retaliatory measures without inflicting some damage upon our own citizens. This results from our proximity, our community of interests, and the inevitable commingling of the business enterprises which have been developed by mutual activity.

Plainly stated, the policy of national retaliation manifestly embraces the infliction of the greatest harm upon those who have injured us, with the least possible damage to ourselves. There is also an evident propriety as well as an invitation to moral support, found in visiting upon the offending party the same measure or kind of treatment of which we complain, and as far as possible within the same lines. And above all things the plan of retaliation if entered upon should be thorough and vigorous.

These considerations lead me at this time to invoke the aid and counsel of the Congress and its support in such a further grant of power as seems to me necessary and desirable to render effective the policy I have indicated.

The Congress has already passed a law, which received Executive assent on the 3d day of March, 1887, providing that in case American fishing vessels being or visiting in the waters or at any of the ports of the British dominions of North America, should be or lately had been deprived of the rights to which they were entitled by treaty or law, or if they were denied certain other privileges therein specified, or vexed and harassed in the enjoyment of the same, the President might deny to vessels and their masters and crews of the British dominions of North America any entrance into the waters, ports, or harbors of the United States, and also deny entry into any port or place of the United States of any product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States.

While I shall not hesitate upon proper occasion to enforce this act, it would seem to be unnecessary to suggest that if such enforcement is limited in such a manner as shall result in the least possible injury to our own people, the effect would probably be entirely inadequate to the accomplishment of the purpose desired.

I deem it my duty therefore to call the attention of the Congress to certain particulars in the action of the authorities of the Dominion of Canada, in addition to the general allegations already made, which appear to be in such marked contrast to the liberal and friendly disposition of our country as in my opinion to call for such legislation as will, upon the principles already stated, properly supplement the power to inaugurate retaliation already vested in the Executive.

Actuated by the generous and neighborly spirit which has characterized our legislation, our tariff laws have, since 1866, been so far waived in favor of Canada as to allow free of duty the transit across the territory of the United States, of property arriving at our ports and destined to Canada, or exported from Canada to other foreign countries.

When the treaty of Washington was negotiated in 1871, between the United States and Great Britain, having for its object very largely the modification of the treaty of 1818, the privileges above referred to were made reciprocal and given in return by Canada to the United States, in the following language, contained in the twenty-ninth article of said treaty:

"It is agreed, that for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this treaty, goods, wares or merchandise arriving at the ports of New York, Boston, and Portland, and any other ports in the United States, which have been or may from time to time be specially designated by the President of the United States, and destined for Her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North America, may be entered at the proper custom-house and conveyed in transit, without the payment of duties, through the territory of the United States, under such rules, regulations, and conditions for the protection of the revenue, as the Government of the United States may from time to time prescribe; and under like rules, regulations, and conditions, goods, wares or merchandise may be conveyed in transit without the payment of duties from such possessions through the territory of the United States, for export from the said ports of the United States.

"It is further agreed that, for the like period, goods, wares, or merchandise arriving at any of the ports of Her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North America, and destined for the United States, may be entered at the proper custom-house and conveyed in transit, without the payment of duties, through the said possessions under such rules, and regulations, and conditions for the protection of the revenue as the governments of the said possessions may from time to time prescribe; and under like rules, and regulations, and conditions goods, wares, or merchandise may be conveyed in transit, without payment of duties, from the United States through the said possessions to other places in the United States, or for export from ports in the said possessions."

In the year 1886 notice was received by the representatives of our Government that our fishermen would no longer be allowed to ship their fish in bond and free of duty through Canadian territory to this country, and ever since that time such shipment has been denied.

The privilege of such shipment which had been extended to our fishermen was a most important one, allowing them to spend the time upon the fishing grounds, which would otherwise be devoted to a voyage home with their catch, and doubling their opportunities for profitably prosecuting their vocation. In forbidding the transit of the catch of our fishermen over their territory in bond and free of duty the Canadian authorities deprived us of the only facility dependent upon their concession, and for which we could supply no substitute.

The value to the Dominion of Canada of the privilege of transit for their exports and imports across our territory and to and from our ports, though great in every aspect, will be better appreciated when it is remembered that for a considerable portion of each year the St. Lawrence River, which constitutes the direct avenue of foreign commerce leading to Canada, is closed by ice.

During the last six years the imports and exports of British Canadian provinces carried across our territory, under the privileges granted by our laws, amounted in value to about $270,000,000, nearly all of which were goods dutiable under our tariff laws, by far the larger part of this traffic consisting of exchanges of goods between Great Britain and her American provinces brought to and carried from our ports in their own vessels.

The treaty stipulation entered into by our Government was in harmony with laws which were then on our statute-book, and are still in force.

I recommend immediate legislative action conferring upon the Executive the power to suspend by proclamation the operation of all laws and regulations permitting the transit of goods, wares, and merchandise in bond across or over the territory of the United States to or from Canada.

There need be no hesitation in suspending these laws arising from the supposition that their continuation is secured by treaty obligations, for it seems quite plain that Article XXIX of the treaty of 1871, which was the only article incorporating such laws, terminated the 1st day of July, 1885.

The article itself declares that its provisions shall be in force "for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this treaty." Turning to Article XXXIII we find no mention of the twenty-ninth article, but only a provision that Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article XXX shall take effect as soon as the laws required to carry them into operation shall be passed by the legislative bodies of the different countries concerned, and that "they shall remain in force for the period of ten years from the date at which they may come into operation, and further until the expiration of two years after either of the high contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its wish to terminate the same."

I am of the opinion that the "term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII," referred to in Article XXIX as the limit of its duration, means the period during which Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article XXX, commonly called the "fishery articles," should continue in force under the language of said Article XXXIII.
